VOLUME XXVIII, PART VI.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

get up here to-night like a man, amidst the groans and hisses of members of his own party, and advocate what he knew was right.

I want to say to his credit that he stood here every Friday night since Congress met in the interests of the soldiers, especially the old soldiers, the privates, when perhaps all those who are up here to-night, who are speaking in the interests of widows of officers, were in bed asleep, or at some game of cards, or something of that sort.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBERT. My friend, I do not want you to get hurt again. I saw you with your arm in a sling the other day. [Great laughter.] I want to say to you, gentlemen, you should hang your heads in shame when you come up here from this side and that side and cross fire upon the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota, whose loyalty to the old soldier can not be questioned.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBERT (continuing). You have proved yourselves many and many of you to be hypocrites in the true sense of the word, because enough of you could not be found here the other night to help him carry on business in the interest of the old soldier.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Why, certainly. You know there are certain people that can ask questions that others can not answer. I will not promise to answer. [Great laughter.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman be kind enough to strike out of the RECORD the remarks he made about the gentleman from South Dakota the other evening attempting to pension bounty jumpers and camp followers?

Mr. TALBERT. I did take it out. [Laughter.] The gentleman from South Dakota has shown courage in standing here in the interests of the common soldier. Now, I am going to try you again and give you a chance to redeem yourself from this condition into which you have put yourselves. I hope the amendment to strike out the words "seventy-five" and insert "sixty" will prevail.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to detain the committee only a single moment, and in that moment I wish to say that I have a good opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I believe he is a just and patriotic man. I believe he has stood upon this floor for the old soldier in the four Congresses of which I have been a member in season and out of season, and that no man loves the old soldier better or will do more for him than that gentleman. And I also want to say, Mr. Chairman, that he has undertaken and is endeavoring to carry out an impossible task. I believe that this whole business is wrong. I believe that this whole class of legislation should be covered by general legislation, and for that reason, during the four terms that I have been in Congress, I have scarcely introduced a bill of this character.

Now, tell me what justice there is in giving a soldier or a soldier's widow $30, $40, $50, or $75 a month when beside him or her, in the next house, lives a soldier or a soldier's widow, equally, and perhaps more deserving, who is only receiving $8, $10, or $12? I say that this whole business is wrong. The tendency is to make the great mass of the pensioners of the country dissatisfied with the pensions they are receiving, and members of Congress, instead of presenting these special cases for legislation which are downright favoritism and injustice, should abolish this system and discourage this class of legislation. Now, somebody says that there are a class of cases that can not be reached by general law. There may be, and there are a few such cases, but I hope to live to see the time when these cases will be decided by some commission, court, or tribunal, and when this outrageous class legislation and favoritism will be taken away from the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MILES. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. MILES. Were you in favor of granting a pension to the widow of General Cogswell at $75 a month?

Mr. MORSE. I will say in answer to the gentleman that since that policy had met with approval here, as she was a Massachusetts woman, I had no hesitation in voting that pension to her.

Mr. MILES. I thank the gentleman for his candor.

Mr. MORSE. I want to say that if there ever was a soldier in the Union Army, a brave man, a patriotic man, whose widow deserved a pension, that woman is the widow of my colleague, Gen. William Cogswell, of Massachusetts.

Mr. MILES. It is just the same with the widow of Gen. Tom Ewing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CARRIE L. GREIG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2962) granting a pension to Carrie L. Greig, widow of Theodore Greig, brevet major of volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carrie L. Greig, widow of the late Theodore W. Greig, brevet major of volunteers, and pay her a pension of $30 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. MCCLELLAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2962) granting a pension of $30 per month to Carrie L. Greig, widow of Theodore W. Greig, late brevet major of volunteers, having considered the facts and circumstances in evidence, respectfully report as follows:

Theodore W. Greig enlisted as private, Company A, Sixty-first New York Infantry Volunteers, August 25, 1861; promoted to sergeant-major September 21, 1861; commissioned second lieutenant, to date from July 1, 1862, and transferred to Company C; commissioned first lieutenant November 17, 1862, with rank from June 26, 1862; mustered in to date July 2, 1862; transferred to Company E February 8, 1863, to accept promotion as captain; commissioned as captain March 31, 1863, with rank from September 17, 1862, and mustered in to date September 17, 1862, and mustered out October 9, 1864. He was brevetted major United States Volunteers May 20, 1867, for gallant and meritorious service in late war.

In the battle of Antietam, Md., September 17, 1862, while the battle was at its height, the Fourth Alabama Confederate Regiment stuck its battle flag in the ground, a little in advance, as a dare for anyone to capture it. Major Greig, then lieutenant, rushed forward and captured it. He was shot in the neck, but held onto the flag and returned with it to his company.

Claimant was married to soldier November 11, 1884; soldier died November 17, 1893. Claimant filed application for pension under act of June 27, 1890, which was rejected on the ground that "claimant is not without other means of support than her daily labor."

The testimony shows that applicant has $500 worth of furniture; has an income of $66 annually from a mortgage and $75 annually from $1,500 received from her husband's life insurance.

Testimony also shows that soldier's death was due to chronic nephritis.

From all the facts and circumstances presented your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

RICHARD P. PILKINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5711) granting a pension to Richard P. Pilkington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Richard P. Pilkington, late captain of Company E, Seventy-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. ERDMAN. Gentlemen on the other side really do not know how many good things they are missing by not having these reports read. They do not know how much they might be instructed and edified. Why, sir, this report shows that in 1880 this man, by reason of a premature explosion, lost his fingers and became blind; and this report really determines that a premature explosion fifteen years after the close of the war is a misfortune of service origin. It further determines that because 50 of the man's neighbors ask that you grant this pension as a matter of charity and because he is destitute, therefore you should grant it. Those are important things which probably gentlemen on the other side would like to know; but they are missing all these things by not having these reports read.

Mr. PICKLER. I am willing that anybody who reads this report shall decide whether this man is entitled to a pension.

Mr. MILNES. I wish to call the attention of this committee to the inconsistency of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN]. He has just voted—I saw him so vote—for a pension of $75 a month where there was no injury claimed whatever. Now, here is the case of a man who is blind and shot all to pieces, and the gentleman says that we are "missing a great deal" by not knowing the facts.

Mr. ERDMAN. I will say to the gentleman who has just taken his seat that I have voted for a pension of $75 a month to the widow of Gen. Thomas Ewing, just as the gentleman himself and other gentlemen on that side voted $75 a month to the widow of General Carr——

Mr. MILNES. I did not vote that way.

Mr. ERDMAN. To the widow of General Cogswell, to the widow of General Gresham, and to the widows of a great number of other generals. I am in favor of pensioning people according to their rank and services. The general law having provided for no distinction above the rank of lieutenant-colonel, it is practically left to be determined by Congress in special bills what shall be the pension in cases not covered by the general law. That is what we are doing in passing these bills. We are determining the rates of pensions according to the rank and service. And that is one of the reasons why I vote for many of these bills.

But that question was not involved in what I said in regard to the bill under consideration. I wanted to point out to gentlemen on the other side that they are putting these pensions through without knowing what they are doing. Not five of you gentlemen have read the reports—probably not three. You do not care to have them read. In this way the people do not see them. I simply emphasize the fact that you gentlemen are acting in the dark; that you are willing to grant gratuities to people without knowing what you are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering the bill to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

EMILY E. CASH.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I trust I may be permitted to occupy a moment. I have not given the House much trouble in regard to any pension bills on this Calendar. But I have in my charge to-night the case of an old widow, 83 years of age, who is confined to her bed. She is the widow of a soldier of the Mexican war, who, as the report states, "died in 1848 in a general military hospital at New Orleans, which he entered immediately upon his return from Mexico, where he had been discharged on account of disability." The committee has reported a bill in favor of increasing the pension of this old lady. I do not know her except by reputation.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from Tennessee is taking as much time in talking as would suffice to pass his bill.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from South Dakota has taken up enough time to pass a hundred bills. [Laughter.] I hope he will be quiet a moment.

Mr. PICKLER. Why does not the gentleman send up his bill?

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill, for the simple reason that unless it be taken up out of its order its passage will never do the old woman any good.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8248) to increase the pension of Mrs. Emily E. Cash.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to increase the pension of Mrs. Emily E. Cash, widow of Private Thomas W. Cash, a soldier in the Mexican war, to $30 a month.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty," so as to make the pension $20 a month, was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CHILDREN OF PATRICK F. REYNOLDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 603) to pension minor children of Patrick F. Reynolds.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1890, the names of the minor children of Patrick F. Reynolds, deceased, late a member of Company H, First Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay to their legal guardian the pension to which they would have been entitled under said act had not the soldier left a widow surviving at the date of his death.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have the report read in this case; I do not know anything about it.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. POOLE), as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6603) to pension the minor children of Patrick F. Reynolds, report as follows:

The soldier enlisted December 10, 1863, and was honorably discharged August 2, 1865. He died September 5, 1895, leaving a widow, to whom he was married November 6, 1892, and three minor children by a former marriage. The widow makes no claim under the general pension laws, because soldier's death was not due to causes arising in the service, and none under act of June 27, 1890, because she was married to the soldier subsequently to the passage of that act. She was appointed guardian of the children, and as guardian filed a claim for pension for them under act of June 27, 1890, but the claim was rejected on the ground that the minors had no title, since the soldier left a widow, who is still living.

The case is just this: The minor children of the soldier, who were intended to be pensioned by the act of June 27, 1890, are barred by the living widow, who has no title under said act.

The committee believe this to be most clearly a case calling for special action to remove the technical bar which defeats the purpose of the law, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, in this case the children are not going to get the pension. The widow is the guardian appointed by law, and she herself applies as the guardian of the children for this pension.

Mr. MILES. She applies to get that which she could not get under the general law. She was married since the passage of the act of 1890.

Mr. ERDMAN. It is therefore a case where you propose to transfer a pension as a vested right; and it has at last come to that pass where you are constituting and creating a pension a vested right, which is to pass by descent, and be assignable as any commercial contract is.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in reply to what the gentleman says, if we err let us err upon the side of charity in this case and give these children what they ask for.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY E. CHAMBERLAIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6221) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Chamberlain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Chamberlain, widow of Lowell A. Chamberlain, late a captain in the First United States Artillery, and pay her a pension of $50 a month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving, or of that to which she is entitled.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the word "Chamberlain" and insert the word "Chamberlin"; also in line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "thirty."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DANIEL D. JENNINGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2947) increasing the pension of Daniel D. Jennings, late of Company C, Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel D. Jennings, a private of Company C, Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH A. BULL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2014) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Bull.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Bull, widow of Hiram C. Bull, late a major and paymaster of volunteers in the United States Army, and grant her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of the pension of $8 per month which she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELVIRA BACHELDER.

The next business on the Private Calender was the bill (S. 147) granting a pension to Elvira Bachelder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Elvira Bachelder, dependent mother of J. K. P. Bachelder, late a private in Company D, Seventh New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY COLLINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 158) granting a pension to Mary Collins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Collins, mother of John Collins, late of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension from the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "Infantry," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. HELEN FUNKHOUSER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6236) to grant a pension to Mrs. Helen Funkhouser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Helen Funkhouser, widow of John J. Funkhouser, late colonel Ninety-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $30 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, inserting after the word "Helen" the initial "A." in line 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CATHERINE DARRAGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1892) granting a pension to Catherine Darragh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Catherine Darragh, widow of John Darragh, late a private in Company H, One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JANE FISHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4604) granting a pension to Jane Fisher (colored), of Madisonville, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane Fisher, widow of Henry Fisher, late of Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

After the word "late," in line 6, insert the word "private"; and in line 8, strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, if I may interrupt the carnival for a few moments, I want to call attention to a bill which passed a little while ago, the third or fourth or fifth bill just passed. In passing that bill the committee have determined that when a soldier is killed by keeping wild elks in a pen, his death is due to service origin. That is one of the strange things that we have determined.

For fear that the leader on the other side would be disappointed if we should not have some report read, I will ask to have the report on this case read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4604) granting a pension to Jane Fisher, widow of Henry Fisher, late private, Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, having examined and considered all the facts and circumstances presented in this case, respectfully report as follows:

The husband of this widow served as a private in Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Cavalry, from December 1, 1864, to September 25, 1865, on which date, at Louisville, Ky., he was honorably discharged, and died September 4, 1890. Widow filed application for pension July 3, 1895, which said claim was rejected upon the ground that claimant was not the legal wife of soldier. The report of a special examiner discloses the following:

"The public record (B. J. 10) shows claimant to have married soldier July 31, 1889, and the record shows soldier divorced from his wife Rachel October 23, 1889, so that claimant's marriage was not a legal marriage, cohabitation after divorce not being recognized as equivalent to marriage under the laws of the State of Kentucky. If illegality of marriage be not a bar, then claimant no doubt has title under act of June 27, 1890.

"F. C. MILLER, Special Examiner."

The facts in this case show that soldier was formerly married to one Rachel Nourse, and some time prior to July 31, 1889, he and his wife Rachel separated, and soldier filed application for divorce, and owing to soldier's ignorance of proceedings in legal tribunals (he being an ignorant colored man) was led to believe that said divorce had been granted, and acting upon this belief he in good faith was united in marriage to claimant July 31, 1889, when in reality soldier was not actually divorced from his wife Rachel until October 23, 1889, something less than three months after his marriage to claimant. There is nothing to show that soldier, or claimant either, ever became aware of this discrepancy, and continued to cohabit together, under the belief that they were lawfully husband and wife, and were so regarded by their friends and acquaintances.

In view of the reason urged by the Pension Department for the rejection of this claim, and of the further fact that claimant is wholly without means of support, as shown by the evidence, the committee report the bill back to the House with the recommendation, after being amended by inserting the word "private," after the word "late," in line 6, and by striking out the word "twelve," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eight," that the bill do pass.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to amend by striking out of the title of the bill the words "(colored), of Madisonville, Ky."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from the title the words "(colored), of Madisonville, Ky."

The amendments proposed by the committee were agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. PICKLER was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EMILY A. MANN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3480) for the relief of Emily A. Mann.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Emily A. Mann, widow of William R. Rogers, late of First Illinois Light Artillery.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 3480) to pension Emily A. Mann, and submit the following report:

The petitioner was formerly the widow of William R. Rogers, who was a soldier in Company B, First Illinois Light Artillery, from February 8, 1862, to March 28, 1862, when he died in the line of duty at Fort Donelson of typhoid fever. She was pensioned as his widow from the date of his death until December 28, 1865, at which time she married S. K. Mann, when her pension ceased. Mr. Mann died on the 12th of June, 1871.

The widow is now over 60 years of age, in destitute circumstances, and has no means of support, except contributions from friends, and no property.

She is afflicted and disabled with spinal disease caused by a fall in 1887. These facts are shown by the evidence on file in the Pension Office and the testimony of Dr. E. N. Howley, Dr. W. E. Gill, C. J. Baldwin, and C. W. Rule. She is now confined to her bed and is not likely to live a great while.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, this is another of that remarkable class which I had supposed from the information I had received from the Committee on Invalid Pensions were not again to be reported to this House. This is the case of a woman who is not the widow of a soldier. She remarried and left soldier's name and family and voluntarily relinquished a pension to which she had been entitled by the law of her country; and, having done so, this is a case, not of merit, but a clear, clean gratuity, upon a new basis, if we continue to pass these cases, and we have been unable thus far to receive from the Committee on Invalid Pensions or from any member of the committee or the House any just reason why that should be done.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I do.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems that the settled policy of the majority here is, as we have pensioned one widow at $75 a month, to turn back. Now, as we have pensioned these remarried widows, will it do to go back on that proposition also?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The gentleman can answer his own question.

Mr. PICKLER. Vote!

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am not in favor of voting at present, I will say to the gentleman from South Dakota. On one or two evenings we have considered cases like the one now pending.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will yield I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HOPKINS having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bills S. 466, S. 246, H. R. 6111, S. 1051, S. 247, S. 2514, H. R. 4994, H. R. 3578, H. R. 1825, H. R. 4193, H. R. 4001, H. R. 6789, H. R. 4888, H. R. 6483, H. R. 4363, S. 177, H. R. 3421, S. 2175, H. R. 2006, S. 705, S. 746, H. R. 1827, H. R. 1826, H. R. 6134, S. 61, H. R. 4481, S. 616, H. R. 2189, S. 1100, S. 1493, S. 1435, S. 1522, and S. 145, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that they do pass. The committee also had under consideration the bills H. R. 2359, H. R. 5226, H. R. 979, H. R. 5946, H. R. 1178, H. R. 4720, H. R. 5311, H. R. 6283, H. R. 5710, S. 1924, H. R. 1820, S. 1215, S. 404, S. 1044, S. 739, H. R. 4724, H. R. 4020, H. R. 4547, H. R. 126, H. R. 3857, H. R. 4910, H. R. 3229, H. R. 1891, H. R. 1511, H. R. 986, H. R. 4903, H. R. 4753, H. R. 2358, S. 149, S. 1189, H. R. 3264, S. 1420, H. R. 1890, H. R. 2373, H. R. 1500, H. R. 3113, and H. R. 5050, and had directed him to report the same to the House with amendments, and that as amended they do pass. The committee had also had under consideration the bills H. R. 2317, H. R. 3152, H. R. 3890, H. R. 6808, H. R. 3877, H. R. 4354, H. R. 8184, H. R. 4361, H. R. 2405, S. 1837, H. R. 8248, H. R. 6221, H. R. 158, and H. R. 4604, and had directed him to report the same with amendments, and that as amended they do pass. The committee had also had under consideration the bills H. R. 3306, H. R. 6466, H. R. 4283, H. R. 4721, H. R. 1599, H. R. 2969, H. R. 2963, H. R. 5711, H. R. 6603, H. R. 2947, S. 2014, S. 147, H. R. 6236, and H. R. 1892, and had directed him to report the same with the recommendation that they do pass. The committee had also had under consideration the bills H. R. 358, H. R. 4090, H. R. 3496, H. R. 1894, and H. R. 1931, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that they do lie on the table. The committee had also had under consideration the bill H. R. 3480 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ERDMAN. I rise to a point of order. My point is that a large number of the bills just reported have not been considered by this Committee of the Whole and have been improperly reported. I protest against their being reported to this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House, in pursuance of its previous order, adjourned until Monday next.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with accompanying documents, an agreement with the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians ceding to the United States a portion of their reservations, a draft of bill, and copy of the proceedings of the council, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 9, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. NELSON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The signature of the Vice-President was announced to the following bills, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (H. R. 953) for the relief of William Gray;

A bill (H. R. 1002) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Lemars, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. 7395) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reconvey to the former owners a certain tract of land in Valverde County, Tex.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7370) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 8237) to improve the printing and binding methods of the public documents was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of Volunteer Assembly, No. 1400, Knights of Labor, of Wellston, Ohio, and a petition of District Assembly, No. 4, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of the so-called Phillips bill, authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information, and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BURROWS (for Mr. MCMILLAN) presented a petition of Oxford Grange, No. 395, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oxford, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called filled cheese bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the memorial of Bernard Q. Harmon, of Sutherland, O'Brien County, Iowa, remonstrating against the petition to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, passed by the legislature of the State of Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation for the relief of and proper indemnity to settlers upon certain land granted to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of railroads, and to provide an appropriation of a sum sufficient to compensate them for their losses legitimately resulting from their eviction from their homes and property rights, and so forth. The memorial should go to the same committee to which the petition of the legislature of Iowa was referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition referred to is on the table, the Chair is advised. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. BURROWS (for Mr. MCMILLAN) presented sundry petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of the Second district of Michigan, numbering 1,000 members, praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REDEMPTION OF BONDS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of the Treasury, dated May 6, 1896, stating exactly the amount of bonds redeemed and purchased from March 1, 1885, to March 1, 1889, and then from March 1, 1889, to March 1, 1893. It is a very short document, signed by Secretary Carlisle, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, that it also be printed as a Senate document, and that a thousand copies of it be printed for the use of the Senate. It comprises only one sheet, and there will be a great many calls for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1896.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry in regard to the redemption of the public debt, with the premium and interest paid, from March 1, 1885, to March 1, 1893, I have the honor to state that the bonds redeemed and purchased, and the premium paid thereon, together with the amounts paid for interest on the public debt during the period named, were as follows:

	Principal.	Premium.	Interest.

Loan of 1891, purchased	87,157,800	6,772,813.32
	338,074,850	22,377,123.11	$187,820,957.40
From Mar. 1, 1889, to Mar. 1, 1893:
Loan of 1891, redeemed	24,606,950
Loan of 1907, purchased	121,615,950	30,666,138.59
Loan of 1891, purchased	111,973,000	8,225,388.08
	258,192,900	38,891,526.67	128,610,276.92

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate.

PLATFORM FOR AMERICAN INDEPENDENTS.

Mr. STEWART. I hold in my hand a proposed national platform prepared by William P. St. John, an eminent economist and banker of New York. As he has contributed largely to enlighten the people of the country on the financial question, and as the paper is not long, I should like to have it printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I have no doubt that Senators would like to read the suggestions coming from such a source.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. For which party is it intended as a platform?

Mr. STEWART. For some independent party. It is his idea of a platform for some independent party.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The paper referred to is as follows:

A NATIONAL PLATFORM FOR THE AMERICAN INDEPENDENTS OF 1896.

[Proposed by Mr. William P. St. John, president of the Mercantile National Bank, New York.]

Leaving the domestic affairs of the several States to those party organizations already occupied therewith, and believing that the Senate of the United States is quick to respond to the clearly expressed will of the people, we confine our present attempt to the election of the President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress on the following demands:

First. (a) That the mints of the United States shall be reopened to equally unrestricted coinage for gold and silver into the unlimited legal-tender money of the United States, the gold to issue in the present standard gold coins and the silver to issue in the present standard silver dollars. (b) Depositors of the gold or silver at the mint to receive in lieu of coin, if they prefer, at the coining value thereof, coin certificates, which shall be redeemed on demand in gold or silver coin at the option and according to the convenience of the United States. (c) And as a safeguard against panic and money stringency the Secretary of the Treasury shall be empowered to issue such coin certificates additionally against deposits of interest-bearing bonds of the United States, the interest accruing on the bonds to inure to the United States pending their reexchange for the coin certificates, which coin certificates when returned shall be canceled; provided that such additional issues of coin certificates shall not reduce the percentage of coin and bullion reserved for coin certificates and silver certificates below 60 per cent of the aggregate sum of coin certificates and silver certificates outstanding. The now outstanding silver certificates, gold certificates, and Treasury notes of 1890 to be retired as they come into the Treasury.

[This (a) is free coinage at 16 to 1, the convenient coin certificate (b) to take the place of gold certificates, silver certificates, and Treasury notes of 1890. The safeguard (c) would provide for a temporary increase of $300,000,000 of paper money against the silver on hand in the Treasury April 1.]

Second. The threatened competition with our Southern cotton mills of those of China and Japan, the increasing importations of long-stapled Egyptian in competition with our sea-island cotton, and the ill effects of the abrogation of the tariff on wool along with the deduction in the tariff on woolen manufactures, combine to evidence the fact that the time has not arrived to abandon an adequate protective tariff system in vain pursuit of the phantom of free trade.

The effect of the wool schedule of the Wilson bill has been to enrich the European manufacturer at the expense of our domestic manufacturer, and enlarge the European market for foreign wools while lessening our home market for our domestic wools, occasioning an advance of 2 cents a pound for Port Phillip (Australian) wool in London, while unwashed Ohio wool has declined 11 cents a pound in Boston and New York; and producing such a depression of our home manufactures as has caused a reduction in wages of operatives and threatens to throw this branch of domestic labor out of all employment.

We are, therefore, opposed to opening our home market of 70,000,000 consumers to the foreigner on any pretense of procuring thereby a foreign market for the productions of the United States. But we shall exact of our manufacturers that they accord to labor a liberal and more continuously certain share of the protection accorded them; and that the tariff devised shall afford also a protection to the farmer and the planter, and provide sufficient revenues for the necessary expenditures of Government.

[This second demand meets the requirement of the great mass of American labor, to whom McKinley threatens to become the embodiment of the protective tariff. While my reports from all sections, including the new South, are overwhelmingly in favor of protection, comparatively few manufacturers favor the restoration of the McKinley tariff.]

Third. We demand the application of the principle defined as the initiative and referendum to all national legislation which involves any radical change in public policy.

[A test of this principle, thus restricted to any radical change in public policy, seems warranted by the practice of Switzerland. The test may commend a broadening of the restriction, if found practicable. "Should the great trunk lines of railway become a possession of the Government?" would seem to be such a radical change in public policy as might wisely be referred to the people.]

Fourth. We condemn Clevelandism utterly—that debauching of legislators with patronage to achieve legislation opposed to the will of the people is a vicious prostitution of Executive influence, which we shall denounce as bitterly if it be the practice of an Executive elected as a Republican as when the practice of one elected as a Democrat.

If all who have become distrustful of old parties and tired of boss rule will unite in these demands and nominate on this platform some man of such achievements as commend him to the conservative element of the country, and who is not a seeker after the preferment, he can be elected in the approaching campaign to the Presidency of the United States.

If the Democratic platform demands the reopening of the mints to silver, as now seems likely, all the powers of the Democratic (?) Administration will be used to compass the defeat of the Democratic candidate. The prosperity to accrue to the people under the adoption of that policy would put in shameful contrast the current results of the Administration's policy.

If the Republican platform demands, unequivocally, the reopening of the mints to silver, the Democratic platform will necessarily demand the same, and the contest will be narrowed thereby to a protective tariff against free trade.

WILLIAM P. ST. JOHN.

As to the first, some would acquiesce in free coinage if they could foresee freedom from panic on its adoption. If $30,000,000 of bank clearing-house certificates can allay a panic in Wall street, the prospect of $300,000,000 of United States coin certificates is likely to stifle any panic that could arise. The people who are vulnerable are they who own the Government bonds, generally speaking. Certain other bondholders can be relied upon to lend their bonds, at a commission, for the proposed issue of coin certificates.

On the April 1 statement the Treasury notes of 1890 outstanding, less the amount on hand in the Treasury, were, in round numbers, $104,000,000. The total silver on hand, other than subsidiary coin, was $493,000,000. Deducting $104,000,000 for the Treasury notes leaves $389,000,000 of silver, a 60 per cent reserve for $648,000,000 of paper. Of this sum $333,000,000 net are already afloat as silver certificates, leaving $315,000,000 issuable in the proposed coin certificates.

As to the second, we declare our watchfulness and readiness to protect our cotton growers and cotton manufacturers upon the first evidence of their needing protection against foreign competitors in our home markets. We proclaim our acquaintance with the situation of our woolgrowers and wool manufacturers and our determination to remedy that situation promptly. We assert our disposition to afford protection to our home industries wherever needed, but beyond this we intend to give the country a rest from tariff tinkering, except in so far as necessary revenues demand legislation.

As to the third, we offer here an inducement to all elements among the independents to combine with us in our endeavor to overthrow boss rule and political corruption. If found practicable, our limitation upon the referendum will be broadened, and while our preamble restricts us to national affairs, our success will prove an entering wedge into State and municipal affairs, the result being a closer relationship between the people and legislation.

As to the fourth, we rely upon it that all independents are agreed as to the debauching character of Clevelandism as defined.

FREDERICK VAN GUILDER.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration Order of Business 886, the bill (H. R. 3046) for the relief of Frederick Van Guilder.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with the bill?

Mr. NELSON. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no such case on the Calendar put on my desk. I should like to hear the report read. This is one of the House bills. We ought to take up all the House bills, and we could then go on and pass them in the same time we are asking unanimous consent to call up particular bills. Let us have some order and system about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. COCKRELL. I can not find it on the Calendar. I should like to hear the report. We have no chance to examine the case now, and we are necessarily compelled to ask for the reading of the report in these cases where they are sprung on us without a moment's notice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? It is for the Senate to determine.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nos. 873, 875, and 909 are the cases on my Calendar in regular order.

Mr. NELSON. I call attention to the fact that it is in the index to the House Calendar, on page 44; but I find that it is on our Calendar, reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, at page 22.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the number?

Mr. NELSON. Order of Business 886. It is simply a bill to remove a charge of desertion; that is all. It was reported favorably April 30 by the Committee on Military Affairs, Report No. 823. The Senator from Missouri will find it on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have it now, after we have spent time enough on it to have passed three bills if it had been done decently and in order.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. NELSON. Unless the Senator from Missouri desires the reading of the report, I ask that it be dispensed with.

Mr. COCKRELL. I asked for it because I desire to have it read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. ELKINS April 30, 1896, and read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3046) for the relief of Frederick Van Guilder, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend its passage without amendment:

This bill passed the House of Representatives April 2, 1896, and is intended to remove the charge of desertion and to issue an honorable discharge, to date July 6, 1863. It appears from the testimony submitted and from the records of the War Department that this soldier enlisted in September, 1862, and was mustered into the United States service November 5, 1862, and served until July 6, 1863, having taken part in the battle of Gettysburg.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Secretary read over on page 2 the report from the War Department, so as to show what his military record was.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read in part the communication of January 28, 1896, from the Chief of the Record and Pension Office.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the remainder of the report of the War Department may be printed, and with a close shave this bill may be permitted to go through. It is barely meritorious.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The communications referred to are as follows:

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
January 28, 1896.

It is shown by the records on file in this office that Frederick Van Gilder was enrolled on September 5, 1862, and that he was mustered into service as a private of Company K, One hundred and twenty-third New York Volunteers, to serve three years, on November 5, 1862, at Albany, N. Y., by a regularly appointed mustering officer of the United States. He is borne as present with his command on all rolls of his company up to and including that for June 30, 1863. The next roll, that for August 31, 1863, reports him as absent without leave since July 6, 1863, and he is reported as absent on all subsequent rolls, except the muster-out roll of his company, which is dated June 8, 1865. On this roll he is reported as having deserted July 6, 1863.

It does not appear that the soldier received any pay from the time he enlisted until he left the service, and it is evident from the official records and from testimony that has been submitted to this Department that the fact of his having been mustered into service on November 5, 1862, was not communicated to his company officers until after he left his command on July 6, 1863.

On February 20, 1865, he enlisted to serve one year in Company A, Eighth Vermont Infantry, in violation of the twenty-second (now fiftieth) article of war, and was honorably discharged from that regiment on June 28, 1865.

In support of an application for removal of the charge of desertion from the One hundred and twenty-third New York Volunteers, Van Gilder has stated under oath that he served for many months without receiving any pay, that payment was refused him on the ground that the rolls did not show that he had been mustered into service, and that both he and his company officers were unaware that he had been mustered into service. This statement is corroborated to a certain extent by the official records and by the testimony of comrades which is on file in this Department; but, unfortunately, the soldier did not remain with his command until his case could have been adjudicated by the proper authorities, but abandoned the service without proper authority and went home, thereby making it necessary that the charge of desertion should be entered against him upon the records when his company officers discovered that he actually was mustered into the military service on November 5, 1862.

In view of the facts of record in this case, which do not conflict in any important particular with the statements made by the applicant and his witnesses, the War Department is unable to afford any relief under the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1889, which is the only law now in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 3, 1896.

SIR: In returning herewith the copy of the statement by Mr. Frederick Van Guilder, received by your reference on the 30th ultimo with the request to be furnished with certain information relative to the muster into service of Frederick Van Guilder, late of Company K, One hundred and twenty-third New York Infantry, and with the affidavit on file in this Department in his case, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you as follows:

No record has been found showing that shortly after the battle of Gettysburg this soldier reported to a provost-marshal, as alleged.

Upon a reexamination of the records of the provost-marshal at Baltimore, Md., it has been ascertained that under the name Fred Vangilder he was confined in the Gilmore House July 19, 1863, as an arrested deserter, with remark "not mustered in."

The "Letters Received Book," First Division, Twelfth Army Corps, shows that on June 11, 1863, H. O. Wiley, captain One hundred and twenty-third New York Infantry, requested that Private Van Guilder be mustered into the United States service, and that on the following day Captain Wiley's communication was forwarded for information. The records of the Twelfth Army Corps furnish no additional information in the case.

There is no muster and descriptive roll in the case on file in this office, the muster roll of his company dated August 31, 1863, being the basis for the statement that Van Guilder was mustered into service November 5, 1862, at Albany, N. Y.

An exhaustive investigation fails to elicit any further information in regard to the soldier as a member of Company K, One hundred and twenty-third New York Volunteers, additional to that contained in the report on H. R. bill No. 3046, Fifty-first Congress, first session. It appears, however, that on February 20, 1865, he enlisted for one year in Company A, Eighth Vermont Infantry, and was honorably discharged from that regiment on June 28, 1865.

If he was not in the military service as of Company K, One hundred and twenty-third New York Infantry, he could not, of course, be a deserter therefrom, and would not therefore be entitled to the benefits accruing from military service rendered therein, but whatever informality there may have been in the record of this man's muster into service, it is evident that he was, at least constructively, mustered in, and was in the military service as a member of that regiment and a technical deserter therefrom.

Following is a synopsis of the testimony on file in the case:

March 27, 1890, the soldier testified that he enlisted as a private in Company K, One hundred and twenty-third New York Infantry, on or about September 5, 1862, at Granville, N. Y., but was not mustered into service until "about the last days of September, 1862, at Albany"; that his muster rolls could not be found, and the paymaster refused to pay him, "on the grounds that I had not been mustered in," and said that "he could not muster me unless I enlisted over again, which would have caused me to lose all my pay"; that thinking he had served long enough without pay, he left his command, with his captain's consent, after the battle of Gettysburg; that he surrendered to the provost guard, and was taken to the provost-marshal general at Baltimore, but the latter officer, failing to find his muster-in papers, sent him home; and that not until many years after the war did he (soldier) know that he had been mustered into service.

Cassius G. Waite, aged 43 years, of Granville, N. Y., testified, May 23, 1890, that he was well acquainted with Van Guilder before his enlistment, and served with him in Company K, One hundred and twenty-third New York Infantry; that Van Guilder left the service at the battle of Gettysburg, about July 3, 1863, because his captain (H. O. Wiley) refused to issue him any clothing, and for the further reason that "he was not known on the muster rolls of said company and the Government"; and that "he heard Major-General Williams, division commander of Twelfth Corps, tell claimant not to fight unless the Government paid him, and to go home."

George W. Baker, late captain Company K, One hundred and twenty-third New York Infantry, testified September 15, 1890, that he was second lieutenant of the company at the date of Van Guilder's enlistment therein; that Van Guilder enlisted November 5, 1862, was mustered into service November 5, 1862, and left the regiment July 10, 1863; that the captain of the company (Henry O. Wiley) wrote several times to the adjutant-general of the State of New York for the mustering papers of the soldier, but was unable to obtain them, and that he was therefore "unable to get his pay or to find out whether he was a soldier or not"; and that on July 25, 1863, he (affiant) was detailed on detached service after drafted men in New York, and that on reaching Albany he obtained from the adjutant-general's office the mustering papers of Van Guilder and of two other members of the command, and forwarded them to the regiment.

It is proper to add that a synopsis of the testimony should have been embraced in the report on bill H. R. 3046, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, but was inadvertently omitted therefrom.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

Hon. R. WAYNE PARKER,
Chairman Subcommittee B, Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VILAS. If the morning business is closed——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to submit to the Senate a request for unanimous consent that as soon as the routine morning business is disposed of we may have some understanding, and either take up the unobjected House bills on the Calendar or take up the Calendar in its regular order, or something of that kind, so that we can do it systematically and know in advance what we are doing, and not have this hop-skip-and-jump method of business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri a further modification. We might devote half an hour to passing the pension bills that are on the Calendar. Those are bills in which a great many Senators are interested.

Mr. VILAS. Let us dispose of the unobjected House bills in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the specific request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will include the pension bills, too.

Mr. VILAS. I suggest unobjected House bills.

Mr. FRYE. There is a very important bill before the Senate known as the river and harbor bill, and it ought to be completed to-day. It ought to be in conference by Monday. I do not like to undertake to drive the Senate to consider a bill. I have no more interest in it than any other Senator, certainly, but we ought to dispose of the river and harbor bill to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. Give us until 1 o'clock to take up some order of business; the unobjected House bills, I think, would be better for the present, and then that will dispose of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object to that course.

Mr. QUAY. I will object to anything except the regular order until the river and harbor bill is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. If there are no further petitions and memorials, reports of committees are next in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 137) granting an increase of pension to William W. French.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 730) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Helen Morrell Carroll with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 138) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Hazlip;

A bill (H. R. 446) to increase the pension of Julia H. H. Crosby;

A bill (H. R. 485) for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman;

A bill (H. R. 950) granting increase of pension to John Coombs;

A bill (H. R. 1022) to increase the pension of Byron Cotton;

A bill (H. R. 1062) to grant a pension to Armstead M. Rawlings, of Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. 1436) to quiet title to lands in persons who purchased the same in good faith without notice and for a valuable consideration, and to enable the Government to issue patents on such lands, and that commutations of homestead entries shall take effect from date of settlement, and not from date of entry;

A bill (H. R. 1980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. 3033) to increase the pension of Elizabeth T. Beall, widow of Benjamin L. Beall, late colonel First United States Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. 3787) for the relief of H. C. Herndon;

A bill (H. R. 4255) to provide for settlement of titles and disposition of public lands in the Arredondo grant, in Columbia County, Fla.;

A bill (H. R. 4383) granting a pension to Gen. William H. Morris;

A bill (H. R. 4913) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Wyse, widow of Lieut. Col. F. O. Wyse;

A bill (H. R. 5175) granting a pension to Nancy Gentry;

A bill (H. R. 5388) for the relief of F. Alberts & Co., Muskegon, Mich.;

A bill (H. R. 5580) granting a pension to Archibald Hunley;

A bill (H. R. 7777) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to furnish condemned cannon to Fort Thomas, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 7381) directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association of the City of Middletown, N. Y.;

A bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. 8820) making provision for the deportation of refugee Canadian Cree Indians from the State of Montana and their delivery to the Canadian authorities; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 174) granting permission to the circuit and county courts in Rockingham County, Va., to occupy the Federal court room in Harrisonburg, Va.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2987) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2986) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7988) to pension Frances E. Wickware, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 752) to increase the pension of Capt. James B. Logan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 141) to carry into effect two resolutions of the Continental Congress directing monuments to be erected to the memory of Gens. Francis Nash and William Davidson, of North Carolina, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 7143) granting to the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association, of the county of Middlesex, in the State of New Jersey, 4 condemned cannon and 30 cannon balls;

A bill (H. R. 7216) donating one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 573, of Evans City, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 8266) donating two condemned cannon to Custer Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, of Etna, Pa., and two condemned cannon to James G. Clark Post, No. 162, Grand Army of the Republic, of Allegheny, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 4324) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 4557) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate two pieces of condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the St. Boniface Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association, of Chicago, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 6666) granting to Major C. A. Angel Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lambertville, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls; and

A bill (H. R. 6256) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to George F. Fuller Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Manistique, Mich., a condemned cannon.

Mr. HILL. There are a great many bills being reported in reference to condemned cannon. I think the Senate ought not to pass any more House bills on the subject. The Calendar is flooded now simply with special bills authorizing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to grant condemned cannon to this and that Grand Army post, or this and that village, or something else. We have already passed a general bill, carefully guarded, which gives general authority to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to grant, under suitable regulations, the privilege of having condemned cannon. I merely suggest to the Senate that we ought not to pass these House bills, and in that way we may be able to bring around the House to pass the general bill first. We are cumbering the session laws here with legislation of very little value to anybody. I merely make the suggestion.

Mr. HARRIS. Yesterday I reported, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, the bill (S. 3088) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Potomac Light and Power Company. I now report adversely two bills upon the same subject. The bill already favorably reported proposes to dispose of the whole subject-matter. I ask that the two bills I report adversely be indefinitely postponed.

The bills were indefinitely postponed, as follows:

A bill (S. 2544) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Potomac Light and Power Company; and

A bill (S. 2124) to authorize extension of the lines of the Potomac Light and Power Company.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I reserved the right to file a minority report upon that bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, upon the bill favorably reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon the bill favorably reported.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course the Senator has that right.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know it had been reported until this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; it was reported the same day the committee took action upon it, but I have not filed any report with it. I simply reported the bill favorably.

Mr. PALMER. The Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy E. Allabach and the message of the President disapproving the bill, direct me to submit a report. I ask that it be printed, and I shall call up the bill and message at the earliest day possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed under the rule.

ARTICLES EXPORTED FOR EXHIBITION PURPOSES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7865) to allow the return free of duty of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes, to report it favorably, without amendment. It is a short bill, and I ask to have it read, and that it be put upon its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any article or articles or live stock shall be sent out of the United States for temporary use or exhibition at any public exposition, fair, or conference held in a foreign country, such articles shall be entitled to be returned to the United States, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, without the payment of customs duty, whether they shall be of domestic or of foreign production: Provided, That the articles of foreign production have once paid duty in the United States and no drawback has been allowed thereon, and if any domestic articles are subject to internal-revenue tax, such tax shall be proved to have been paid before exportation and not refunded.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill has passed the other House, and it was unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Finance this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That for the purpose of making the investigation and report ordered by Senate resolution of May 7, 1896, the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized to sit by subcommittee or otherwise, to summon witnesses, and to administer oaths during the sessions or recess of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to employ stenographers and such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. KYLE. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2592) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic, to report it adversely, and to recommend that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, in the absence of objection.

Mr. KYLE. In connection with the report, I desire to read a letter from the Commissioner of Labor, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., May 7, 1896.

MY DEAR SENATOR KYLE: I have yours of the 6th instant, inclosing Senate bill No. 2592, providing for a commission on the subject of alcoholic liquor traffic.

You will remember that Congress has already authorized this Department to make an investigation relative to the economic aspects of the liquor traffic. In accordance with this instruction this Department is now at work collecting information, and the investigation is working successfully, so far as I can see. Employers of labor everywhere are taking an interest in the matter, and I believe the investigation will be fairly successful and very valuable. I should think it would be bad policy to pass bill 2592 until the results of the pending investigation are known, although there are some things provided for in the bill which we can not attempt very well; as, for instance, the criminal, moral, and scientific aspects of the question in connection with pauperism, crime, and vice. These points elude the statistical method, although we shall have some facts bearing upon them. Nor can we, under the instructions of Congress, take cognizance of the results of license and prohibitory legislation. Our investigation will cover the questions of revenue, production, consumption, etc.

It will interest you to know that a large committee, known as the Committee of Fifty, has been at work two years or more studying these very problems—the criminal, moral, and scientific aspects of the liquor question, and the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation. This committee is headed by Hon. Seth Low, president of the Columbia University, and is still at work expending money in making practical investigations.

Looking at these points generally, therefore, and in answer to your question, it does not seem to be necessary to pass the bill.

I am, sincerely yours,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT, Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES H. KYLE,
United States Senate.

NATIONAL NEW HAVEN BANK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1365) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut, which was, in line 7, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

Being the amount found to be due to John W. Griffiths, as appears from a report dated February 27, 1877, made by a board of constructors appointed by the Bureau of Construction and Repairs of the Navy Department, which report is on file in said Bureau.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3105) to provide for the erection of a public building at McKeesport, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3106) for the relief of the legal representatives of Douglas Dale, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3107) for the relief of Cogswell & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 3108) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria V. Finch, of Gloversville, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS (for Mr. MCMILLAN) introduced a bill (S. 3109) to increase the pension of Magnus D. Slack; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3110) providing for the construction of cable and telegraph lines from the United States to Siberia, Japan, and the Hawaiian Islands, and guaranteeing interest on bonds to be secured by said lines; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3111) to remove the charge of desertion from the name of George Miller, of Valentine, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 3112) to regulate the right of appeal in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3113) for the relief of W. E. Judkins, executor of Lewis McKenzie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3114) to provide for the adjustment and payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia by drawback certificates; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 3116) for the relief of the heirs at law of the late Duncan H. Campbell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 144) authorizing the employment of counsel for the purpose of bringing suits against the directors and stockholders of the Union and Central Pacific railroads; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the joint resolution may lie on the table, as I wish to make some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 146) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver to the Sackanosset School for Boys, of Cranston, R. I., one condemned cannon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SPECIAL LIQUOR-TAX RECORD.

Mr. PEFFER. A day or two ago on presenting a petition in relation to Senate bill 239 quite a spirited discussion arose. In order to obviate the difficulties which were presented at that time by Senators, I propose to amend section 3243 of the Revised Statutes by adding a single paragraph. With the indulgence of the Senate, I will read the section, for I am anxious that it shall go into the RECORD:

SEC. 3243. The payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws for carrying on any trade or business shall not be held to exempt any person from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any State for carrying on the same within such State, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such trade or business contrary to the laws of such State, or in places prohibited by municipal law; nor shall the payment of any such tax be held to prohibit any State from placing a duty or tax on the same trade or business for State or other purposes.

That is section 3243 of the Revised Statutes, and this is the clause which I ask to have added:

And in order to make the provisions of this section more effectual it shall be the duty of collectors of internal revenue, on the 1st day of every calendar month, to prepare and forward by mail to the officer or person having custody of county records in each of the counties within the particular collection district a statement showing how many and what persons, with their post-office addresses, paid such taxes in said county during the last preceding month, and for what trade or business the tax was paid.

I now introduce the bill proposing to add this provision.

The bill (S. 3115) to amend section 3243 of the Revised Statutes relating to taxes under the internal-revenue laws was read twice by its title.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Finance, and I hope that we shall now have an early report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. DUBOIS. I introduce a joint resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 145) regulating the issue of bonds was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That after the date of this act no bonds of the United States shall be issued by any officer of the United States, under any existing law, until the President shall have communicated to Congress, in a message, the facts showing the necessity for such issue of bonds, and the amount of bonds required for such purpose, and until Congress by the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall authorize such bonds to be paid.

Mr. HILL. I think an important measure like that should go to one of the standing committees of this body.

Mr. SHERMAN. It should go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HILL. Is there any objection to the bill being referred to the Finance Committee, I ask the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DUBOIS. There is no necessity for its reference to the Committee on Finance. I should like to have a vote on it by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It proposes to change an existing law, and as a matter of course it has to be in the form of a bill or joint resolution.

Mr. DUBOIS. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. HILL. It is in the form of a joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. It must be read three times, and I object to its third reading.

Mr. MILLS. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the joint resolution will go over.

Mr. DUBOIS. It will go over and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

Mr. DUBOIS. I shall ask for its consideration on Monday.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEFFER (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURES.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 2,000 extra copies of Senate bill 2447, "to establish the department of commerce and manufactures."

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS IN DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution and ask for its adoption.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, requested to inform the Senate at his earliest convenience to what extent and under what conditions the historical documents deposited in the Department of State are accessible to students of American history.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out "requested" and insert "directed."

Mr. GALLINGER. I accept the modification proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

TOWBOAT ASSOCIATION OF NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 862) entitled "A bill for the relief of the receivers of the Towboat Association of New Orleans, La.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. WARREN. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 862 was ordered to a third reading and passed. It seems that the bill was put upon its passage and sent to the other House, while it was the intention of the Senate to send the claim to the Court of Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the motion to reconsider will be agreed to. It is agreed to, and the bill is reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEPORTATION OF CANADIAN INDIANS.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8820) making provision for the deportation of refugee Canadian Cree Indians from the State of Montana, and their delivery to the Canadian authorities. In connection with the request, I desire to make a statement concerning the facts.

About ten years ago, at the close of the Riel rebellion, a number of Cree Indians from the Northwest Territory invaded the territory of the United States, and they have remained in the country since that time. Repeated efforts have been made through the State Department to secure the consent of the Canadian authorities to receive back those Indians. The Secretary of State recently secured the consent of the Canadian Government to accept the Indians at the border line on the 10th day of the present month, and in order that the Government may be in a position to comply with the terms of the agreement within ten days after the 10th it is important that this bill should become a law.

It was favorably reported in the form of an amendment by the Committee on Foreign Relations, but inasmuch as the deficiency appropriation bill will not probably be passed in time to make the fund available until after the 1st of June, the Committee on Appropriations yesterday suggested the propriety of having a small bill passed to meet the emergency. The other House has passed the bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. QUAY. In view of the statement of the Senator from Montana I shall not object to this bill, but I shall object to any other hereafter.

The bill (H. R. 8830) making provision for the deportation of refugee Canadian Cree Indians from the State of Montana and their delivery to the Canadian authorities was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available, to enable the President, by employment of the Army, or otherwise, to deport from the State of Montana and deliver at the international boundary line to the Canadian authorities all refugee Canadian Cree Indians in said State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 138) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Hazlip;

A bill (H. R. 446) to increase the pension of Julia H. H. Crosby;

A bill (H. R. 950) granting increase of pension to John Coombs;

A bill (H. R. 1022) to increase the pension of Byron Cotton;

A bill (H. R. 1062) to grant a pension to Armstead M. Rawlings, of Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. 3033) to increase the pension of Elizabeth T. Beall, widow of Benjamin L. Beall, late colonel First United States Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. 4383) granting a pension to Gen. William H. Morris;

A bill (H. R. 4913) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Wyse, widow of Lieut. Col. F. O. Wyse;

A bill (H. R. 5175) granting a pension to Nancy Gentry; and

A bill (H. R. 5580) granting a pension to Archibald Hunley.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 7381) directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association, of the city of Middletown, N. Y.; and

A bill (H. R. 7777) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to furnish condemned cannon to Fort Thomas, Ky.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 1980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California; and

A bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. 1436) to quiet title to lands in persons who purchased the same in good faith without notice and for a valuable consideration, and to enable the Government to issue patents on such lands, and that commutations of homestead entries shall take effect from date of settlement, and not from date of entry; and

A bill (H. R. 4255) to provide for settlement of titles and disposition of public lands in the Arredondo grant, in Columbia County, Fla.

The bill (H. R. 485) for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 3787) for the relief of H. C. Herndon was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 5388) for the relief of F. Alberts & Co., Muskegon, Mich., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 174) granting permission to the circuit and county courts in Rockingham County, Va., to occupy the Federal court room in Harrisonburg, Va., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 7th instant approved and signed the act (S. 2997) to provide for the fulfillment of the stipulations of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain signed at Washington on the 8th day of February, 1896.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. 129) for the relief of Capt. George H. Perkins; and

An act (S. 1846) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon to Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans., and Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa.

TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. BATE. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 2889) to aid and encourage the holding of the Tennessee Centennial Exposition at Nashville, Tenn., in the year 1897, and making an appropriation therefor.

Mr. QUAY. I regret that I shall have to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the present consideration of the bill. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BATE. I move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. QUAY. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce seems to be absent at this moment. I supposed that he would move to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill as soon as the morning business was completed. As he is not here, I have no objection to the Senator from Tennessee proceeding with his bill.

Mr. BATE. I did not understand the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. BATE. I am much obliged.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. FAULKNER. At the request of the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], I desire to announce that next Thursday morning, directly after the conclusion of the morning business, he will call up the bill reported from the Committee on Immigration in regard to the restriction of immigration, for the purpose of addressing the Senate on the subject.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WHITE to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I will resume consideration of my objections to the Santa Monica item of the river and harbor bill, and will now proceed to consider some of the claims made by the advocates of Santa Monica and also the objections raised to the San Pedro location, although I deem it unnecessary to a correct solution of the immediate question pending that any elaborate presentation of the particular subjects to which I allude shall be made, because the amendment which I have proffered involves the appointing of a commission to locate the harbor, and provides that upon a favorable report of a majority of the commission the appropriation shall be made available for the point selected by them. The merits of each site would thus be finally and satisfactorily settled.

I believe it has already been sufficiently shown and that it must continue to be apparent that there is at least reasonable ground to doubt the advisability of investing more than three millions of public funds in an unapproved breakwater site, and I trust that I may be able to show to the Senate that it is improper to make such an appropriation as is designed in the bill without any governmental sanction or without any regard to those safeguards which have heretofore been deemed essential to secure the proper disbursement of public money.

Notwithstanding the fact that I do not deem it absolutely material to consider objections to the contending locations, I will do so, as some may be influenced by the many charges and theories from time to time urged in this connection. In the minority report, page 31, occurs the following:

It is asserted that since the last report of the engineers was made Mr. Huntington and his associates of the Southern Pacific Company have constructed an extensive wharf at Port Los Angeles (Santa Monica), and that the shipping experience since had evidences the wisdom of the location. It is true that in ordinary weather vessels successfully discharge their cargoes at Mr. Huntington's wharf, but in this respect San Pedro possesses equal advantages. The evidence taken by the committee shows insurance rates to be less at San Pedro than at Santa Monica. The Mendell's report mentions that San Pedro Bay has been a shipping point time out of mind; that prior to the American occupation mariners touched there, and the locality was known as the "Embarcadero." During those periods no one thought of resorting to Santa Monica Bay.

In the letter circulated by and bearing Mr. Corthell's name I find the following response to the point to which I have just adverted:

On page 68 of the report of the hearing is a digest of certain affidavits made by shipmasters this year, who have, some of them, for two or three years been engaged regularly in loading and unloading vessels at Port Los Angeles. It is my pronounced opinion that had the commercial experience at the wharf at Port Los Angeles been available for consideration by the Mendell board in 1891 it would not have hesitated to give an opinion in favor of building a deep-sea harbor at this place instead of at San Pedro. It is well known that the reason why "San Pedro has been a shipping point from time out of mind" is the existence of the mouth of a tidal lagoon at this place into which the small vessels which formerly plied along this coast could enter and unload upon the banks or wharves, and that it was not on account of any anchorage facilities which the open bay might possess.

In the same connection Mr. Corthell refers to the holding ground at San Pedro thus:

The contention in regard to holding ground at San Pedro has been, and is, that there are near the shore and in some other parts of the bay rocky areas which do not form good holding ground for vessels at anchor. It is generally conceded by shipmasters, and it certainly is evident from careful examinations made by borings and by experience in pile driving at Port Los Angeles, that that part at least of the Bay of Santa Monica could not have better holding ground.

Among the many fallacious impressions which obtain in some quarters, and perhaps yet prevail, in consequence of reiterated assertion, is the notion that the holding ground at San Pedro is not good. There will be found printed in the hearings before the Senate committee the statement of some forty-odd shipmasters who have visited San Pedro at different times, and their evidence upon this subject is absolutely conclusive. Those shipmasters have not called at that port during one or two years, but have plied up and down the coast of California for extended periods. The statements to which I refer are on page 24 of the hearings and extend to the middle of page 28. The original affidavits are on file with the committee, and the matter presented in the report is in digested form. I quote:

O. A. Olsen, master mariner: Have been acquainted, in my capacity as practical sailor, with San Pedro Bay and Harbor nine years. Have been in San Pedro Bay several times, and have anchored in roadstead. Very good holding ground. San Pedro has the better anchorage ground. San Pedro has the better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

F. G. Miller, master mariner: Have been acquainted with San Pedro Bay and Harbor, as a practical sailor, for thirty years. Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor six times. Always anchored in roadstead. Anchored in winter of 1860-61 and since to date. Good holding ground, and with good ground tackle I think vessel will lay safe to her anchors the year round.

Here is the case of a man who has been engaged in managing vessels, acting as master mariner on the Pacific coast since 1861, and he has frequently visited this bay.

H. A. Smith, master mariner: Have anchored in San Pedro Bay many times since 1868. Good holding ground. San Pedro best place for harbor. Is better protected from prevailing winds and swells than Santa Monica Bay.

John Peterson, master mariner: Have been acquainted with San Pedro Bay and Harbor twenty years, and have been there many times. Anchored in the roadstead. Very good anchorage ground. Have been acquainted with Santa Monica Bay twenty years. San Pedro has better anchorage ground and has better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

I will not read all the statements, but I will ask to have same incorporated in my remarks. Senators who care to do so may peruse these statements upon pages 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28 of the hearings. They are to the effect that the natural advantages of San Pedro are in every way superior to Santa Monica, and are specific and positive as to the character of the holding ground. These affidavits are made, not by theorists, but by men who have cast their anchors in that roadstead and know exactly what they are talking about. Their views should be regarded as conclusive. I submit their statements:

Sworn statements of sea captains as to holding ground for anchorage at San Pedro.

W. S. Southard, master mariner: Have been at San Pedro Bay and Harbor once. Anchored in the roadstead. First-class holding ground. Have been in Bay of Santa Monica, near Redondo. San Pedro is best place for harbor. Is protected by islands on one side, mainland on the other. Latter protects from westerly winds, which prevail at different times of the year.

F. E. Magune, shipmaster: Been in San Pedro Harbor twelve times. Anchored in roadstead. The holding ground is good and very hard. San Pedro has better protection from prevailing winds and swells.

Barnard Olsson, master mariner: Anchored many times in San Pedro Bay, in roadstead. San Pedro best holding ground. Have always tried to keep away from Santa Monica Bay. The better anchorage ground is at San Pedro, by all means. San Pedro has better protection from prevailing winds and swells.

Henry A. Crocker, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor many times—too numerous to mention. Anchored in roadstead. Very good anchorage ground at San Pedro. Have been in Bay of Santa Monica. San Pedro has better anchorage ground and has better protection from prevailing winds and swells.

R. Brummer, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor many times. Anchored in roadstead. The holding ground is exceptionally good. Am acquainted with Bay of Santa Monica. San Pedro has better anchorage ground and better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

Charles Warner, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor many times. Anchored in roadstead. Anchorage ground very good. Was in Santa Monica Bay with cargo of piles and found great difficulty in discharging and holding ground very poor. San Pedro has better anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds, etc.

P. A. Johnson, master mariner: Have been on San Pedro route six years steady. Have anchored in roadstead many times. Good holding ground. Don't think favorably of Santa Monica. San Pedro has better anchorage ground and is better protected from prevailing winds and swells.

C. C. Birkholm, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor twenty times. Anchored in roadstead. Good anchorage ground. Have discharged two cargoes at Santa Monica. San Pedro has better anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds.

E. Christ, shipmaster: Have been in San Pedro Harbor many times. Always anchored my vessel outside. Have always found the holding bottom of first-class quality. Do not think there is any better. Never had occasion to anchor in Santa Monica Bay. San Pedro has better anchorage ground, I think. San Pedro has better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

O. Anderson, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor many times. Anchored in roadstead many times. Good holding ground. Have been acquainted with Santa Monica Bay since 1881, and do not know any good of it. San Pedro has better anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds and swells.

William Robb, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor twenty times or more. Anchored in roadstead. Have always found the anchorage good; in fact, superior to any bay on the Pacific coast, San Francisco excepted, and only except San Francisco on account of the harbor being landlocked. Have anchored in Santa Monica Bay on different occasions in small boats and yachts. San Pedro has better anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds and swells. San Pedro is sheltered from prevailing winds on Pacific coast.

John W. Aspe, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor about thirty times. Anchored in roadstead every voyage. Holding ground is good. Am acquainted with Santa Monica Bay. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds and swells. San Pedro is a safe harbor for the summer winds, with good holding ground. Santa Monica has a constant westerly swell, with very poor holding ground.

M. Olsen, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay many times. Often anchored in roadstead. Good holding ground. San Pedro has best anchorage ground. Acquainted with Santa Bay only by my charts. San Pedro has better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

F. D. Wells, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor several times. Anchored in roadstead. I have anchored there in heavy blows and my anchors always held. San Pedro has best anchorage ground. Am acquainted with Santa Monica Bay. San Pedro has better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

C. Jansen, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay many times. Anchored in roadstead. Good holding ground; most emphatically good. Am acquainted with Santa Monica Bay. I consider San Pedro superior in all weather from the fact that San Pedro is protected from all prevailing winds and seas. San Pedro has best anchorage ground, and is recognized by all seafaring men as a safe port to anchor in.

J. W. Grove, shipmaster: Have been in San Pedro Bay. Anchored in roadstead. Good holding ground. Have been in Santa Monica Bay twice. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells. The latter place is protected from the south by Catalina Island; from the north by the mainland.

William Kindlen, master mariner: Have anchored in San Pedro Harbor, in roadstead. San Pedro has good holding ground and shelter. Can not compare San Pedro with Santa Monica, for I do not know; but San Pedro is good. In my opinion San Pedro has better protection from prevailing winds and swells.

F. M. Johnson, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor many times. Anchored in roadstead. Good holding ground. Am acquainted with Santa Monica Bay from my charts. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

David Robinson, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor, and anchored in roadstead. I think the bottom is very good holding ground. I have never dragged my anchor there. Am not acquainted with Bay of Santa Monica. In my opinion San Pedro has best anchorage ground and be ter protection from prevailing winds and swells. I have been over to Santa Monica, and I noticed that there is a very strong undertow, and I should think it would be ver-y hard to hold a ship at the wharf. As to anchorage, I know nothing, only from hearsay.

John Slater, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor many times. Anchorage ground good. Am acquainted with Santa Monica Bay for twenty years, and I at all times wanted to keep away from it. San Pedro has best anchorage ground, and has better protection from prevailing winds and swells.

C. Ryder, shipmaster: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor many times. Anchored in roadstead many times. Good anchorage ground. As between bays of Santa Monica and San Pedro the latter has best anchorage ground and better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

William Rosendall, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor many times. Anchored in roadstead many times. Good holding ground. Acquainted with Santa Monica a little by knowledge acquired from my charts. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells. San Pedro is protected from all prevailing winds and swells, excepting severe winds and seas from the southeast; these the bay of Santa Monica is entirely exposed to.

Martin Chester, shipmaster: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor between three and four hundred trips and anchored in roadstead many times. Good holding ground. Never knew of a vessel meeting with any accident on account of poor holding ground. I was master of the first vessel that tied up alongside of the old Santa Monica wharf. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds, etc. In my personal experience as master of different vessels bound for both ports I found that for safety and shelter San Pedro was preferable and more secure.

Richard Hillyer, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor and Bay hundreds of times. Anchored in roadstead. I have found anchorage good, and it can not be surpassed. Have been acquainted with Santa Monica Bay for many years. San Pedro has better anchorage ground under all circumstances than Santa Monica, and has better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells. Santa Monica has poor holding ground and but little shelter. I dragged my anchors in Santa Monica Bay, and was forced to go back to San Pedro Bay for protection.

R. P. Rasmussen, master: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor. Anchored in roadstead twenty times or more. Have found the anchorage good for almost all winds, with hard blue clay for bottom, well adapted for holding ground, with a depth of water of from 5 to 15 fathoms. Am acquainted with bay of Santa Monica by careful study of charts. In my opinion San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells, San Pedro anchorage, with winds from due west to due south, is perfectly sheltered, while Santa Monica is exposed to both winds and swells between said points.

E. C. Generaux, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay about ten trips. Anchored every trip, save one, in roadstead. Anchorage ground is excellent holding ground. No sudden rise and fall in the bottom and an average depth throughout the whole ground. Have been anchored in several gales and never dragged. Am acquainted with Santa Monica Bay, first from observations from the beach and how vessels anchored in the bay act, and from hearsay from shipmasters that have been there. From experience I know little concerning Santa Monica Bay, but I can plainly see that there is too much water for vessels to anchor safely. Very heavy undertow. San Pedro has best anchorage ground by far, as Santa Monica has too much water and not an even bottom. San Pedro Bay has better protection from prevailing winds and swells, as it is only open to southerly and westerly winds. A vessel will ride a gale in San Pedro better than Santa Monica.

Walter H. Mackie, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay. Anchored in roadstead. Good holding ground. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds and swells than Santa Monica.

A. C. Glaser, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor and Bay several times. Anchored in roadstead. Good anchorage ground at San Pedro. Am acquainted with Santa Monica Bay. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells. San Pedro is a natural harbor.

Edward Lewis, shipmaster: Have been in San Pedro Bay about ten trips. Anchored in roadstead. San Pedro is the very best holding ground, in my opinion, there is on the Pacific coast, basing my opinion from the fact of having discharged full cargoes of coal in the outer harbor. San Pedro has better protection from prevailing winds than Santa Monica. The prevailing winds for about ten months in the year come from the westward, and a ship at anchor in San Pedro Bay, being protected by Point Firmin, is safe from the wind and swells.

J. C. Hansen, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bar and Harbor many times. Have anchored in roadstead many times—too numerous to mention. Find from my varied experience that the holding ground at San Pedro is of the very best. In 1876 in Santa Monica Bay I came near losing the schooner Hayes, a new vessel. Had all my lines out, and also many lines furnished by the company, and barely escaped destruction. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

A. P. Carlson, master: Have been in San Pedro Harbor various times and anchored in roadstead. Anchorage ground good. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds and swells. I have been in Santa Monica and rebuilt the wharf, and during that time I observed it to be a dangerous bay for shipping. Saw the seas break over the wharf at times while a personal observer.

J. Willey: Have anchored in roadstead, San Pedro Bay, ten or fifteen times during last year. First-class holding ground; sheltered from all winds except a southeast wind, which we have three or four times during the winter months. They last only short time. No trouble of a vessel riding if their anchors are clear and have out good scope. Vessels never go to Santa Monica unless they are compelled to. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds and swells.

O. Anfindsen, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor six or seven times each year during all seasons. Anchored in roadstead often. While master of the schooner Bobolink, in 1886, anchored there about once a month. Anchorage ground I find excellent, with good shelter from northwest and southwest winds, and from south and southeast winds. It is, in my opinion, better than any harbor south of San Francisco, barring San Diego, and I have been in all of them. Am acquainted with Santa Monica Bay no more than from casual runs up and down the coast. San Pedro has by far the best advantage. Santa Monica is an open ocean and no shelter. San Pedro has the most advantage of a harbor for shipping, it being inclosed by land in a half circle, whereas Santa Monica is exposed to all quarters of the compass, and the undertow there is severe on the ship's ground tackle, which does not exist in the outer road of San Pedro.

George Dettmer, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor many times. Anchored in roadstead many times. Good holding ground. Have been many times in Santa Monica Bay and its locality. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and has better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells.

E. W. Sprague, master: Have been running to San Pedro Harbor off and on as master of vessel for twelve years. Always anchored in roadstead every trip. Have found it first-class holding ground, and have never known a vessel to drag anchor there. Am acquainted with bay of Santa Monica to my sorrow. My experience is a heavy westerly swell setting in the year round, and westerly wind has full sway, and there is no protection from them. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds and swells. Westerly winds are the prevailing winds and always a westerly swell, and San Pedro has a protection from them already, and Santa Monica has not, and in my opinion it never can have. Can easily anchor 100 ships in outer bay of San Pedro in a westerly gale in perfect safety.

O. Peterson, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Harbor about one hundred times. Anchored in roadstead many times. Good holding ground. Have been acquainted with Santa Monica Bay since 1878. San Pedro has best anchorage ground and better protection from prevailing winds and swells.

F. O. Raven, shipmaster: Have been in San Pedro Harbor many times. Anchored in roadstead. Have anchored and laid in all kinds of weather and never dragged my anchors. Have been acquainted with Santa Monica Bay for eighteen years. San Pedro has best anchorage and better protection from prevailing winds. Have laid in Santa Monica Bay with cargo and discharged my cargo with great difficulty.

Alexander Smith, master mariner and pilot: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor about five hundred times. Anchored in roadstead both light and deep draft. Anchorage ground is very good and will hold a long time if your anchors are clear. Am very well acquainted with Santa Monica Bay. San Pedro has best anchorage ground, and has better natural protection from prevailing winds and swells for three hundred and sixty days in the year. Santa Monica Bay has not good holding ground for any vessels' anchors; the bottom is too hard until you get 14 miles to the southeast of the new Santa Monica wharf. San Pedro Bay is the most eligible location for a deep-water harbor because the half of a natural harbor is there already.

Claus C. Hansen, master: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor twenty times and more and have anchored in roadstead. It is a very good holding ground. San Pedro has best natural protection from prevailing winds. It is a better protected roadstead from westerly winds, which are most prevailing. Catalina Island protects some. Do not see any protection for Santa Monica Bay from any islands.

P. Sonerud, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor between twenty and thirty times and anchored in roadstead. There is a good holding bottom, and I think a vessel can lie perfectly safe in most any kind of weather. Am acquainted with Santa Monica by study of chart and wind and current setting into that place. San Pedro has best anchorage ground, and better protection from prevailing winds. From my constant trading to San Pedro I have always found it a safe place, and that the outside harbor has a natural protection from the prevailing winds that blow there; and, furthermore, never saw any swell setting in to interfere with discharging of deep-water vessels that always lay in the harbor discharging freight.

R. Johannessen, master mariner: Have been in San Pedro Bay and Harbor about a hundred times. Have anchored in roadstead many times. Anchorage ground there is excellent. Am acquainted with bay of Santa Monica for twenty-three years. San Pedro has best anchorage ground, and better protection from prevailing winds.

Is there anything in the proposition of Mr. Corthell and others that the Mendell board were ignorant of the situation and would have reached a different conclusion had they been aware that a wharf such as that of the Southern Pacific could be erected and maintained at Port Los Angeles? There is nothing anywhere to justify the assertion.

I have no doubt from the shipping experience at San Pedro that it would be possible to construct and operate a wharf extending into the roadstead there. The constant use of San Pedro Bay for years for shipping uses demonstrates this.

It is conceded that Mr. Huntington has built a magnificent pier at Port Los Angeles and that he is able to handle shipping and transact business there. There are sometimes difficulties incident to rough water. Trouble of that kind has been lately experienced.

In has been said there never has been an accident at the Santa Monica wharf and that ships have been wrecked at San Pedro. San Pedro Harbor has been utilized for commercial purposes, as the evidence before us shows, from time out of mind. No doubt in stormy seasons vessels can not at all hours lie there in safety, and there is evidence that there have been wrecks within that harbor. It is admitted that certain vessels have drifted ashore at San Pedro. But during the time that Mr. Huntington's wharf has been in operation at Santa Monica there have been no disasters at San Pedro—none whatever. It so happens there have been no very serious storms since that structure has been called into existence, and consequently no disasters at either place. When the Mendell Board examined this subject they did not content themselves with equivocal language, but they announced their conclusions (page 9 of the Mendell report) thus:

> In view of the fact that San Pedro Bay in its natural condition affords better protection both from prevailing winds and from dangerous storms than Santa Monica Bay; that protection can be secured at less cost for equal development of breakwater at the former than at the latter; that a larger area of protected anchorage from the prevailing westerly swells can be secured, the severe storms from the southeast being infrequent, and that there is already an interior harbor that will be a valuable addition to the outer harbor, the Board considers San Pedro Bay as the better location for the deep-water harbor provided for by the act.

It was never supposed by Colonel Mendell or anybody else that a wharf would not stand during ordinary weather at the place pointed out by Mr. Huntington and selected by him. No one has ever argued that the storms upon the southern California coast are severe enough to destroy a well-built pier, unless in exceptional cases.

It is evident from an inspection of the coast of Santa Monica Bay, where the railroad wharf is located, the westerly swells, admitted to be common and severe, must directly affect Santa Monica Bay. There is nothing to prevent such a swell disturbing the sea behind the breakwater proposed by the majority. The southwesterly swells and the westerly swells are those which mariners fear. It is shown by conclusive proof that, while the wind sometimes blows from the southeast, the swell never proceeds from that direction. The San Pedro breakwater is so designed as to completely intercept westerly and southwesterly swells. The breakwater will cut off the swell completely, and it is therefore a matter of indifference whether there is or is not deep water west of Point Firmin.

In the immediate neighborhood of the breakwater at San Pedro the water is not extremely deep; the bottom recedes, proceeding westerly, with considerable rapidity; but Mr. Corthell's diagram portraying the suddenness of the deepening near Point Firmin is not fair. No doubt deep water can be found by proceeding westerly from the point. But if Mr. Corthell will make his soundings southeasterly or southerly or toward Catalina Island he will find a gentle slope and better water than exists near Port Los Angeles.

Such a diagram can be made to show almost anything, depending upon the direction selected.

I have referred several times to the deep-sea matter and have, perhaps, given more attention to the point than it deserves; but I wish to quote briefly from the report of the Craighill board, showing that those gentlemen took the subject into consideration and examined it with care. I read from page 6 of the Craighill report, as follows:

HYDROGRAPHY.

Throughout Santa Monica Bay the depth is very irregular—

That statement is fully justified by the charts—

Abreast of Santa Monica village there is a depth of 40 fathoms 4 miles offshore, but off the beach, south of La Ballona, a submarine plateau 4 miles wide extends for 8 miles to the southwest, with depths very uniformly increasing to 40 fathoms, the bottom being gray sand, mud, and gravel—

This plateau is towards San Pedro from Santa Monica and is not necessarily involved here—

Westward of this plateau, toward Point Dume, the depth increases rapidly to nearly 300 fathoms, carrying 200 fathoms within a mile south of the point, and the bottom is muddy. On the east of this plateau, toward Point Vincente, there is a remarkable submarine valley only 1 mile wide between the 100-fathom curves, carrying from 280 to 100 fathoms to within 1 and 1½ miles of the beach, with a muddy bottom. The eastern side of this valley is very steep, dropping from 40 to 200 fathoms in three-eighths of a mile. The western side is more sloping, but the slope from 100 fathoms is very sharp. It has been named by Professor Davidson the Vincente Submarine Valley. Near the southern end of the bay a well-marked current running to the northward and westward has been observed.

I refer to this description to prove that the Bay of Santa Monica throughout—not merely in one particular point, but throughout—is irregular, and that the uniform grade or slope is largely the offspring of Mr. Corthell's poetic fancy. The report further proceeds:

The line of 10 fathoms, which may be considered the practical outer limit for breakwater construction, and the line of 5 fathoms, which is the inner limit of the deep-water anchorage, for both Santa Monica and San Pedro bays, are shown on the map accompanying this report.

And an inspection of the Coast Survey maps will fully sustain everything I have said upon this proposition.

In the minority report it is said:

It is claimed that the proposed breakwater at San Pedro is not protected from southeast gales; that therefore that locality is not desirable for harbor purposes, and that the land projection which culminates in Point Firmin shelters Santa Monica Bay from these winds. This subject has been carefully considered in the reports already noted, and the conclusion there reached by the gentlemen who examined into the matter was that no danger is to be anticipated from the southeast gales. It may be remarked in this connection that the inner harbor at San Pedro, which it is conceded is perfectly sheltered and upon the surface of which scarcely a ripple is ever observed, is largely exposed to the so-called dangerous southeast gales, and yet the shipping within that inner harbor has never been disturbed thereby. Manifestly, no breakwater can ever protect any harbor from wind; the essential feature in such cases is the guarding against ocean swells. The difficulty in this respect proceeds from the west, and the proposed breakwater at San Pedro will afford complete protection from this peril. A vessel lying within the proposed San Pedro Harbor with sails unfurled might be disturbed by southeast winds, but naked masts could never present sufficient surface for the serious operation of any wind likely to visit that coast.

In his letter heretofore mentioned Mr. Corthell says:

The objection stated by me and others upon this point is that the harbor, not the breakwater, is unprotected from southeast gales, and that the entrance to Wilmington Harbor is entirely unprotected from these gales by the breakwater as designed, and an examination of the charts of the harbor and of the plan will evidence this to anyone.

In the report of the Craighill commission (H. R. Ex. Doc. 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session) we have a map, the second in that publication, from which it appears that the proposed breakwater at San Pedro protects an extended area, including the 7-fathom curve, from winter storms and from the western swells.

The subject of harbor protection is treated of in that report and the conclusion reached that the smooth surface at San Pedro is much more than that at Santa Monica. I call attention specifically to this matter, and invite study of the contrasts.

For the purposes of comparison—

the anchorage areas for the Santa Monica harbors are assumed to be the areas included within the breakwaters, the lines drawn through their ends normal to the shore, and the 5-foot contour; and for the San Pedro Harbor the area included between the breakwater, the line drawn from the end of the breakwater to Deadmans Island, and the 6-foot contour. The deep-water anchorage is assumed to be the area over which there is a depth of at least 30 feet; the remaining area will be referred to as the inner anchorage.

I will ask the Secretary to read, beginning with the last paragraph on page 17 down to the end of page 18 of the pamphlet which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

ADVANTAGES FOR SHELTER AND FOR HANDLING FREIGHT.

For the purposes of comparison, the anchorage areas for the Santa Monica harbors are assumed to be the areas included within the breakwaters, the lines drawn through their ends normal to the shore, and the 6-foot contour; and for the San Pedro Harbor the area included between the breakwater, the line drawn from the end of the breakwater to Deadmans Island, and the 6-foot contour. The deep-water anchorage is assumed to be the area over which there is a depth of at least 30 feet; the remaining area will be referred to as the inner anchorage.

The total anchorage area at the San Pedro Harbor is 1,187 acres. This includes the area in Wilmington Harbor. The deep-water area is 339 acres and the inner anchorage 848 acres. The harbor at Santa Monica village has a total anchorage area of 1,078 acres. The deep-water area is 602 acres and the inner anchorage 476 acres. The harbor above Santa Monica Canyon has a total anchorage area of 994 acres. The deep-water area is 479 acres and the inner anchorage 515 acres. In the Santa Monica harbors the inner anchorage will be very much diminished by the wharves, which must extend completely across it to reach deep water. This is not the case to the same extent in the San Pedro Harbor.

To compare the exposures, it is assumed that so much of the anchorage area as lies north of southeast and southwest lines drawn through the ends of the breakwaters is not fully covered from the heavy swells. The harbor at San Pedro has a protected area of 562 acres and an unprotected area of 335 acres. The harbor at Santa Monica village has a protected area of 209 acres and an unprotected area of 869 acres. The harbor above Santa Monica Canyon has a protected area of 221 acres and an unprotected area of 773 acres.

The harbor above Santa Monica Canyon, within the anchorage limits assumed, has a land frontage 8,000 feet in length available for the construction of wharves. The harbor at Santa Monica village has a similar land frontage 8,000 feet in length. In the harbor first mentioned, however, the land approach to the wharves is narrow and not capable of extension except at great expense, and there is no available place for the construction of interior basins. The conformation of the ground is such that free access to the landing facilities of the harbor would not be easily attainable by all parties engaged in the business of land transportation.

At Santa Monica village, on the other hand, the approaches from the land are more open, and at La Ballona an interior basin could be readily formed. At San Pedro there is a land frontage of 4,300 feet in the outer harbor without including the inner line of the breakwater. Since the breakwater is connected with the shore, a railway can be constructed along it, and wharves can be readily projected from its inner face. This advantage would be sacrificed if a western entrance were established. This gives for the outer harbor an additional frontage of 8,000 feet and a total frontage of 12,300 feet. The frontage of the inner harbor is about 4 miles long. The total frontage for the whole harbor is therefore 33,420 feet, or about 6¼ miles. The approaches are good, as they include both sides of the harbor, and Wilmington Harbor forms a magnificent interior basin.

In every harbor a portion of the area must be more or less exposed, owing to the necessity of providing convenient communication with the sea. In a port of commerce it is of great importance that the harbor should be so located and designed that the landing facilities should be established in the most sheltered part. In the Santa Monica harbors this imperative condition is entirely neglected, the landing facilities being necessarily situated entirely within the exposed area. As a consequence of this the wharves will not be well protected during storms, and small vessels will crowd the quiet spaces of the deep-water anchorage. At the San Pedro Harbor the landing facilities are situated within the unexposed area, and small vessels will find their best shelter in bad weather within the inner harbor.

The deep-water anchorage area is amply sufficient in all the harbors and can in all be readily extended in the future. In the San Pedro Harbor the landing facilities can be greatly extended within the inner harbor without any addition to the outer breakwater. This is not the case in the Santa Monica harbors.

In all the harbors the holding ground is good. Some doubts have been expressed with regard to the character of the holding ground at San Pedro, but after diligent inquiry the board is satisfied that it is as good in this location as in the others.

Mr. WHITE. The Senate will observe, therefore, that the Craighill board, perhaps to a greater extent and more carefully than that presided over by Colonel Mendell, took into consideration the relative value of the protection afforded by each plan of harbor construction, and concluded, in direct antagonism to the opinions of the Southern Pacific engineers, that the San Pedro project would afford more extended safe anchorage facilities.

It is said, and this is one of the favorite arguments of the majority of the committee, that running a line directly from Point Vincente to Point Dume there will be a water inclosure extending landward from the center of such line 12 miles, whereas San Pedro Bay, according to Mr. Corthell's first statement before the Commerce Committee, in 1894, when similarly examined, manifests only 6¼ miles. This may reasonably be said to be an advantage, as far as it goes, favoring Santa Monica. But this circumstance was considered by the boards mentioned, and was not deemed vital or controlling.

You will observe upon the photograph of the Santa Monica shore, which is upon the blackboard, the real character of that so-called bay. It is nothing but an open roadstead; there is a 12-mile indentation, and it must be between 30 and 40 miles from Vincente to Dume, and looking from the shore out to the ocean the exposure is absolute; the waves roll in, as appearing upon the photograph, comparatively uninterrupted. There is but slight evidence of an actual bay in this case.

The wharf of the Southern Pacific Company, around which we are asked to place this governmental protection, is located in Santa Monica Bay, as shown on the photograph, and northerly and westerly of the town of Santa Monica. In my judgment the Mendell board was correct in saying that the very best site to be found in Santa Monica Bay was nearly opposite the town of that name. There the bluff is not remarkable. It recedes as we go east and south, until at South Santa Monica there is no precipice and the favorable conditions spoken of by Colonel Mendell can there be found. If we are to have a harbor in Santa Monica Bay this is the proper location. But such a work would be most accessible. The proprietors of the wharf which we are about to protect preferred a different spot, less open to intrusion and not as readily subject to competition.

In the testimony taken before the Commerce Committee it is said that there is ample room along the shore of the ocean from Santa Monica to the wharf for ten or twelve railroad tracks. The Santa Monica shore from the wharf to the town is an ordinary seabeach. The waves roll over it, not tempestuously, but in a manner usual on the southern California coast. Thousands from the city of Los Angeles visit this region for the purpose of seaside bathing. Santa Monica itself—a very delightful town and growing in seaside importance—is in the immediate vicinity of the most favored bathing spot. There are extensive and finely constructed bath houses, occupied and used in the summer, indeed, to some extent throughout the whole year, but principally in the summer, by anxious crowds coming from the city of Los Angeles and the interior. These people resort to the sea for objects of health and diversion. The presence of one railroad track within the municipality of Santa Monica and upon the seabeach is a positive disadvantage. Any person walking along the bluff, at the foot of which the railroad runs, while a locomotive is passing will find the cinders excessively disagreeable; and while there is yet sufficient space between the bluff and the shore to enable the ordinary pursuits of pleasure which accompany diversions at the seaside, yet if there are to be additional tracks laid along that shore, if railroad freight and passenger traffic is to be carried on there by several railroads, the locality will cease to be available for present uses.

The question as to how many tracks may be placed along that shore is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the board of trustees. No condemnation proceedings can procure a right of way along the ocean within the town limits until after an affirmative vote of the board of trustees. I assume that that board will properly discharge its duties and will not permit the extension of that which is already a nuisance.

But it is contended that the proposed harbor can be reached by means of Santa Monica Canyon. It is possible, and I think practicable, to obtain a grade through the Santa Monica Canyon. But the route is circuitous, and a road thus built would be longer than that of the Southern Pacific Company. But when the shore is reached the expense will have but begun.

If we assume that the breakwater designed by the Southern Pacific engineers would be sufficient and adequate to protect an area great enough to permit the erection of two or three large wharves as proposed, nevertheless the expense is almost prohibitory. It will cost at least three-quarters of a million dollars, and probably more, to build a wharf, to say nothing of the right of way and other difficulties of access. Now, it is proposed in this bill that the Southern Pacific Company shall give the use of their tracks upon this wharf to any railway that will pay a sufficient pro rata proportion of the cost thereof, to be fixed by the Secretary of War. There is now but one track and one wharf. If the business grows to the magnitude expected, these will never suffice. If it does not grow to that magnitude, then there is no justification at all for the proposed expenditure. Mr. Huntington will not make any foolish trades. His road will have an advantage at Port Los Angeles that no other road can enjoy.

At San Pedro, as shown in the report of the engineers, not only is the Southern Pacific already on the water front, but there is also a competing railroad upon the other side of the inner harbor, and while the latter would not be directly connected with the outer harbor, still the proximity is such that there could be no difficulty in the transference of shipping from one point to the other, especially if the inner harbor be deepened under the Benyaurd project.

It is said that the bluff near San Pedro, some 60 feet in height, presents insuperable obstacles to reaching the shore. I do not think it will be necessary for the purposes of commerce for years to come to build piers in any outer harbor on our coast. The inner anchorage will suffice; but, assuming that the demands of trade require such harbor to be reached from shore, there is no difficulty in making a grade, as the Southern Pacific did to the wharf which it commenced to build and afterwards abandoned at San Pedro, and thus reaching the shore. Colonel Craighill says in his report, and all of his colleagues agree with him, that the breakwater itself could be utilized for railroad tracks, thus using the interior of the bay right along the line of the breakwater for slips. This, Mr. Corthell says, is impossible. He takes issue with the engineers upon this proposition. I will quote his language. He says:

> Considering the location of this proposed breakwater—immediately under a vertical bluff, in the open ocean—and the impracticability, as shown by the physical facts, of building a railroad track under the bluff in the protected harbor, it is difficult to see how the top of this dike could be made accessible to railroads, and I think I am safe in saying that on a dike 10 feet above the surface of the water, or even 20 feet above the surface of the water, in such an exposed location a railroad could not be operated, or even maintained upon it, on account of the waves during heavy storms, at least, coming over the top of the breakwater, not only making the track unavailable, but also throwing masses of water upon the wharves placed under it. I have made no estimates of the cost of a breakwater at this place that would admit of the operation of a track upon it and of wharves behind it, but I should think it would cost twice, perhaps three times, as much as the breakwater shown on the plans of the Government engineers.

The Craighill board is positively to the contrary.

> Since the breakwater—
> They say—
> is connected with the shore, a railway can be constructed along it, and wharves can be readily projected from its inner face. This advantage would be sacrificed if a western entrance were established.

At the hearings Colonel Hains, who was a member of the board, gave an opinion of a similar character. He says:

> There is another thing in regard to the continuing breakwater. The first board recommended two breakwaters with a gap. I do not think that there is any trouble about the filling in with sand, which some people apprehend, from the deposits along the shore. If the breakwater is continuous with the shore, it enables a protected area on the inside of this breakwater to be used for docks and that sort of thing. Often the inside breakwaters are used for docks and landings.

The breakwater at San Pedro can be approached by a cut. It is true the Southern Pacific Company claims to own land there. A considerable part of the property on the San Pedro bluff is controlled by that company; not all of it, however. The Government owns a reservation there, and private parties have holdings. However, condemnation proceedings properly conducted will remedy this trouble. The building of a track upon the breakwater will depend upon the demands of business. If the exigencies of the case warranted, a track would be laid upon the dike, and would afford superior facilities for harbor access. It hence appears that there is an available method of reaching an outer harbor at San Pedro preferable to anything at Santa Monica. Of course at San Pedro wharves might be built into the sea, but such a programme would be attended by the expense of which I complain. For years to come there will be ample room in the inner harbor, when improved, for our commerce; and the San Pedro deep-sea anchorage will accommodate vessels at anchor awaiting an opportunity to discharge.

Mr. President, there is another criticism to which I deem it wise to reply. I refer to Mr. Corthell's theory of the littoral current which moves sand in a northerly direction along the coast. He avers that the effect of the breakwater, constructed as proposed by the Craighill board, would be to detain a large amount of these sands near the shore and gradually destroy the harbor, or make it necessary to dredge extensively. Perhaps some little accumulation might occur. If so, it could be readily removed. Nowadays a reasonable amount of harbor dredging is an attendant upon nearly all public works of this character. One of the few exceptions is afforded by the Wilmington inner harbor, which has ever since governmental improvement always kept itself clear. But both Major Raymond and Colonel Hains are positive that no danger is to be apprehended from any sand deposit. They have studied the question carefully; it is considered in the reports from which I have quoted. All the Government experts rest their reputations as experts upon the proposition that no serious harm will accrue. Mr. Corthell, in the communication with which he has honored me—though delivery of the same was omitted—informs us that there are known instances of moving sands impelled by littoral currents upon the Pacific coast. He tells me that I am acquainted with the condition of affairs at San Diego Bay, and that I must be aware that at the point where a jetty is now under process of construction at the entrance to that bay sand accumulates.

This statement is true, but the movement of said particles there is manifestly attributable to the great rush of water into the bay attending the tidal rise. The torrent flowing with wonderful power in or out of the narrow harbor entrance is a sight worth seeing. This naturally disturbs the sand and the inward current tends to accumulate the material below the jetty rapidly and obviously. I attracted the attention of Mr. Corthell to the fact that a ship laden with coal some years ago was wrecked at San Pedro; and that a large quantity of the coal was picked up afterwards south of that point, at the town of Long Beach. I asked him how he accounted for that consistently with his theory. He gave the explanation which I shall read, which, I must confess, does not seem to me to be entirely conclusive. The following is the statement:

> Senator WHITE, of California. Before you reach that, I want to say a word. I remember the circumstance of a vessel loaded with coal being wrecked in the neighborhood of San Pedro and sinking there, and a good deal of that coal being picked up on Long Beach. Long Beach is located southerly from San Pedro?
> Mr. CORTHELL. Yes.
> Senator WHITE, of California. If the shore currents are northerly, how do you account for the coal being carried to Long Beach?
> Mr. CORTHELL. I had a memorandum made to explain that. That fact was called to my attention, and I will give you the reason for it. As I said to Senator NELSON, there are occasional southwestern swells so great that they may reverse the current for the time being, and they would move obstacles on the bottom. The current does not move coal; it moves fine particles of sand. What moved that coal across the bay was this: These lines here [indicating on the diagram] are kelp, which indicate rocky areas. That coal dropped on the rocky bottom, was affected by the heavy waves, and it simply drifted over the bottom and across it until it struck Long Beach and was thrown upon it by the waves.

Mr. President, in the first place, southwesterly swells are not uncommon; the westerly is the regular swell incident to that coast; and here we have a statement that this discriminating current, alluded to by Mr. Corthell, does not move coal, while it moves fine particles of sand! This littoral current will not move coal, but it will move fine particles of sand. We reach the remarkable conclusion that coal drifts south and sand goes north; that one is moved by a current which influences coal, and the other by a current influencing sand!

Mr. President, it is a matter of fact, notorious upon that coast, that objects frequently float southerly. In two or three cases where persons lost their lives by drowning the remains were picked up south of the scene of disaster. It may be said that this was only an occasional manifestation, but that it was not the rule, that the current usually tends in the other direction. But no such deductisn is authorized. But if there were any danger of the accumulation of sand at Point Firmin, inside this breakwater, how is it that there is at that place to-day a rocky bluff? How is it that there is no sand spit? How is it that there are no sand dunes, no accumulations around Point Firmin indicating the tendency claimed? If the sand drifts, as stated by this expert, northerly, it would naturally be detained in the neighborhood of Point Firmin, and would certainly extend to that point. Right here I may remark—perhaps I should have said it in connection with another point—that there are no severe storms beating against Point Firmin. The unworn base of the bluff proves this. The material is soft and could not resist heavy waves. The unscathed shore disposes of the pretense that San Pedro Bay is a storm center.

Mr. President, the inner harbor at San Pedro is exposed to these so-called terrible southeasterly storms. The land lying upon both sides of the inner harbor is comparatively level. There is nothing to prevent winds sweeping across the inner harbor; and yet no one ever heard of a vessel within its confines being injured by any storm from any quarter. The swell which does injury, which strains chains, which divorces the anchor from the ship, comes from the west; the southeast wind, seldom serious even in connection with the swell, must be harmless without it.

Mr. President, in opening this argument I said that it was problematical whether the proposed structure at Santa Monica would ever be of much protective value. In support of my assertion I have the testimony of Major Raymond, who was examined before the committee. He made the following comments in this connection. It is of importance and I direct the attention of the Senate to it:

Major RAYMOND. I can state generally what were the essential differences which we thought were in favor of San Pedro as a location, as compared with locations farther up the coast. To my own mind, as I remember it now, the extension of the present harbor of San Pedro and the improvements there, at an inconsiderable expense to the Government, made a rather remarkable impression.

Senator WHITE, of California. In what respect?

Major RAYMOND. Because jetty improvements of that kind have not, as a rule, been successful in this country. The depth of water at San Pedro was increased from 2 or 3 feet—the original depth—to about 14 feet at mean low water. The thing that made it especially interesting to me was the examination of the changed front in the inner harbor, which was so trifling as compared with the other places on the Atlantic coast. All the phenomena seemed to me less marked than any other place where I have been in practice. The shoaling was slow there. The tide is about 5 feet, I think. That there should be a jetty harbor of that kind so successful, and that the depth of water should be so increased, and that the problem should be so simply solved, was a matter of very great interest to me. I could see that the inner basin, the inner harbor, the inner anchorage, could be extended very readily without difficulty; and that was a feature in the future improvement which was very advantageous.

The inner anchorage is a very important thing, especially in time of war. Torpedo boats can run into the inner harbor, protected from the fire of the enemy. That was the thing most advantageous. When we came to examine the problem, step by step, we did not find any point in which the other location seemed superior to San Pedro, and we found several points in which we thought San Pedro superior to the other location. My own opinion is that a breakwater harbor, such as that proposed at Santa Monica, parallel to a nearly rectilinear shore, is fatal. I do not know of any place where there is an exactly similar harbor, and I can not conceive a place where I would be willing to construct it where the outlying breakwater is parallel to the shore, as in this case.

Senator WHITE, of California. What are the cardinal defects in that kind of a harbor?

Major RAYMOND. Generally speaking, the accessibility would be very good for a harbor of that kind, but the main defect in such a harbor is that the landing facilities are in the most exposed part of the harbor. Generally, motions of the waves are deflected by the ends of the breakwater, and the disturbance is generally created in the parts of the harbor farthest from the points of deflection. I do not remember that kind of a harbor in any place.

Afterwards, Colonel Hains, who was examined upon the same topic, thought that the wharves proposed by the Southern Pacific to be erected could be protected by the breakwater. I will read his statement in that respect:

Senator WHITE, of California. What do think of the feasibility of such a harbor as that designed at Santa Monica?

Colonel HAINS. In what respect?

Senator WHITE, of California. Would it be a success?

Colonel HAINS. Do you mean the breakwater?

Senator WHITE, of California. Yes.

Colonel HAINS. I think that this breakwater there would protect these wharves [indicating on the map]. I do not think they need much protection. The fact that they use these wharves so much without a breakwater is pretty good evidence that they need very little protection from the outside. I think that a breakwater made of plank would accomplish the purpose.

If there were severe storms I presume it would be admitted that a breakwater of plank would not be very desirable, or there would be no excuse for this application for a three-million-dollar appropriation.

Colonel Hains thinks the wharves designed would probably be protected by a breakwater. But his declaration shows that he does not anticipate storms.

Major Raymond, who has had more experience in breakwater construction than anyone who was before us, is of the opinion that the proposed appropriation would not accomplish its purpose, and says that he would not be willing to undertake the work.

Now, Mr. President, we are here, I presume, to enact a law providing for an appropriation to be expended for some useful purpose and under conditions giving reasonable assurances of success. We are not here to experiment. Colonel Hains says, in speaking of the character of the Port Los Angeles breakwater—I read from page 30:

I do not think that a breakwater parallel with the coast is as good as one which connects with the shore, but it might accomplish the purpose.

Shall we engage in the business of constructing a harbor at a condemned place upon an uncertainty as to the result? Shall we spend this money upon a spot regarding which the testimony is at least conflicting, and concerning which our accredited engineer, who has had great special experience, expresses an adverse opinion? Is it proper thus to risk public moneys?

There are a number of incidental matters which I do not care to allude to now, but which may be mentioned hereafter. However, I will mention one. Commander Taylor, of the United States Navy, was engaged for some time in coast and geodetic survey upon the Pacific. His views were placed before the board of engineers at Los Angeles, and Mr. Corthell and members of the majority of the Commerce Committee rely not a little upon his opinions. He strongly favors Santa Monica. A memorandum of his theories and experiences was called to the attention of the Craighill board by Mr. Hood, who seemed to be advised concerning the same. That document is the strongest part of the Santa Monica presentation, and as I am endeavoring to state this whole case without reservation, I will ask that it be read, and will follow it with a statement by Professor Davidson upon the other side of the matter. I refer to page 109 of the executive document from which I have already made several extracts. I ask that the same be read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MEMORANDUM REGARDING A BREAKWATER AT SANTA MONICA.

For many years the need of a harbor at Santa Monica has been apparent. Southern California is separated from the rest of the State by mountain systems and needs a port as an outlet for its products. The center of the business activity of southern California is Los Angeles. This city has grown to be too great to let it be anticipated that that center will be changed. Indeed, the fertile plain and the adjacent valleys of which it is now the depot would require such a port if Los Angeles were not there.

San Diego, whatever its qualities as a seaport, is too far to the south; it has practically no back country of sufficient importance to justify a great seaport. To the east and southeast is the peninsula of Lower California, and farther in that direction lie the northern provinces of Mexico. But the ports of the Gulf of California will intercept traffic from that direction. To the north and northeast is a country of great productiveness, but that country is nearer to Los Angeles as a depot, and will find its outlet to the sea near that city. As to the harbor of San Diego, it may be said (as of all harbors) that it is not entirely satisfactory. San Francisco itself, which ranks as the greatest of bar harbors, is dangerous to enter after long-continued stormy weather. From Puget Sound to Magdalena Bay, Mexico, few harbors exist, and none of great convenience. It is natural, therefore, that San Diego Harbor should be regarded of value on account of the great scarcity of harbors on the coast. It is not denied that it could be improved and its bar perhaps removed. The situation there is favorable to certain classes of engineering work, but the object of such work is not apparent when the position is not the natural sea outlet of an important tract of country.

A creek makes into the land at Wilmington and San Pedro, affording a shelter to small vessels, and expensive improvements have been carried on for several years by the army engineers, which have slightly benefited it, but, at the best that can be hoped, it can never have the accommodations of a great harbor. A breakwater to include sufficient area of shelter could be built, but it would include some shoals and rocks inside of it, and would also receive whatever discharge of sediment there would be from the creek. This creek was used in the beginning by schooners and small craft, which were sufficient for the trade of the then unsettled country. The circumstances of its location, favorable for such craft, are unfavorable for the formation of a great seaport such as the commerce of southern California now demands.

We come now to that locality which appears specially to be favored by nature, Santa Monica.

The bay of Santa Monica is, in its combination of natural features, unique on the Pacific coast. Here the depth of water increases from the beach outward with an ease and gradual slope for several miles. Here a breakwater can be established to inclose and shelter a capacious harbor, without being in water so deep as to make its construction impracticable or even difficult.

The marked feature of the Pacific coast is the steep slope of the bottom as we move from shore to seaward. This rule has few exceptions, and it results that along the entire coast a breakwater to inclose a sufficient sheltered area would have to be placed in such deep water as to be impossible of construction.

Among the few exceptions is the bay of Santa Monica. It is a remarkable coincidence that the coast line in a deep curve here approaches nearer than at any other point to Los Angeles and to the fertile region of which it is the depot.

The bay of Santa Monica has, along most of its shore line, this quality of gradual deepening of the water, the bay of itself being occupied by a submarine plateau unique upon the Pacific coast. But certain portions of the shore line of the bay have other advantages in addition. The town of Santa Monica is situated at a point on the shore near a neighboring range of mountains against or toward which blow the only winds of violence. The force of the wind blowing against a great barrier is deadened for some distance to windward of such barrier, and this probably accounts for the well-known fact that the winds at Santa Monica do not blow with violence. The swell which rolls in at this anchorage is much modified, even in the worst weather, by the effect of the large islands to seaward and by the deep recessed position of this portion of the bay shore.

I have had considerable experience in this bay while conducting the surveys carried on there, and have laid at anchor through all seasons of the year, at and near Santa Monica, on the Government vessel which I commanded. I have never seen any weather in which a vessel could not ride at her anchors there in safety, and but few occasions when unloading at a wharf was impracticable.

If southern California needs a port. I am confident that Santa Monica is the only practicable place to construct such a port, and that southern California does urgently need a port there can be no longer any question. The mountain ranges intervening between the southern and central parts of the State are of so difficult a character for railroads that the hauling of freights across these mountains is very expensive, and the products of the southern section of the State have now become so numerous and important that the construction of a proper harbor in southern California can not longer be neglected. Also we have to regard Los Angeles no longer as a way station, but as a truly terminal point for several systems of railroads now built or to be built. With such a port close to the suburbs of Los Angeles, she would possess a most attractive route for the transportation of products from the other side of the Pacific to her own vicinity, and thence across the continent.

Is a breakwater at Santa Monica practicable, convenient, economical?

Having had, some years ago, the opinion of an able and experienced civil engineer as to the amount and quality of rock to be obtained in the hills abreast of the end of this breakwater, after his personal examination, made at my request, I am justified by the opinion in taking for granted a plentiful supply of good rock at that point. With this basis of supply close at hand, I would propose a breakwater in 40 feet depth of water, 3,000 yards long, in a straight line parallel to the shore, or with a slight angle at the center of the line, the angle being convex to seaward, as shown on the chart submitted in blue. A section of it is shown on accompanying sheet. It would be 45 feet high, 20 feet across the top, 225 feet across the bottom. Its inner face would have the natural slope of dumped rock, its seaward face would be extended until its profile would be a modified form of that at Plymouth, England. This cross section would contain 677 square yards, and the whole breakwater, 3,000 yards long, would contain 2,021,000 cubic yards. I have taken as a basis of cost the prices at which contractors have successfully delivered stone at the breakwater now building by the United States engineers at Rockport, Mass., being an average for two years of 65 cents per ton, or allowing 2 tons per cubic yard, $1.30 per cubic yard. The difficulty and expense are, however, much greater in delivering rock there than they would be at Santa Monica. At the latter the hills which contain the rock are at a distance of only 2,300 yards, across water of moderate depths, to the nearest end of the breakwater. A tramway on piles can be constructed easily and cheaply to connect the two, and the quarries can be located in the hills at an elevation sufficient to cause gravity to move the loaded cars down, and bring back by their weight the empty cars. It is reasonable, therefore, to regard this estimate of $1.30 per cubic yard as being largely in excess of the probable cost. I have, however, added to this amount 33⅓ per cent, to cover the installation of working plant, the opening of quarry, the building of tramway, and all contingencies, as follows:

To excavate 2,100,000 cubic yards and deliver same in place, at $1.30 per cubic yard	$2,730,000
To install plant, etc., and for all contingencies, 33⅓ per cent	910,000
Total	3,640,000

It is my belief that this sum is much in excess, and that a breakwater can be built for $2,500,000.

I will mention here that a smaller breakwater could be placed in 30 feet depth of water, 2,000 yards long, and of similar though smaller section than the above, at a cost of $1,800,000, and would afford a good shelter. It would not, however, possess the qualities of a great port, either in itself or in its powers of expansion for future needs, and it is a great port which southern California now demands for its growing trade.

Under the shelter of 3,000 yards breakwater, with wharves properly planned and constructed, 130 ships of 300 feet length could lie alongside the wharves and leave space there and in the anchorage ground between them and the breakwater for 200 more vessels of various sizes. A breakwater 2,000 yards long in 30 feet depth of water would form an excellent shelter, but I would recommend one 3,000 yards long in 40 feet depth of water as the wiser project of the two. It would, in fact, be a perfect project, leaving nothing to be chanced. In this depth a breakwater will be as distant from shore as will ever be necessary. Greater area of shelter, when desired, may be secured by extensions of the breakwater on its own line parallel to the shore.

Finally, I submit a plan of such breakwater, shown in blue print on the chart. I submit also a section of same, showing details of proposed construction.

Respectfully, H. C. TAYLOR,

NOTE.—The drawings, etc., referred to by Commander Taylor have been mislaid, the foregoing memorandum having been written several years ago.

Mr. WHITE. I have had this document read because it has been relied upon with confidence by the advocates of Santa Monica, and although it does not in any manner sustain any claim to superiority on the part of the site upon which the Southern Pacific Company has made its pier, I presume that Taylor had reference to a harbor opposite the town. But there is an air of partisanship about Lieutenant Taylor's statement which I do not quite understand. For instance, he refers to an improvement at the inner harbor at San Pedro as being slightly beneficial, for he says:

A creek makes into the land at Wilmington and San Pedro, affording a shelter to small vessels, and expensive improvements have been carried on for several years by the Army engineers, which have slightly benefited it.

The engineer's report is that the benefit has not been slight, but that it has been remarkable. There has been an increase of depth from 2 feet to 14 feet at low tide and an 18-foot low tide depth is anticipated. Then Lieutenant Taylor refers to the discharge of sediment from Wilmington Creek. There is no sedimentary discharge of an injurious kind. No deposits on the bar or outside can be found. I must say that Lieutenant Taylor seems to be a special advocate. His figures are peculiar, his calculations unique. I am quite willing that his expressions shall be read side by side with those of General Craighill's board.

But if there is any man upon the Pacific Coast who is thoroughly familiar with all topics pertaining to hydrography and who has given to Pacific harbor work the patient toil of almost a lifetime, that man is Prof. George Davidson, a gentleman of great attainments and sterling worth. His views of Santa Monica Bay I wish to put before the Senate. No more valuable expert opinion can be found in the United States or elsewhere, for that matter. I ask that the Secretary read the memorandum commencing on page 124, Executive Document 41.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest to my colleague that he state that Professor Davidson has had charge of the Coast and Geodetic Survey on the Pacific Coast for forty years.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. He is the author of the Coast Pilot, and is the best living authority on nautical matters relating to the hydrography of the ocean and coast that there is on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say further that during the hearings I requested Mr. Corthell to state whether in his opinion Professor Davidson was not an authority upon these matters, and he responded by saying that he had great regard for him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

MEMORANDUM BY PROF. GEORGE DAVIDSON, UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 7, 1892.

My experience begins with June, 1852, when the disabled steamer California anchored in San Pedro Bay. The navy-yard commission was on board of her, and to prevent great delay the members were carried to San Francisco by the United States Coast Survey steamer Active.

I mention this merely because the Active was then transporting me for the chronometer determinations of the longitude of all southern points with San Francisco. Before this incident, and afterwards, my duties compelled me to land through the surf at all the exposed stations on the main shore and the Santa Barbara Islands. And this bears upon the following statement:

In December, 1852, after selecting a base line, I was waiting for a steamer at the old adobe of San Pedro. The brig Fremont was at anchor off San Pedro, and rode out a strong southeast gale of two or three days' duration. (See Coast Pilot 1889, pages 38 and 40.) The judgment there expressed is that formed from my own experience through subsequent years, the experience of Coast Survey officers, naval and civilian, and of captains whom I have known to be familiar with the place.

At the time of the Fremont's riding out the gale I had no doubt that I could have landed on the beach in a well-manned boat from the Fremont.

I have learned no facts to weaken my judgment expressed in the Coast Pilot. Vessels that have dragged into danger—and they have been remarkably few in the last forty-two years—have anchored in shoal water too close inshore, at anchor not well found in ground tackle, or both; and I express my judgment with confidence because I had command of the surveying brig R. H. Fauntleroy for four years in the waters from San Francisco to the Gulf of Georgia, and have anchored hundreds of times over every character of bottom and varying depths of water, under stress of weather, in exposed situations, with strong currents, and in very heavy weather. The northern weather is much heavier than the southern.

In our "southeasters," the swell of the Pacific comes from the southwest and along the greater part of the coast, breaks squarely upon the shore, reaching from profound depths at a very short distance from land. The only fairly protected part of the coast is that from Point Conception eastward and southward to between San Pedro and San Diego. There is, however, a marked peculiarity of the winter storms of this coast which I have expressed in the Coast Pilot, the farther north we go in winter the heavier are the gales. In this low latitude of 33½° the winter storms are relatively not severe, and, combined with this character of the storms, the great islands of Santa Barbara form barriers against the full force of the winter swell.

In the latitude of San Francisco, 37½°, the southwest swell frequently breaks all over the San Francisco bar in 6 or more fathoms of water, while the swell of the same storm would not break on the bar of San Diego, where the depth of water is less than 4 fathoms. (See Coast Pilot, page 18.) San Pedro is but 95 miles from San Diego and not so open to the swell, because the great islands of San Clemente and Santa Catalina serve to break up the broad ocean swell of the winter gales.

This low latitude and these protecting islands are very important factors in judging of the safety of any anchorage. We know that it occasionally breaks on the shoal spots of 9½ fathoms off Cape Mendocino, and I have laid off the breaking bar of Humboldt for two weeks, but at the same time there would be no break in San Diego bar and no danger in San Pedro Bay. From the summit of Tamalpais I have seen a large English vessel forced to leave her anchorage on the southern edge of San Francisco bar before the swell was breaking, and such a vessel would lie in absolute safety at the same time in San Pedro Bay.

Smaller vessels at San Pedro, even well found in ground tackle, necessarily do not care to ride out a "southeaster" there, with its wear and tear and the annoyances, when the lee of Santa Catalina Island is only 18 miles distant and affording them ample protection. In this respect the anchorage is almost as much favored as Hueneme, San Buenaventura, and Santa Barbara.

One plain proof of the comparative weakness of the destructive action of the southeast storms on this southern coast is seen in the very slow wearing away of the sandy cliffs and of the bluff immediately at San Pedro; nor could the exposed wharves of this region stand if the destructive forces of the winter storms was great.

In regard to the anchorage of San Pedro, I have always believed that there was good bottom for holding ground. The bay is the northwestern limit of a very extensive plateau of comparatively shoal water along the seaboard from Point Firmin to about Newport, and the whole country behind the shore is sandy and so low that in winter it is flooded for miles inland by the rains and the overflowing of the low banks of the numerous streams frequently changing their courses. The detritus from these streams is moved seaward and principally to the westward over this plateau, and helping to extend it, by the action of the inshore eddy current.

I believe that this material, mud, sand, and gravel, is sufficiently deep to give good holding ground for any sized vessel if properly found in ground tackle.

I may mention here that for many years I have believed that San Pedro Bay is an admirable location for a breakwater to form a first-class harbor of refuge against winter storms, when the commerce of the southern coast demands it. Gen. B. S. Alexander and myself frequently discussed the importance of a breakwater here, because I was not enamored of the smaller temporary jetty scheme which he had proposed. He was fully alive to the great advantage of a breakwater on a large plan, but he believed the commerce did not then warrant it, and that the Government would not then sanction it; and that the relief he proposed was temporarily sufficient. With the chart of the Coast Survey before us we have drawn rough lines of the suggested breakwater to cover the exigencies of vessels entering the harbor from the west or around the exterior extremity of the breakwater, and to give free movement to the inshore eddy current carrying its material to the westward. (He utilized this movement of material in planning the present jetty.)

My study of the great breakwaters of Europe has satisfied my judgment, and I see clearly that a capital harbor can be formed in San Pedro Bay by a breakwater in 10 fathoms of water, and that from my visits to Catalina Island building stone can be had in any quantity, if the rock of San Pedro hill is too soft, as I believe it is.

SANTA MONICA BAY.

I am not unfamiliar with Santa Monica Bay, but do not know it so well as I know San Pedro. I think the same would be said by all sailing and steamship captains on the southern seaboard.

I was along the "West Beach" as early as 1852 and 1853. In 1872 I had the following experience on the shores of Santa Monica Bay. With a loaded wagon I followed the beach from the arroyo east of Santa Monica to Point Dume. The high bluffs and cliffs came so sharply to the shore, and the arroyos there so deep that no road was practicable above high water, and I had to travel along the beach at low water. At Point Dume a very fierce westerly wind sprang up and retarded my operations so that in returning to Santa Monica I was on the beach through two low waters. I found the beach torn away along the whole shore line, and met with rocky obstructions, which in some cases had been wholly uncovered by the washing away of the sands. As we approached Santa Monica the evidences of this destructive action became more and more marked, and for the last 2 or 3 miles the beach was torn away from 10 to 12 feet in depth. We met a friend from the Santa Monica arroyo driving his buggy on the inner edge of the beach of four days before, where he was 10 to 12 feet above the new beach, and he was in such a hazardous position that we had to relieve him. When I soon afterwards left Los Angeles via San Pedro there were no signs whatever of damage done to the beach there.

Afterwards when I was appealed to for a letter recommending the location of Santa Monica for a commercial wharf I related the above facts and refused to give an unqualified indorsement of the location.

During the hydrographic survey of Santa Monica Bay from Point Vincente to Point Dume by the Coast Survey, the officer commanding the surveying vessel reported that when at anchor in the vicinity of Santa Monica, with a strong westerly breeze blowing, and the inshore eddy current running to the northward along the shore, the vessel rode to the current and her rolling in the swell falling directly on shore was so large and disagreeable that the vessel had to weigh anchor and seek a more comfortable berth.

I have had no personal experience of the winter storms at the head of Santa Monica Bay. A glance at the chart will demonstrate that it is more squarely open to the southwest swell than San Pedro.

In the winter of 1888-89, when my party was on the Los Angeles plains, I visited the wharf at Newport to learn what effect the winter's storms had upon it. This wharf is situated 15 miles eastward of San Pedro, and is more exposed to the open sea. It is located at the head of a submarine valley, just as that at Redondo Beach in Santa Monica Bay, but the storms had not sprung a plank. (See Coast Pilot, page 35, bottom.) At the same time I understood that the end of the wharf at Redondo had been badly damaged. (Coast Pilot, page 46.)

In conclusion, I may say that a few years since I was consulted to express an opinion upon the feasibility of a harbor or wharf or anchorage in Santa Monica Bay, between Point Dume Cove and the vicinity of La Ballona. I presented what facts I then had, exhibited tracings of the original surveys, and made such explanations to the deeply interested parties that they abandoned the project.

GEORGE DAVIDSON.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this résumé of the situation by the best man upon the Pacific Coast, one who knows more about the hydrographic conditions surrounding this issue than any other individual, can not but be a most valuable contribution to this discussion.

Not only was Professor Davidson's information before the Craighill board, but the statement of Lieutenant Taylor was likewise received. The decision of the board was made upon a complete case. Lieutenant Taylor has recently declared that he adheres to the opinion above cited, and Professor Davidson has informed me that he sees no reason to depart from the opinion which has been repeated here to-day.

There was much testimony before the Craighill board supporting the views of Professor Davidson. The hearing lately conducted by the Commerce Committee is of little moment when contrasted with the examination made by the board of engineers of 1892.

If Senators who care to thoroughly understand this case will read the evidence and exhibits returned by the board of 1892 the justice of my remark will be conceded. That board had all the information given before the Commerce Committee, except only that at that time the Southern Pacific wharf was not in operation. I imagine that the majority of the members of the Committee on Commerce (I do not include the chairman) have not thoroughly digested the evidence reported by the Craighill board. On page 62 of that paper will be found the statement of Mr. Johnson, with whom I was well acquainted. I have much confidence in his accuracy. He does not express himself, perhaps, with that technical correctness which is preferable in such controversies, but his remarks are to the point. He resided in San Pedro for years and spoke with knowledge. I ask the Secretary to read the statement of Mr. H. C. Johnson, commencing at the foot of page 62, to the end of the statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. H. C. JOHNSON. Well, I will say the little facts I know about the harbor. I came here in 1852, in December, forty years ago, in the bark America. I went to anchor in the Bay of San Pedro; rode out two heavy southeasters with safety; two anchors, one with 45 and the other with 50 fathoms of chain. Then from that time until 1854 I lived at San Pedro, on the point which they call now Timms Point, in that neighborhood. Saw vessels coming there, few, as a matter of course, and two little steamers that were running there then, the only steamers on the coast—the Seabright and the Ohio. And they got there in all kinds of waters, and, with the exception of one losing her anchor once without having their chain shackled, there was never any trouble about riding out the gale, so far as the holding ground was concerned, within a couple of miles of the bluff. Southeast from there to here there is more or less loose sand. Of course, in the southeast wind, the only wind that is liable to do any damage, the vessels would naturally drift inshore toward the water, where the anchorage will hold better. In 1854 I was engaged by John Ord, the United States surveyor at the time, to run him about the coast, surveying—him and his party. I was engaged—the vessel and myself. And I got in the Bay of San Pedro there in all kinds of weather during the winter months in 1853, 1854, and 1855, and part of 1856; got to anchor there in the night and day, and all kinds of waters, and I never had any trouble of laying there safe, as far as the anchorage is concerned, to hold, as long as the moorage and tackles are good. Since that time, for fourteen years, I was running in and out the bay, night and day, any kind of weather, summer and winter; anchored in every place and any place within the anchorage as laid down in our official chart, and never had any trouble. And from that time I stopped following the sea and having anything to do with the vessels. But I resided in the neighborhood and saw every vessel there. And no vessels ever dragged their anchorage who had their anchors clear. Those who dragged their anchorage either parted their chain or they had a fouled anchor which they neglected to clear before the storm came up.

Now, with regard to the inner harbor, we all know there is about 18 feet of water there to go over at high tide. Vessels go in there and they are well secured. They are like in a pond when they are in there. And the outer harbor is protected from all winds, with the exception of the east and southeast. The southwest wind that is prevailing here during the months of February and March, and sometimes a part of April, they are the strongest gales we have on this coast, which every seafaring man knows, because they blow more toward shore than any other wind; raise a heavier sea. San Pedro there is protected by Point Firmin. It is only the wind from the east and southeast. Catalina Island protects part of the harbor, but not sufficient for vessels to lie perfectly smooth in smooth water.

Now, with the money that has been expended in that harbor there, with very little breakwater in sufficient water there to build it on a solid foundation, which is not to be found in every other place, a small breakwater would inclose there a couple of thousand acres for their deep-sea harbor. The inside harbor is nearly as good as finished. And we would have plenty of facilities for all the railroad companies, for all the community that would ever live in that neighborhood, for warehouses and everything else; lots of fine, level soil, and the facilities would be great. I heard a gentleman this morning speaking about ships going up to the Columbia River to get to Santa Monica. I have followed the sea since 1841, and I couldn't think even Columbus himself would have traveled so far to find the port of San Pedro or Santa Monica as to go to the Columbia River. Any vessel—or in fact, to make it short, allow me to state that we must in the future look to our trade by water. We expect to have communication from South America, West Indies, or at least Central America and Mexico. To have that trade we are nearest to Los Angeles of any of the towns.

In regard of making harbors, what does a seaman want? A good lighthouse? We have got it in San Pedro. We have got Catalina lying out there for a point of land to navigate by. We have a Government reservation at San Pedro, if the Government wants to build any fortification or anything. They have 500 square varas of land there and, in fact, any facility anybody wants to have for the sake of a harbor.

Now, in regard to the time between San Francisco and here, the freight and the passenger traffic that has been carried in former years is nearly done away with. Everything goes by railroad that come from there. We must not look to San Francisco for our trade. We must look to the East by water to have cheap transportion. Consequently, if we get it by water we are nearest to Los Angeles of any port. Any little freight or passengers that come from San Francisco to Santa Monica they gain a little time, that is true. But, outside of that, what is there in Santa Monica to protect shipping? It is open to the south, and we know we have heavy gales from the south and southwest. They speak about water being smooth there. I have been there hundreds of times, and always found plenty of surf for the bathers to bathe in, and heavy swells. I have known vessels to drag there, and they had to send steamers there in the month of May, 1878, to pull them out, keep them from going ashore, heavy swell, undertow, and one thing and another. Anchors didn't hold up laying alongside of the wharf. They were destroyed there.

In regard to the anchorage outside in Santa Monica, I can't tell, for the reason I never sounded much, other than the Point Dume. I was up there with John Ord, and he sounded there and put some signals ashore.

In regard to Redondo, my friend here has said all that could be said in regard to it. There is deep water, plenty of it; protected from the southeast, it is true, but it is open to the westward. If the gentlemen wish to inquire in regard to anything else I would like to state. I don't like to take up all your time.

Mr. WHITE. This is the opinion of a man of experience, who derived his knowledge not from theories and statements of others, but from his own interpretation of events which had transpired under his direct notice.

I do not propose to expend any time with the proposition that it would be of advantage to have the harbor at Santa Monica because of its greater proximity to the city of Los Angeles, for I do not believe that that fact is of sufficient importance to affect the result. Nor do I care to discuss the relative merits of the two localities; the superior advantages of Santa Monica as a most delightful seaside resort are too well known to require elaboration. Commercial considerations should control our decision.

I have just procured the time and distance tables issued by the Southern Pacific Company for the use of its employees exclusively, and by which its trains are operated and its freight tariffs made. This schedule shows that the distances from Los Angeles to San Pedro and Port Los Angeles, respectively, are as follows:

From Los Angeles to San Pedro, 22.10 miles.

From Los Angeles to Port Los Angeles, 20.70 miles.

I have already called the attention of the Senate to the circumstance that at San Pedro, or Wilmington, there is a large area in immediate proximity to the inner harbor owned by the State of California, inalienable because of its tide character, and subject to use under limited franchises, and therefore held for the benefit of the public. I think I have already shown that it is difficult to imagine the possibility of any other institution than the Southern Pacific Company obtaining access to the water of Santa Monica Bay where Port Los Angeles is located except at a very great expenditure of money. In my opinion no other wharf will be built there for years.

Mr. President, what is the amendment which I have introduced and upon which I ask a vote? What is the proposition which I make to the Senate regarding the subject? The gist of the matter is the making of an appropriation and the expenditure of the money at either San Pedro or Port Los Angeles, the location to be determined by a board consisting of an officer of the United States Navy, of rank not less than commander, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; a member of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, to be selected by the Secretary of War, and a member of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, to be selected by the Superintendent of the Survey.

Now, I ask those who are disposed to be fair, who wish this important subject determined accurately, what objection can be rationally made to this plan. An objection might, indeed, be urged upon the part of those who advocate San Pedro and who are interested on the part of the Government in the disbursement of public moneys, upon the ground that two boards have already reported against Santa Monica, and therefore it may be said that we are going too far in selecting a third tribunal when we have two positive reports made by competent persons. In offering the amendment I do not in the slightest degree impugn the motive, question the integrity, or doubt the capacity of the eight distinguished gentlemen who have passed upon this subject. I believe that as to the location of the harbor their views are correct. I have entire confidence in the accuracy of their positions, but a majority of the Commerce Committee and several Senators who affirm that they have thought about this subject for seven or eight years announce that the engineers are wrong; that the boards are mistaken; that these eight impartial, honest servants of the Government are all misinformed; that among these eight scientific men of integrity there was not one competent to pass judgment or able to reach the true conclusion. There seems to be a notion in some quarters that the Mendell and Craighill boards were prejudiced. Why, I am at loss to know. There is no evidence or suspicion justifying such a conclusion, unless it be found in the opinion of a majority of the committee to the effect that both boards reached erroneous results.

But, Mr. President, as soon as it was asserted or intimated that there had not been an absolutely impartial and unbiased examination, as soon as it was intimated that the second board was influenced by the first board, and that there was an esprit de corps existing among those officers which made it impossible for one to determine anything against the other, it was suggested by one of my associates of the Commerce Committee that we might make the appropriation and leave the determination of this issue between these two points to an admittedly uninfluenced tribunal appointed pursuant to a plan agreed on by Congress.

I am not irrevocably committed to the plan proposed in my amendment. I have no desire to provide for the selection of a board which will not do equal, exact, and complete justice to all. I want a board satisfactory to the most critical. I want no one save persons of integrity, of capacity, and without partiality. I wish a board upon whom those who favor Santa Monica and those who prefer San Pedro can alike look with confidence and upon whose judgment any right-thinking man should be willing to rest. But what do we encounter? It is to this most indefensible part of the Santa Monica contention that I attract the attention of Senators. Here we have a harbor site condemned officially. It has no legal indorsement. The employed agents of interested parties, and with whom certain Senators seem to concur, declare that we should reject all the evidence bearing official authenticity. The point is made that the reports of the eight engineers should be rejected because not founded upon fact, or because conclusions not properly deducible from facts presented have been announced. But are we to proceed without any favorable intimation from any of our officers?

Let me ask those who oppose my view, Why object to the appointment of a skilled and unbiased commission to pass upon the subject? If he be not satisfied with that which has been done, if it be contended that the action of previous boards must be disregarded, can we not find some one somewhere to whom we will be willing to commit this subject? Will Senators who have no more knowledge of the situation than that derived from the cursory and scattered hearings before the committee pretend to tell me that they know absolutely and conclusively that these eight officers of the Government were wrong, and that they are so satisfied of this that they want no more light; that the glorious radiance flashing from the information which they have received here renders the advent of other knowledge impossible? That the limit of intellectual absorption has been attained? Is this the position? Will anyone admit that he is unwilling to lay this matter before a competent, impartial board? Yes; the advocates of Santa Monica must so concede. They will not consent to the submission of their pretensions to any person or officer. They say in effect by this refusal that no board will report in favor of their location. They decline to submit their arguments to competent scrutiny. Why? Not because they think their success possible. They would not then refuse. They decline, because—and there is no other deduction possible from their conduct—they know that no impartial and competent tribunal will decide in their favor. They fear fairness.

Is the constitution of the proposed board objected to? If so, why not suggest improvement? I and those who are contending in conjunction with me are prepared to do that which is honest and equitable. Is it possible to form any commission to constitute any board to which the majority of the committee will be willing to submit? Evidently it is not possible. Mr. President, you can not find, you can not devise, you can not suggest any tribunal, any board, any committee, any qualified person or persons to whom this discretion will be committed by my friends of the opposition. They rest in security upon the theory that Senators are ready to vote against the report of the Government engineers and against everything official, are willing to appropriate in the face of authoritative condemnation, and they do not therefore propose to risk any board.

This sort of procedure may sometime—surely it ought to be—condemned. Here are three millions of money, Senators, to be disbursed in defiance of official recommendation. How are you to justify this outlay? Where is your authority? Have you any official indorsement at all? Two boards have reported adversely. You say that they were not fair, that they were in error. Do you not think it well to have the approval of some one not interested and who is possessed of techinal knowledge before you make this expenditure? The answer comes "No; we will not consent to this amendment." "We have waited long enough," it is said. True, you have waited long. You have never had the concurrence of Senator, Representative, or engineer. You have waited long indeed to find anyone competent and impartial treating this matter your way.

Now, at this hour when the committee reports in favor of an appropriation for an unrecommended and repudiated place we are asked to vote for that report to appropriate this enormous sum simply upon the general evidence taken before the commerce committee, which, as the record will show, is of little significance and in defiance of the authorities to whom we are in the habit of committing such matters. Why this extraordinary zeal to do something unprecedented?

Mr. President, when the Southern Pacific Company built its pier at Port Los Angeles no one had any idea of erecting any breakwater in that part of the open ocean. It has attracted us there. The committee proposes to use now $3,098,000, and Heaven only knows how much more in the end, to guard and make convenient the private property mentioned. What will the breakwater protect? If it answers its purpose, as those who are advocating it claim that it will, it will defend the railroad pier and not another structure. There is nothing else in the bay; there is nothing in the neighborhood; there is no inner harbor to be benefited; there is no adjacent commercial interest to be gratified. The expenditure of this money as designed by the committee will be the donation of $3,098,000 to a private corporation. It will be taking that sum, which the engineers of this Government have recommended be not expended, and expending it for the immediate benefit of individuals. Prospectively, it may be said, others will derive profit. This is mere speculation. The immediate object, the immediate effect, is an individual advantage. No public interest is to be subserved, but the money is given because it is asked for by enterprising citizens engaged in the development of a large commerce over one of the most magnificent wharves in the world.

Mr. President, I do not believe that an appropriation made as designed in this bill can be justified. I think that its consummation will be an outrage upon the public. Suppose that the distinguished gentlemen who favor Santa Monica are right in their scientific opinions, and that the boards and other trained officers of the Government are in error, still there stands a controversy, in which officials of integrity and no selfish interest are ranged upon one side, and upon the other stand interested parties reaching for the Treasury. Grant that the latter are also intelligent; grant that they are also men ordinarily free from bias; they are nevertheless personally concerned, and hence not reliable judges.

You refuse to recommit for examination; you decline to subject it to candid investigation, but it is proposed to boldly overturn and cast aside the suggestions of those to whose recommendation we should at least award decent consideration, and to substitute therefor the conclusions of employees of Mr. Huntington and to enable them to place at his feet a great winning made from the Government of the United States.

If the advocates of Santa Monica believe that they have the meritorious side, then let them face a commission chosen upon impartial lines. With the judgment of such a board I shall be content. Until some fair, competent, and disinterested man, appointed according to law, has determined that this appropriation is justifiable, I shall continue to oppose it and to raise my voice against it, even though I stand alone.

Mr. President, I shall not offer anything further at present. I have endeavored to put the facts very fully before the Senate, citing various opinions and conclusions adverse to my contention as well as those upon which I have relied. There are other Senators who desire to speak upon the matter, and I care to say no more now, but may later have occasion to detain the Senate should the remarks of Senators who take a different view in my opinion justify further comment.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I understand, as representative of the Committee on Commerce, that I am expected alone to present the side of the committee, and therefore I deem it entirely fair, and I presume the Senate will also deem it entirely fair, that I have the close of the debate in the case.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should object to that. I have moved the pending amendment representing the minority. I have made the motion to strike out the amendment proposed by the committee, and upon that proposition I have the affirmative. I do not know that there is any way of enforcing any rule of this kind. I suppose we may continue to answer each other world without end, but I should like myself to have some agreement about it. I do not think, however, it is fair that the chairman of the committee should take the affirmative upon this proposition. If the amendment is voted down, then the question will arise upon the amendment proposed by the committee. After all amendments designed to be proposed to that amendment have been disposed of, then, when the amendment itself comes up, the subject will be presented somewhat differently. There, of course, the Senator proposing that amendment will be entitled to close; but as the matter now stands I am not ready to make any such admissions.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator understand that other Senators desire to speak in favor of his amendment?

Mr. WHITE. I have been told by two Senators that they desire at some stage of the controversy to make a few remarks; but I think their desire was to speak after the Senator from Maine, more in the nature of reply than anything else. I will state that I do not understand that the Senator from Maine could in any exigency be debarred or cut off from replying to anything that might be said. I do not wish anything of that kind.

Mr. FRYE. I do not want to make this discussion indefinite in length. The Senator has occupied four hours.

Mr. WHITE. I have gone over the matter very fully, and probably have saved the Senator from Maine the production of a good many documents and other matters, but I have devoted no more time to it than I deemed its importance justified, for I dislike as much as anyone to detain the Senate, and am as anxious to close this session and go home; but I regarded my duty here as requiring me to say what I have said so far.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I say to Senators that I wish to be heard for a few minutes; I do not think I shall occupy more than fifteen or twenty minutes. I do not care at what particular stage of the discussion I am heard.

Mr. FRYE. Suppose the Senator takes the floor now. I do not desire to take the floor until other Senators have spoken.

Mr. PEFFER. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, what I desire to say on this matter is by way of emphasizing one point made by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]; that is, that under an act of Congress of 1890, I think it was, a commission composed of three eminent engineers of the Army was appointed under the provisions of an act for the purpose of selecting a point for a deep-water harbor on the Pacific Coast between two certain points named. They were about 75 miles apart. It appeared that between the Bay of San Francisco and the Bay of San Diego there was at that time no proper place or location for a harbor excepting within the limits of the two points named in the act. The board took an abundance of time. They went over the whole field and finally made a report, which is embodied in Executive Document, House of Representatives, Fifty-second Congress, first session, No. 39.

This board was composed of Colonel Mendell, Lieutenant-Colonel Gillespie, and Lieutenant-Colonel Benyaurd, of the Corps of Engineers. That board passed along the entire line between the two points named, examining every place, and finally determined that there were but two places where such a harbor as was contemplated in the law could be located at any reasonable expense, an expense that would not more than outweigh the benefits of such a harbor. They then directed their attention to those two particular localities. One of them was Santa Monica and the other San Pedro. After having examined the topography at length, with proper measurements, with the usual instruments accompanying engineer parties, the hydrography of the places, winds, waves, exposure, and every other matter proper to be considered on such an errand by such a board, they finally determined as follows:

> In view of the fact that San Pedro Bay in its natural condition affords better protection both from prevailing winds and from dangerous storms than Santa Monica Bay; that protection can be secured at less cost for equal development of breakwater at the former than at the latter; that a larger area of protected anchorage from the prevailing westerly swells can be secured, the severe storms from the southeast being infrequent, and that there is already an interior harbor that will be a valuable addition to the outer harbor, the board considers San Pedro Bay as the better location for the deep-water harbor provided for by the act.

This report is signed by all of the engineers whose duty it was to make the examination. Their report was made to the Chief of Engineers, Brig. Gen Thomas Lincoln Casey. That officer says:

> After a careful consideration of the facts in the case as presented by the board, its views as to the location and general estimates of construction are concurred in by me. The difference in cost of the two breakwaters, for the same area of protection, is over $700,000 in favor of San Pedro, and when the other advantages of San Pedro, as detailed by the board, are taken into consideration, it would seem that its selection has been properly made.
> Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
> THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
> Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.
> Hon. L. A. GRANT,
> Acting Secretary of War.

That report was submitted to the Senate January 5, 1892. The date of the report is December 18, 1891. Some dissatisfaction being expressed as to the report of the board, another board was appointed for the purpose of reexamining the work that had been done by the board whose report I have just mentioned. The other board made its report on October 27, 1892, and, without going into details, it is sufficient to say that this new board of five officers went upon the ground in person. They met at San Francisco and they also met at Los Angeles, calling before them at both places all persons who were interested either for one or the other of those two particular points. They heard engineers, topographical engineers, civil engineers, army engineers of different grades, together with officers of the railway companies, city officers, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, etc., covering the whole field of examination, hearing all the objections that were made to the preceding report; and after having had such a hearing, this new board, composed of five officers, all engineers, reported unanimously in favor of the San Pedro Harbor as it had been approved by the preceding board.

Mr. President, in view of these facts, that officers specially appointed by the President under an act of Congress, officers of the Government, educated by the people, men not belonging to any particular party, not politicians, not railway men, not officers interested in the progress of any particular locality, but officers of the Army, men presumed to be without prejudice—after men of that character twice examining the same points, coming to the same conclusion, their reports being approved by the same officer, the Chief of Engineers, and there being no other report of any character or description in opposition, it does seem to me that it is the duty of Congress, if we follow anyone's advice, to follow the advice of the persons specially appointed in this manner to determine what ought to be done. As was so well stated by the Senator from California, there has been no opposing report, there is no official information from any source, so far as I have been able to learn, in opposition to these reports; and it seems to me an unusual proceeding, to say the least of it, that a committee of Congress should undertake to set aside the reports of two boards of engineers, appointed for this particular work, and present its own views, and ask that an appropriation be made by Congress without anything official or professional in support of it. That is all I have to say at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I believe it is generally desired to hear the chairman of the committee on this subject when there is a full Senate, and it is now late.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Nevada is about to make the motion which I judge from his appearance he intends to make, which would result in the temporary dissolution of this body, I desire to suggest, if he has any such a design, that there is some other business that we might desire to transact to-day.

Mr. STEWART. I was not going to make that suggestion. I was going to suggest that the pending bill be postponed until Monday morning, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. WHITE. I would myself prefer that very much. I regret that the Senate is so thin to-day, and I would prefer that there should be a full Senate, as it is an important matter. However much of detail there may be in it, it is one of those propositions to which I think the attention of all the members of the body should be addressed. I agree fully with the Senator from Nevada in what he has said.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that by unanimous consent the pending bill may go over until Monday morning——

Mr. COCKRELL. I was going to suggest, if we can not go on with the river and harbor bill, that we devote two hours or more to the consideration of unobjected House bills on the Calendar, or, if the Senate prefer, unobjected bills on the Calendar generally. I think it would be the wiser and the better course to consider unobjected House bills.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let us take up the Calendar regularly.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like especially to have some of the pension bills taken up and passed.

MARITAL AND PARENTAL RELATIONS.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to make one exception to the unanimous consent which is asked for, and it is one, I think, which will appeal to every Senator in this body. The law of this District provides that a man in marrying shall be responsible for the antenuptial debts of his wife. There are several cases within my personal knowledge where that relation has been prevented by reason of that particular law, and which are awaiting the passage of a law by Congress, in accordance with the laws of the different States on the subject, relieving a person from those liabilities. I think, therefore, there ought to be an exception in the case of that bill, particularly as there will be only one more District day in the other House, and if that bill is passed to-day it can be acted upon on Monday in the House of Representatives.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from West Virginia whether he knows of any suffering consequent upon the existence of the law to which he refers? [Laughter.]

Mr. FAULKNER. I do; I know of two cases, and very sad ones, indeed. [Laughter.] If there be no objection, before the unanimous consent is given to proceed with the consideration of the Calendar, I ask unanimous consent that the bill to which I have referred, being Senate bill 1659, may be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to say that there are other questions involved in the bill, and if there be any real opposition to any of the other provisions of the bill I will waive them, although the bill is supported by the District bar, as I understand, by an association of 2,500 ladies in the District, by the Commissioners of the District, and by the District Committee.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1659) to amend the laws of the District of Columbia as to married women, to make parents the natural guardians of their minor children, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "devise," to insert "purchase"; and in line 13, after the word "gift," to strike out "Provided, That the said liability shall not be enforced till all the property of the husband has first been exhausted"; so as to make the section read:

That the property, real and personal, which any woman in the District of Columbia may own at the time of her marriage, and the rents, issues, profits, or proceeds thereof, and real, personal, or mixed property which shall come to her by descent, devise, purchase, or bequest, or the gift of any person, shall be and remain her sole and separate property, notwithstanding her marriage, and shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband or liable for his debts, except that such property as shall come to her by gift of her husband shall be subject to, and be liable for, the debts of the husband existing at the time of the gift.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 6, after the word "may," to insert "by a promise in writing"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That a married woman, while the marriage relation subsists, may bargain, sell, and convey her real and personal property, and enter into any contract in reference to the same in the same manner, to the same extent, and with like effect as a married man may in relation to his real and personal property, and she may, by a promise in writing, expressly make her separate estate liable for necessaries purchased by her or furnished at her request for the family.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That a woman, while married, may sue and be sued in the same manner as if she were unmarried. The judgment obtained by her in such action shall be her sole property and shall not be liable for her husband's debts, nor shall he be liable for any judgment in such action against her, and no suit shall abate by reason of the nonjoinder of the husband.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That any woman who shall have been married out of the District of Columbia shall, if her husband afterwards becomes a resident of the District, enjoy all the rights as to property which she shall have acquired by the laws of any other State, Territory, or country, or which she may have acquired by virtue of any marriage contract or settlement made outside of the District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out sections 7 and 8, as follows:

SEC. 7. That one-half in value of all personal property and real estate in which the husband or the wife at the time of death had a legal or equitable interest, and not necessary for the payment of debts, shall become the property in fee simple of the survivor, and the survivor's portion shall not be affected by any will of the husband or wife: Provided, That he or she elects to take under the law and relinquish all rights conferred by the will.

SEC. 8. That the estates of dower and by courtesy are hereby abolished.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [10] 6, after the words "guardians of," to insert "the person of"; in line 3, after the word "guardianship," to strike out "devolves" and insert "of the person shall devolve"; and in line 4, after the word "other," to insert:

Provided, however, That in case of the death of either parent, from whom the said children may inherit or take by devise or bequest, the said parent may, by deed or last will and testament, appoint a guardian of the property of the children, subject to the approval of the proper court of the District of Columbia.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the father and mother shall be the natural guardians of the person of their minor children. If either dies or is incapable of acting, the natural guardianship of the person shall devolve upon the other: Provided, however, That in case of the death of either parent from whom the said children may inherit or take by devise or bequest, the said parent may, by deed or last will and testament, appoint a guardian of the property of the children, subject to the approval of the proper court of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [11] 7, line 2, after the word "guardian," to strike out "for" and insert "of the person and property of"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That the survivor may by last will appoint a guardian of the person and property of any of the children, whether born at the time of making the will or afterwards, to continue during the minority of the child, or for a less time, subject at all times to removal for cause and appointment of another by the proper court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. That dower shall hereafter be assigned to a widow entitled to the same in the equitable as well as the legal estate of her deceased husband.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that we may proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar. I think it would be the better policy to first consider the unobjected House cases.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let us go to the Calendar regularly.

Mr. COCKRELL. If Senators object to proceeding to the consideration of unobjected House bills only, then let us go to the regular Calendar, and take the unobjected cases in their order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri if he has any objection to modifying his request to the extent that that order be continued until half past 4 o'clock, at which time we shall proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER. Make it 5 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are a great many Senators interested in these bills, and I think I have not a single bill on the Calendar in which I am personally interested.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know there are a great many Senators interested in bills on the Calendar, which they are calling up almost every day; but I think if we give the whole of this evening to the Calendar of unobjected cases there will be no trouble in securing the assignment of an hour's time to be devoted entirely to pension cases when we next go to the Calendar; and I suggest that that be done. I know the importance of passing the pension bills. If they are to become laws at this session they ought to be passed at least ten days before the adjournment or they will not become laws. That is manifest to everybody who has observed what has occurred.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not like to be persistent about this matter. As I said a moment ago, there is not a single bill on the Calendar in which I have, I think, the remotest personal interest. I have reported a good many bills for other Senators. I dislike to interpose this request so often. If I could have any assurance that the pension bills could be taken up and passed it would relieve me from a great deal of trouble.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt that they can be taken up on Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope that at some opportune time to-day, possibly after we get along with the business on the Calendar, we may take up the general bill pensioning the Indian war veterans. It has been reported and upon the Calendar for a long time. It includes all the old Indian war veterans.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator from Oregon had better give notice that he will call up that bill. Some opposition was made to it the other day, and the Senator is not now here who made it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I give notice that I shall ask consent, immediately before the river and harbor bill is taken up and after the morning business on Monday, that it may be considered. I am compelled to go away in a few days. I do not think the bill will lead to any extended debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] made the opposition to it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is the reason why I am giving notice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I prefer that he shall be here when the notice is given. I do not know what is his objection to the bill, but he ought to be here.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to say that I will not urge the suggestion further, but I trust there will not be any objection to it when I next make the request, which will be early in the week.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not like to make a discrimination against pension bills. The pension bills can be taken up in their order. The clerks can turn from one page to another without any loss of time. I think the pension cases ought to be put on the same footing as the other bills when reached in order according to their number. They ought to be considered.

Mr. FRYE. They will be considered when reached.

Mr. SHERMAN. But they are now separated. They will not be reached to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; not to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not one of them will be reached to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. I think they ought to be disposed of the first thing.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that the other day we gave an hour to pension bills and we passed 80 in the hour, so that is the reason why none of them are on the Calendar now. They have all been passed up to about No. 750 or No. 800.

Mr. PASCO. No. 795.

Mr. FAULKNER. They have all been passed up to No. 795 on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not interfere with the Senator from New Hampshire in his management of the pension cases, but I do not think a discrimination ought to be made against them; that they should be postponed to another calendar and thus deferred.

Mr. GALLINGER. The only additional remark I wish to make is that it would take about twenty minutes to dispose of all the pension bills on the Calendar. There are not many of them. I hope that we shall get to them at an early day. Some time on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to consider them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The first case on the Calendar will be called.

CLARA A. GRAVES AND OTHERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I asked that one case might be laid over. It is Senate bill 34, a very short bill, reported favorably from the Committee on Claims. I have examined it and I do not object to it. I think it ought to be considered. I had it laid over without prejudice.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was read. It proposes simply to pay $2,500 of prize money. I have examined the bill. The money is in the Treasury.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 34) for the relief of Clara A. Graves, Lewis Smith Lee, Florence P. Lee, Mary S. Sheldon, and Elizabeth Smith, heirs of Lewis Smith, deceased, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the first word "and," to insert "Florence P. Lee, legal representative of," and in line 7, before the word "heirs," to insert "deceased"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States shall pay, out of any money in his hands not otherwise appropriated, to Clara A. Graves, Lewis Smith Lee, Florence P. Lee, Mary S. Sheldon, and Florence P. Lee, legal representative of Elizabeth Smith, deceased, heirs of Lewis Smith, the sum of $2,317.77, being their father's and grandfather's portion of prize money as first lieutenant of the brig Warrior, due and unpaid on or about July 17, 1815.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Clara A. Graves, Lewis Smith Lee, Florence P. Lee, Mary S. Sheldon, and Florence P. Lee, legal representative of Elizabeth Smith, deceased, heirs of Lewis Smith, deceased."

GEORGE H. PLANT.

Mr. PASCO. There is another bill which has been passed over without prejudice. It is Senate bill 1083, which was passed over when last called at the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. He has looked into the matter and told me that I might call it up in his absence, as he is satisfied with reference to it. A similar bill has already passed the Senate twice, and this bill has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1083) for the relief of George H. Plant, of the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to George H. Plant, of the District of Columbia, $5,216.85, being the amount found to be due to him by the Court of Claims for losses and damages sustained by him by reason of a collision between the U. S. S. Gettysburg and the steamboat Lady of the Lake on the Potomac River.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEWART COLLEGE AT CLARKSVILLE, TENN.

Mr. BATE. I ask leave to call up a bill similarly situated to the one which has just been considered. It is Senate bill 1648.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BATE. Yes; it was passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1648) for the relief of Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), located at Clarksville, Tenn.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the amount given in the bill? The title does not indicate whether $10,000 will go out of the Treasury or $1,000 or what sum.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill has not been read yet.

Mr. BATE. Let the bill be read.

Mr. CULLOM. There ought to be something known about it.

Mr. BATE. The Committee on Claims reported the bill unanimously.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that is a pretty important bill, and I feel called upon to object to it.

Mr. HARRIS. It is an important bill.

Mr. CULLOM. It involves a good deal of money.

Mr. HARRIS. That property was taken possession of, I may say, in violation of the orders of General Grant. It was occupied for some years. Libraries and apparatus were destroyed and the building greatly impaired. But about the close of the war the Quartermaster-General, or rather the ranking quartermaster of that department, offered a sum of money in full satisfaction of the use and occupation and all the injuries sustained. The institution declined to accept the sum offered. It was $4,000, I believe, that was offered. They have been appealing year after year for compensation from that time to the present. The bill proposes to pay just such sum as the accounting officers of the Treasury may find to be justly due to the institution, and that is all.

Mr. CULLOM. There ought to be a report connected with the bill. It is a very important one.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the report be read.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a claim going back to the beginning of the war. I think the bill had better go over for the present.

Mr. BATE. The report is not a long one.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BATE. I hope he will not object. The claim has been pending a long time, and there are very peculiar surroundings.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well; let the report be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator from Tennessee had better let the bill be passed over for the present and let the Senator from Illinois look at the case. The reading of the report will consume time, when doubtless there will be discussion, and then somebody will object to it, and it will be simply a waste of time.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the report be read, and let us see whether anyone objects to the bill or not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must say very frankly that I can not approve of the language of the bill. I say it is the first time the Committee on Claims have ever reported a bill attempting to make compensation for this object. I appeal to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] and other Senators. The bill says "for the injury to its buildings, apparatus, cabinets, and other property injured or destroyed." We have had many cases from Missouri, and in every solitary instance from Missouri the committee have stricken out that clause and provided payment only for use and occupation. Now, if you confine to use and occupation and treat every State alike, I shall have no objection to the bill.

Mr. BATE. The buildings were occupied, Mr. President.

Mr. PLATT. I wish also to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the Senator from Tennessee who last spoke said that it was taken possession of by the troops in opposition to and in violation of military orders. Now, we have never made compensation in such a case if that were so.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we ought not to have any further discussion about the measure. I have objected to it two or three times.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator has objected, which I did not understand, that ends it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not so understand. Objection being interposed, the next case will be called.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BUTTE CITY, MONT.

The bill (S. 260) to provide for the construction of a public building at Butte City, Mont., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in page 2, line 14, before "hundred," to strike out the word "four" and insert "three"; so as to read:

Which said sum of $300,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the following provisions, etc.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how large a town is Butte?

Mr. MANTLE. I desire to say, in reply to the Senator from New York, that the city of Butte has a population of from 30,000 to 35,000, not all within the city limits as laid out, because the town has spread very far beyond the original town-site limits. There is a report accompanying the bill which very fully gives all the details in relation to the city, its population, etc.

Mr. HILL. What is the population? I did not catch the remark.

Mr. MANTLE. It is estimated at from 30,000 to 35,000.

Mr. HILL. What was it at the last census?

Mr. MANTLE. Ten or twelve thousand for the actual city limits of Butte, but I was just explaining that the city itself has spread far beyond the original limits.

Mr. HILL. Chicago-like?

Mr. MANTLE. Yes; the same as Chicago.

Mr. HILL. What is the amount proposed to be appropriated?

Mr. MANTLE. Three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HILL. A mere trifling sum.

Mr. MANTLE. The estimate for a site is from $75,000 to $100,000 in a desirable locality of the city. That figure will give the Senator an idea of the value of the ground, which, of course, brings up the cost of the building very largely. I will say also that Butte City is the metropolis of the State of Montana, being by far the largest city in the State. I may also add that it is perhaps the most thriving, prosperous, and growing city of its size in the United States to-day. The business of the post-office and of every Government department is daily increasing. The estimates show very clearly and conclusively that the amount the Government now pays in the way of rents will very much exceed the interest upon the sum proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. HILL. I am very much gratified to learn that in spite of the prevailing gold standard the State, and especially Butte City, is very prosperous. I supposed that it might have affected that portion of the country, but it seems not. Are there any other public buildings in the State?

Mr. MANTLE. One; a very small building at the capital of the State—an assay office.

Mr. HILL. Built by the Government?

Mr. MANTLE. I think it was built by the Government.

Mr. HILL. What was the cost of that building?

Mr. MANTLE. I do not remember.

Mr. CARTER. About $50,000.

Mr. MANTLE. It is not a large building; it is a very small affair.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is an assay office?

Mr. MANTLE. An assay office for refining gold and silver, being a matter of convenience in shipment.

Mr. HILL. There is no post-office building, or otherwise?

Mr. MANTLE. There is not a post-office building in the State.

Mr. HILL. Is the capital the next largest town in the State?

Mr. MANTLE. No; it is some 75 miles distant, but connected by rail.

Mr. HILL. Can the Senator give us any assurance that the bill will pass the other House?

Mr. MANTLE. I think the Senator from New York may rest safely assured on that score, so far as I have any information upon the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM B. TODD.

The bill (S. 336) for the relief of the estate of William B. Todd, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to issue to the administrators of the estate a drawback certificate for lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, in square 1040, in the District of Columbia, on account of excessive special assessments found to be due in the revision of such assessments in accordance with the revising acts of Congress, which drawback certificate shall be receivable in payment for all arrearages of general taxes due the District of Columbia and unpaid prior to July 1, 1895.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

The bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill has been once read. I will state that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] made a request that he might be further heard on the bill, he having spoken once for a considerable length of time. I understand that the Senator has left the city for his home, and I have been informed that he is not to return during the present session of Congress. I want to extend every possible courtesy to the Senator, but as it is very important that the bill shall become a law, I hope it will be considered to-day.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "physicians," to insert "one of whom shall be learned in the law"; so as to read:

That there shall be, and is hereby, created a board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia, which shall consist of the presidents of the three boards of medical examiners hereinafter provided for and two persons, not physicians, one of whom shall be learned in the law, to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, each for a period of three years, or until his successor is appointed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 13, after the word "remove," to insert "after due notice and hearing"; so as to read:

That said Commissioners may remove, after due notice and hearing, any member of said board for neglect of duty or other just cause, and that in case of the death, resignation, or removal of any member the vacancy for the unexpired term of said member shall be filled in the same manner as other appointments are made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 14, after the word "age," to strike out "and"; so as to read:

Said register shall show the name, age, place, and duration of residence of each candidate, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 1, after the word "the," to strike out "passage of this act" and insert "1st day of July, 1896"; so as to read:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1896, all persons desiring to practice medicine and surgery in any of their branches in the District of Columbia shall apply to said board of medical supervisors for a license to do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten"; so as to read:

That said application for a license to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia shall be made to the secretary of said board of medical supervisors upon a form prescribed by said board, and shall be accompanied by a fee of $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 24, before the word "said," to insert "either of"; and in the same line, after "have," to insert "been"; so as to read:

That no member of either of said boards shall have been engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia for less than five years at the time of his appointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 34, after the word "examiners," to strike out "or of both, as the case may be"; and in line 35, after the word "society," to strike out "or societies"; so as to read:

That in event of the failure of the Washington Homeopathic Medical Society or of the Eclectic Medical Society of the District of Columbia, after fifteen days' notice by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to submit the list of names aforesaid, said Commissioners may appoint the members of the board of homeopathic medical examiners or of the board of eclectic medical examiners, without restriction as to nomination by the society in default.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 37, after the word "of," to strike out "said boards" and insert "either of the boards named in this act"; so as to read:

That said Commissioners may at any time remove any member of either of the boards named in this act for neglect of duty or other just cause, and that in case of the death, resignation, or removal of any member the vacancy for the unexpired term of said member shall be filled in the same manner as other appointments are made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 9, after the word "and," to insert "other meetings shall be held"; in line 10, after the word "such," to strike out "other"; in line 12, after the word "boards," to strike out "of medical examiners," and in line 13, before the word "immediately," to strike out "examination" and insert "meeting"; so as to read:

Each board shall hold a meeting for examination in the city of Washington on the second Thursday in January, April, July, and October of each year, and continuing so long as may be necessary to examine all applicants, and other meetings shall be held at such times as the board of medical supervisors shall direct. Each of said boards shall examine, at the meeting immediately following the receipt of the proper certificates from the board of medical supervisors, all applicants for licenses to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia so certified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 13, before the word "of," to strike out "department" and insert "departments"; so as to read:

From the lists of questions so submitted said board of medical supervisors shall select the questions for each examination, and such questions shall be the same for all candidates, except that in the departments of therapeutics, practice of medicine, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 22, after the word "the," to strike out "examination"; and in the same line, after the word "average," to strike out "of" and insert "attained by"; so as to read:

An official report of the result of each examination, signed by the president and the secretary and each acting member of the board of medical examiners conducting such examination, stating the average attained by each candidate in each branch, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 13, after the word "physician," to strike out "a graduate of any medical college in good standing"; and in line 16, after the word "act," to strike out:

And provided further, That a license may be issued, under such regulations as the board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia, with the approval of the Board of Commissioners of said District, shall make, to any physician holding a license from any State board of medical examiners established by law which has required, before the issue of said license, qualifications and examinations equivalent to those required by this act for the issue of similar licenses.

And insert:

And to physicians who may change their residence to the District of Columbia from any State or Territory where medical laws and medical examining boards exist, the presentation of a certificate or license from a medical examining board, if found upon due inquiry to be true and genuine, being sufficent evidence of right to registration and certification under the provisions of this act.

So as to read:

Provided, That a license shall be issued upon application, free of cost and without examination, to each physician who is registered at the health office of the District of Columbia at the time of the passage of this act, and to physicians who may change their residence, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 8, after the word "chronic" and before "inebriety," to strike out "and persistent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 17, after the word "the," to strike out "Board of Commissioners" and insert "court of appeals"; in line 18, after the word "and," to strike out "its" and insert "the"; in the same line, after the word "decision," to insert "of said court"; and in line 23, after the word "him," to insert "or her"; so as to read:

Appeal from the decision of said board may be taken to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and the decision of said court shall be final. Said board may at any time within two years from the refusal or revocation of a license, or the cancellation of registration under this section, by a vote of four members, issue, without examination, a new license to the person so affected, restoring to him or her all the rights and privileges of which he or she had been deprived by said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 6, after the word "the," to strike out "recording"; in the same line, after the word "clerk," to insert "of said court"; and in line 9, before the word "register," to insert "shall"; so as to read:

That any person receiving a license as hereinbefore provided shall have it recorded in the office of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia within three months from the date of said license, and the place and date of record shall be certified thereon by said clerk; and the holder of the license shall pay to the clerk of said court a fee of 50 cents for making the record. The holder of said license shall, after the same has been recorded, exhibit the same at the health office, and shall register, in a book provided for that purpose, his or her name and address.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, line 8, after the word "to," to insert "the practice of massage or the so-called Swedish movement cure, nor to"; in line 10, after the word "without," to strike out "any"; and at the end of line 10 to strike out "being given in return therefor"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. That this act shall not apply to commissioned surgeons of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine-Hospital Service, nor to regularly licensed physicians and surgeons in actual consultation from other States or Territories, nor to regularly licensed physicians and surgeons actually called from other States or Territories to attend specified cases in the District of Columbia, nor to the treatment of any case of actual emergency, nor to the practice of massage or the so-called Swedish movement cure, nor to the use of ordinary domestic remedies without fee, gift, or consideration of any kind.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 13, line 6, before the word "and," to strike out "to do so"; in line 9, after the word "registration," to strike out "or both"; and in line 18, page 13, after the word "act," to strike out:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to massage, Swedish movement, and other similar methods of treatment without medicine.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That from and after the passage of this act any person practicing medicine and surgery or midwifery in the District of Columbia, or who shall publicly profess to do so, without first having obtained from the board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia a license, and registered the same as herein provided, or in violation of any of the provisions of this act or any of the rules and regulations made by authority conferred herein, or after his license or registration has been canceled by order of said board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the District jail for a period of not less than ten nor more than ninety days, or by both such fine and imprisonment. It shall be the duty of the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia to prosecute all violations of the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 14, line 8, after the word "as," to strike out "said board" and insert "the Commissioners of the District of Columbia"; so as to read:

And if any surplus remain on the 30th day of June of each year the members of the board of medical supervisors appointed as such shall be paid such reasonable compensation as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may determine, etc.

The amendment was agreed to:

The next amendment was, in section 16, line 2, before the word "not," to strike out "now existing"; and in line 3, after the word "act," to strike out "or inconsistent therewith"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That all acts or parts of acts, general or special, not in accordance with the provisions of this act be, and are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. This seems to be a very important bill. I should like to know of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] whether it has the approval of the various medical societies in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. In answer to the interrogatory, I will say that so far as I know it has such approval. There are some outside parties who do not want this legislation, as is always the case. I will furthermore state that every State and Territory in the Union has a law similar to this bill, some of them not so liberal, and the District of Columbia is the dumping ground of incompetent and unskilled physicians who leave the States and Territories and come here as so-called practitioners of medicine.

Mr. KYLE. I mean has the bill the approval of the regular schools of medicine in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill provides specifically that the representatives of the three medical societies, the so-called regular, the homeopathic, and the eclectic, shall be treated with absolute equality.

Mr. KYLE. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FAULKNER. I offer an amendment which is satisfactory to the Senator in charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, line 30, it is proposed to amend by adding after the words "provisions of this act" the following proviso:

Provided, That the medical laws and examining boards of such States and Territories grant equal rights and recognition to the licentiates of the board herein created.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I also offer another amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 13, line 7, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to insert "nor to medical students who have matriculated in any medical college in the District of Columbia prior to January, 1896."

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not sure that that is a desirable amendment, but as I intend to ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, I am willing that the amendment shall go in.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM MOSS.

The bill (S. 837) making an appropriation for the benefit of the estate of William Moss, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $14,175 to the administrator of the estate of William Moss, deceased, late of Arkansas, for extra services in transporting the United States mails not provided for in Moss's contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO GEN. NATHANAEL GREENE.

The bill (S. 1188) to provide for the erection of a monument to Gen. Nathanael Greene on the battlefield of Guilford Court-House was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the erection of a statue of Gen. Nathanael Greene on the land of the Guilford Battle Ground Company, in Guilford County, N. C.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT IN ALABAMA.

The resolution for the appointment of a select committee to make inquiry whether there is and for the last two and a half years has been a republican form of government in the State of Alabama was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator in charge of the resolution is not present, and I suggest that it go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

FUR-BEARING SEALS IN ALASKA.

The bill (H. R. 3206) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing seals in Alaska, and for other purposes," was announced as the next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the bill go over, retaining its place.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN subsequently said: What became of House bill 3206?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was passed over without prejudice, the Chair will state.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to enter my objection to the bill and to suggest that it go over under Rule IX.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that the Senator from Ohio will not ask that that be done in the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I know he is very anxious about the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not injure the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not make any difference.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill will have to be taken up on motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will have to be taken up on motion. I do not want to do anything that is not satisfactory. But it will not change the status of the bill except that it can only be taken up on motion if it goes over under Rule IX.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that that is true, and yet at the same time the practice has been to let bills stand in their places by being passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to letting the bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws the request, and the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that course will be more satisfactory to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

LANDS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF UTAH.

The bill (S. 2047) extending the time within which the University of Utah shall occupy lands heretofore granted to it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the time within which the University of Utah shall occupy the lands granted to it by act of July 23, 1894, shall be extended from five years to ten years thereafter.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. GUMMO.

The bill (S. 814) for the relief of John W. Gummo was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John W. Gummo, late of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, $190, being balance of bounty due him for services rendered the Government during the late war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANNEL IN ATCHAFALAYA BAY, LOUISIANA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 83) directing and authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to determine the cost of securing for the United States the channel in Atchafalaya Bay, Louisiana, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the words "authorized to," to strike out "appoint a commission consisting of one army engineer and one civil engineer to determine" and insert "ascertain"; and in line 10, after the word "report," to strike out "their findings to the Secretary of War, who shall transmit same"; so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to ascertain the cost of securing and acquiring by the United States the property rights and franchises of the Atchafalaya Bay Company, or their assignees or assignees, in and to a channel in the Atchafalaya Bay, situated in the State of Louisiana, and to report to Congress, with his recommendation, at the earliest practicable moment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 3, after the words "expense of the," to strike out "commission" and insert "investigation"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $500, or as much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to defray the expense of the investigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution directing and authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain the cost of securing for the United States the channel in Atchafalaya Bay, Louisiana."

C. B. BRYAN & CO.

The bill (S. 589) for the relief of C. B. Bryan & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to C. B. Bryan & Co., of Memphis, Tenn., $3,643.60 for the value of a coal barge and coal, as found by the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAIAH MITCHELL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1938) allowing Isaiah Mitchell, of Denver, Colo., ten years within which to make a final homestead entry upon certain land, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The amendments were, in line 12, after the word "until," to strike out "ten" and insert "seven"; and in line 14, after the word "land," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no adverse claim shall exist at the date of the passage of this act, and that within six months from that date he shall go upon said land and establish his residence thereupon, and that he shall thereafter continue to reside upon and cultivate the same as his home for the proper period according to the provisions of the homestead laws.

So as to read:

That Isaiah Mitchell, of Denver, Colo., late a corporal of Company G, One hundred and fifteenth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, who, on March 22, 1893, made a homestead application in the Denver, Colo., land office for entry of the southwest quarter of section 28, township 2 south, of range 64 west, and by reason of disabilities incurred consequent upon his service as a soldier during the late war of the rebellion was compelled to abandon said land, be, and he is hereby, granted further time and until seven years from the passage of this act within which to make final entry upon said land: Provided, That no adverse claim shall exist at the date of the passage of this act, etc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill allowing Isaiah Mitchell, of Denver, Colo., seven years within which to make a final homestead entry upon certain land."

PROPOSED PENSION LEGISLATION.

The bill (S. 2047) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that this bill and the next two bills, the bill (S. 2407) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions, and the bill (S. 2406) concerning the weight of evidence in pension claims, be passed over, retaining their places, as the Senator who reported them is not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

STATUE OF COMMODORE SLOAT.

The bill (S. 1609) for the erection of a statue of Commodore John D. Sloat in the city of Monterey, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the erection of a statue of the late Commodore John D. Sloat within the limits of the city of Monterey, Cal., and for the proper preparation, grading, and inclosing of the lot and foundation upon which the statue is to be erected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVIDENCE IN PENSION CLAIMS.

Mr. GALLINGER. During my absence the bill (S. 2406) concerning the weight of evidence in pension claims was passed over. It is a bill which passed the Senate during the last Congress. There is no objection to it, and I think it ought to be passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the effect of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. The effect of it is to provide that the oath of a person who has served as a private or noncommissioned officer shall not have any less weight than if such witness had served as a commissioned officer, and only that.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us pass it.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all right.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that in all applications for pension and in all proofs and evidence submitted in support of any claim under the pension laws the oath of a person who has served as a private or noncommissioned officer shall not have any less weight than if such witness had served as a commissioned officer.

Mr. HARRIS. Is there any law that gives greater weight to the testimony of a commissioned officer?

Mr. PEFFER. It is a rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say it is a rule of practice. There is nothing in the law, but the Pension Bureau has established a practice that does it.

Mr. HARRIS. It seems to me very singular that there should be any necessity for the passage of such a bill. I have no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a rule of the Pension Office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIVERSITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The bill (S. 1202) to establish a university of the United States was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let this bill be passed over.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to have it passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

PENSIONS UNDER ACT OF 1890.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill (S. 2407) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions, was passed over during my absence. The bill passed the House during the last Congress, and was favorably reported to the Senate. It is a short bill, and I think we ought to pass it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the effect of the bill?

Mr. PLATT and Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The bill was read; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. The bill provides that in any application for a pension under the act approved June 27, 1890, where it is shown that the soldier or sailor on account of whose service the pension is asked dies or has died without having received an honorable discharge from the service, and without having by his own misconduct forfeited his right to receive an honorable discharge, the want of an honorable discharge shall not debar the applicant from receiving the benefits of the law upon complying with the other requirements thereof, if no charge of desertion is standing against the soldier or sailor upon the records of the War or Navy Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill is favored by the Commissioner of Pensions, and is simply designed to correct an inequality which ought not to exist.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GERMAN EVANGELICAL CHURCH AT MARTINSBURG, W. VA.

The bill (S. 461) for the relief of the trustees of the German Evangelical Church at Martinsburg, W. Va., was announced as next in order on the Calendar, and was read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has Congress been in the habit of paying for property destroyed in that way? I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ALEXANDER STODDART, OF NEW YORK.

The bill (S. 1548) for the relief of Alexander Stoddart, of New York, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

SUFFERERS BY WRECK OF REVENUE CUTTER GALLATIN.

The bill (S. 1555) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States revenue cutter Gallatin off the coast of Massachusetts was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate a sum sufficient to reimburse the survivors of the officers and crew of the United States revenue cutter Gallatin, wrecked off the coast of Massachusetts January 6, 1892, for losses sustained by them, respectively, in the wreck of the vessel.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOTMENTS OF PAY BY NAVAL OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2462) to provide for the making of allotments of pay by officers of the Navy and Marine Corps was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to permit officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps to make allotments from their pay, under such regulations as he may prescribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ALICE M. WALSH.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the next order of business, the bill (S. 1004) for the relief of Mrs. Alice M. Walsh, go over under Rule IX, it having been adversely reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

EXPENDITURES OF THE SENATE.

The resolution directing the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment to investigate the expenditures of the Senate for the past year was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be passed over.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution might as well go over under Rule IX.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution go over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over under Rule IX.

WAR IN CUBA.

The resolution proposing to postpone the consideration of the report of the conference committee on Senate concurrent resolution No. 19, relating to Cuba, until Monday, April 6, 1896, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. Let the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the resolution go over under Rule IX.

Mr. PLATT. It might as well be indefinitely postponed, so as to get it off the Calendar.

Mr. HILL. The subject has been disposed of.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

J. HENRY RIVES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1709) for the relief of J. Henry Rives, which was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$858.57," and insert "$293.90"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to pay to J. Henry Rives, of Lynchburg, Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $293.90, being the amount of the attorney's fees and expenses necessarily incurred and paid by him in the arrest of John C. Henry, deputy collector, for embezzlement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF PENSION MONEY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 901) amending section 4716 of the Revised Statutes, which was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4716. No money on account of pension shall be paid to any person or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person who in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States, except to such persons and the widows of such persons as before the 1st day of September, 1864, voluntarily, or as a substitute for any other person, and without a bounty or the promise of a bounty for so doing, enlisted in the service of the United States and actually served for ninety days."

Mr. ALDRICH. How does that change existing law? I hope some member of the committee will explain it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that that bill was reported by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PLATT. It had better go over until the Senator who reported it comes in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

RELIEF LIGHT VESSEL ON PACIFIC COAST.

The bill (S. 1908) for a relief light vessel on the Pacific Coast was announced as next in order.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that that bill be passed over without prejudice. Such a vessel has already been provided for in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then the bill ought to be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WHITE. Oh, no. We might want another light vessel. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

STORAGE BUSINESS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. That bill had better go over.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. PLATT subsequently said: With regard to House bill 3462, to which I objected, I will say that I should be perfectly willing to have it passed if an amendment can be made to it in lines 8, 9, and 10, by striking out the words "such lien to include all legal demands for like storage and expenses against the owner of said property," which seem to make a lien upon property held by storage companies for a debt which has not been paid. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but I shall offer that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there will be no objection to that amendment being made. I trust the bill will be allowed to pass; it is an important one.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 2, line 6, after the word "due," to strike out "and" and insert "by the person at whose instance such change of possession is so ordered, and who shall be entitled to recover such payment as part of the costs in such proceeding, or, if defeated therein, he shall be credited with such payment in taxation of costs against him. And"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That whenever the title or right of possession to any goods, wares, merchandise, or personal property on storage shall be put in issue by any judicial proceeding, the same shall be delivered upon the order of court after prepayment of the storage charges and cash advances then due, by the person at whose instance such change of possession is so ordered, and who shall be entitled to recover such payment as part of the costs in such proceeding, or, if defeated therein, he shall be credited with such payment in taxation of costs against him. And unless the person, firm, association, or corporation so conducting a storage business shall claim some right, title, or interest in said stored property otherwise than the lien hereinabove authorized, he, it, or they shall not be made a party to said judicial proceedings.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Now I move to strike out, beginning with the last word in line 8 of section 1, the sentence, "such lien to include all legal demands for like storage and expenses against the owner of said property."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 75) granting a pension to Mary F. Davenport;

A bill (H. R. 4275) to increase the pension of Mrs. Annis H. Enochs, widow of Gen. William H. Enochs, from $20 to $50 per month;

A bill (H. R. 4355) to increase the pension of Theresa Peebles, of Jefferson County, Ga.;

A bill (H. R. 4395) for the relief of Miss Juliette Betts;

A bill (H. R. 5400) to increase the pension of Mary L. Bacon, widow of the late George B. Bacon, late lieutenant-commander of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 5225) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth M. Williams, of Monroe County, Tenn.;

A bill (H. R. 5712) granting increase of pension to John W. Hines; and

A bill (H. R. 6132) granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Scott.

WILLIAM F. WILSON.

The bill (S. 434) for the relief of William F. Wilson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to William F. Wilson, of Berkeley County, W. Va., $1,530, in full for the use and value of his house at Harpers Ferry, Jefferson County, W. Va., during the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

SOLICITOR AND JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL.

The bill (S. 1996) amending the act of June 8, 1880, entitled "An act to authorize the President to appoint an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of solicitor and judge-advocate-general, etc., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer," and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULLOM. Let that bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

PURCHASE OF PAINTING BY VICTOR NEHLING.

The joint resolution (S. R. 18) authorizing the purchase of the painting by Victor Nehling, representing Pocahontas saving the life of Capt. John Smith, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over without prejudice.

LEASE OF SIBLEY ISLAND.

The bill (S. 1923) granting to the city of Bismarck, N. Dak., the right to lease and use for public purposes Sibley Island, an island in the Missouri River, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 21, after the word "park," to insert:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing the felling of timber on said island, for sale or consumption, nor shall any timber be cut save for the purpose of improving or beautifying the grounds: Provided further, That such leases shall not be for a longer period than ten years: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may at any time declare a forfeiture of the privilege herein granted for violation of any of the terms, reservations, or conditions hereof.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Bismarck, in State of North Dakota, by and through its regular city council, shall have authority, either by itself or under a system of leases securing a revenue to the city, to use or lease Sibley Island, an island in the Missouri River near said city of Bismarck, for public assemblies of a religious, literary, political, or scientific character; to use or lease the same for fair grounds or driving-park purposes; together with the right to erect such buildings and make such improvements as may be necessary to provide for the comfort and convenience of visitors or those connected with said island for any of the purposes named; also to have control of all timber upon said island; the said city council having at all times authority to control and regulate all the fees or charges made by any person or association thereon for any of the purposes herein enumerated, and full authority to construct roadways and lay out said island into grounds, parks, or lots suitable for the uses herein allowed and provided for; said island always remaining free to the public for the ordinary uses of a public park: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing the felling of timber on said island, for sale or consumption, nor shall any timber be cut save for the purpose of improving or beautifying the grounds: Provided further, That such leases shall not be for a longer period than ten years: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may at any time declare a forfeiture of the privilege herein granted for violation of any of the terms, reservations, or conditions hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, at the end of the committee amendments just adopted, to insert:

Without any liability for any sum whatever by reason thereof; and Congress reserves the express authority to resume the ownership, possession, and control of said island.

It is only a lease, and let it appear as a lease, and not as a gift.

Mr. DUBOIS. Is that not covered by the proviso?

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we have been here long enough for Saturday evening, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator withdraw the motion for a few moments? There are several small bills which Senators desire to have considered.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a number in which I feel an interest, and have been waiting for three or four days to secure an opportunity for their consideration, but have not been successful.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the Senator will accede to the request.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

SUGAR LOAF RESERVOIR SITE, COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to break into the order, but if we are likely to adjourn I desire to call up a bill which I am anxious to get to the House of Representatives, so that it may become a law speedily. I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill 2232, which was favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf Reservoir site, in Colorado, and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry, which had been reported by the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 4, after the word "numbered," to strike out "seven" and insert "five"; and in line 10, after the word "same," to strike out "under the existing laws for the disposal of the public lands," and insert:

At the price of $2.50 per acre, under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive the State of Colorado of the control of the water in any reservoir which may be constructed on this site by any person or corporation or association, under the regulations provided by the State laws in such cases.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public land embraced in the reservoir site known as Sugar Loaf Reservoir site No. 5, located in Lake County, Colo., which was withdrawn from entry and settlement under the provisions of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved October 2, 1888, is hereby restored to the public domain, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of the same at the price of $2.50 per acre, under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive the State of Colorado of the control of the water in any reservoir which may be constructed on this site by any person or corporation or association, under the regulations provided by the State laws in such cases.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GILMAN WILLIAMS.

Mr. GEAR. I ask permission to call up at this time the bill (H. R. 1020) granting an increase of pension to Gilman Williams. The beneficiary named in the bill is in an insane hospital and almost dying.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have an understanding that pension cases are all to be taken up together, and I must object. We have fifty or seventy-five pension cases on the Calendar, and I do not think it is right for one Senator to be allowed to call up one pension bill in this way, when others can not.

Mr. GEAR. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not objecting, but I am enforcing the rule, though I shall be compelled to object if the Senator insists upon his request. It is placing us in a false position, and I claim that no Senator has a right to place his brother Senators in such a position.

Mr. GEAR. If the Senator objects, of course I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (S. 1741) to authorize the Muskogee, Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a line of railway through Oklahoma and Indian Territories was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

EMMART, DUNBAR & CO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1265) for the relief of Emmart, Dunbar & Co., which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "hundred," to insert "and forty-eight"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $14,548.22, the amount found due Emmart, Dunbar & Co. by the auditor of the District of Columbia for work done by said firm in connection with the laying of the 30-inch water main under their contract of September 1, 1871, with said District be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia; and the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized and directed to pay the said sum of money to said firm in satisfaction of said amount so found due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF VICTOR HUGO.

The joint resolution (S. R. 21) for the purchase of a statue of Victor Hugo, to be placed in the new building of the Library of Congress, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over without losing its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. That joint resolution was reported favorably by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. COCKRELL. But I do not think it will go through this evening, and that is the reason why I asked that it should be passed over, not losing its place.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I think there is no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have serious objection to it, and I would not have asked to have it passed over if I had not had objection to it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. That settles it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILLS PLACED UNDER RULE IX.

Mr. CULLOM. The next two orders of business, Nos. 537 and 538, being the bill (S. 212) fixing the compensation of the United States district attorneys, and for other purposes, and the bill (S. 217) fixing compensation of United States marshals and deputies, and for other purposes, should be indefinitely postponed, I think.

Mr. PLATT. Not until the sundry civil bill is passed.

Mr. CULLOM. The provisions of these bills are covered by the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT. But they had better remain on the Calendar until the sundry civil bill becomes a law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them be placed under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Orders of Business 537 and 538, being the bills referred to by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], will go over under Rule IX.

ANTON GLOETZNER.

The bill (H. R. 6104) for the relief of Anton Gloetzner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased by and conveyed to Anton Gloetzner prior to the passage of this bill be relieved and exempted from the operation of the act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," etc., approved March 3, 1887, and that all forfeitures incurred by force of that act in respect of such real estate be remitted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TESTIMONY OF PHYSICIANS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 981) relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "information," to insert "confidential in its nature"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the courts of the District of Columbia no physician or surgeon shall be permitted, without the consent of the person afflicted, or of his legal representative, to disclose any information, confidential in its nature, which he shall have acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity, whether such information shall have been obtained from the patient or from his family or from the person or persons in charge of him: Provided, That this act shall not apply to evidence in criminal cases where the accused is charged with causing the death of or inflicting injuries upon a human being and the disclosure shall be required in the interests of public justice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. GALLINGER December 16, 1895, directing a careful and thorough inquiry to be made regarding the employment of aliens in the several Executive Departments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope that resolution will pass, Mr. President. It is simply a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to it.

The resolution was reported from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "regarding the," to strike out "employment" and insert "number"; and in the same line, after the word "aliens," to insert "employed in"; so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Postmaster-General, and the Attorney-General are hereby directed to cause a careful and thorough inquiry to be made regarding the number of aliens employed in their respective Departments, and to communicate the result of said inquiry to the Senate at the earliest practicable day.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JOHN F. W. DETTE.

The bill (S. 80) for the relief of John F. W. Dette was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be examined and investigated the terms and conditions of the contract of John F. W. Dette with the United States to build a stone wall of masonry around the national cemetery at Jefferson Barracks, in the county of St. Louis and State of Missouri, and the plans and specifications therefor, and any changes or modifications made therein, and the character, actual cost of material, and work in the construction of the wall; and whether by reason of any change or modifications in the contract the cost of the work per perch was increased, and what loss was incurred on any additional work required by such changes or modifications; and what, if any, sum is reasonably and equitably due to the said Dette, in addition to the amount already paid him, by reason of the changes or modifications in his contract, and to report the result to Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTILLATION OF BRANDY FROM FRUITS.

The bill (H. R. 886) to amend section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning the distilling of brandy from fruits was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Let that bill be passed over, holding its place on the Calendar. It is possible that the committee may want to offer some additional amendments to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like very much to have that little bill pass without amendment. It is a bill in which my people are particularly interested.

Mr. HARRIS. I am decidedly in favor of the bill as it stands, but I do not see more than one member of the committee present except myself, and for that reason I prefer that that bill should go over without prejudice; and going over in that way, whenever we go the Calendar it is subject to be called up by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] or any other Senator.

Mr. PLATT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I do entertain hope that there may be an agreement to drop this amendment. I may be disappointed, but I hope that that course may be taken.

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly the amendment ought to be dropped. It is a House bill, and interests our section of the country.

Mr. HARRIS. I should prefer that other members of the committee besides the two of us now present should be here when the bill is considered.

Mr. WHITE. I fully agree with the Senator from Idaho that the bill is a very meritorious one. It affects my State, and I urged it through the Finance Committee, but there are several little matters, which it is talked of attaching to this bill, among others, that regarding the wood-alcohol matter and wool, and all the various provisions of the tariff bill, and all the ills that political flesh is heir to. In fact, this bill is sought to be used to give the Senate jurisdiction of the tariff. Of course, we can not originate a tariff measure here, but having got this very innocent little bill for the benefit of Idaho, California, and a few other usually oppressed places, we are to add to it a vast amount of tariff discussion. So long as the committee seems disposed, as it does now, to press these amendments, I do not think the members of the committee present would be justified in allowing the bill to be considered to-day.

Mr. PLATT. I do entertain the hope that before the close of the session the amendments referred to may all be withdrawn.

Mr. WHITE. I trust so myself, but I am afraid not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 75) granting a pension to Mary F. Davenport;

A bill (H. R. 4275) to increase the pension of Mrs. Annis H. Enochs, widow of Gen. William H. Enochs, from $20 to $50 per month;

A bill (H. R. 4355) to increase the pension of Theresa Peebles, of Jefferson County, Ga.;

A bill (H. R. 4395) for the relief of Miss Juliette Betts;

A bill (H. R. 5400) to increase the pension of Mary L. Bacon, widow of the late George B. Bacon, late lieutenant-commander of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 5225) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth M. Williams, of Monroe County, Tenn.;

A bill (H. R. 5712) granting increase of pension to John W. Hines; and

A bill (H. R. 6132) granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Scott.

LOST OR ABANDONED PROPERTY, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 4452) to amend section 416 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT. In line 5, I move to amend by inserting the words "so as to read" after "amended" and before "as follows."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM B. THAYER.

The bill (S. 338) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Bros., and others, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the following-named persons, or their legal representatives, respectively, such amounts as shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have been paid by them, or by the firms they respectively represent, as tax on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by them from warehouse: To George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Bros., $10,790.32; to Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., $19,662.19; to Henry W. Smith, surviving partner of T. & J. W. Gaff & Co., $14,062.50, these payments being a refund of taxes exacted and paid on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by them from the United States bonded warehouse between July 1 and December 31, 1864.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the bill come from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. GALLINGER. It comes from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to carry a pretty large amount of money with it.

Mr. WHITE. I am informed by the Senator having the measure in charge that the bill is for leakage, which, of course, covers the case.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The bill is all right. A similar bill has passed the Senate two or three times before.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the amount proposed to be appropriated by the bill?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I can not state the exact amount.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is a refund of tax collected on whisky deposited in warehouses where the leakage occurred.

Mr. COCKRELL. It amounts to about $45,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No allowance was made for the leakage when the tax was collected.

Mr. CULLOM. I think if it is a good bill it ought to wait.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is one of a number of bills passed heretofore of the same kind. This very bill has passed the Senate on three different occasions heretofore.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, March 17, 1896, and read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 338) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Bros., and others, having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

This bill has frequently been reported favorably from this committee and passed the Senate at the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, at which time it was accompanied by Report No. 79. Your committee readopt said report and report back the bill without amendment and recommend its passage.

The report referred to is as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 352) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Bros., and others, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

"A similar bill was before this committee at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, at which time the following report was agreed to, being Report No. 94 of that session:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 394) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Bros., and others, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

"A similar bill was before this committee at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, at which time the following report was adopted; which was also agreed to in the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, being Report No. 279:

"Thayer Bros., Pate & Co. and J. W. Gaff & Co., in the year 1864 had deposited a large quantity of distilled spirits in a United States bonded warehouse, then under the control of officers of the Government charged with the collection of the internal revenue. That it further appears that the quantity so deposited is correctly stated in the petition of said parties filed with said bill; that it further appears that the quantity originally deposited is correctly stated, as is also the quantity withdrawn, and that during the time said spirits were so deposited, and the time at which the said spirits were withdrawn, there was a percentage of leakage, whereby, as is shown, in the case of Thayer Bros. there is a loss of 7,193.53 gallons, in the case of Pate & Co. a loss of 13,272 gallons, and in the case of J. W. Gaff & Co. a loss of 9,375 gallons. And that it further appears, under direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, these parties severally paid the tax required by law on the quantity originally deposited, without regard to the fact of loss by leakage, in the year 1867; and that against this said parties then and ever since protested in mode and manner as from time to time they have been advised was best to secure relief, their last resort being to Congress for such relief, their appeal being a protest that such collection of taxes was against a proper construction of the act of Congress, June 30, 1864 (section 55), and was against the practice and rulings of the Internal-Revenue Office."

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the fact that the gist of the case is stated in the report thus far read. The rest is merely a recapitulation of the evidence. They put the whisky in the warehouse, it stayed there a certain length of time, it was drawn out, and by exact measurement there was a certain deficiency, and they had to pay the tax on the amount that was first made. They had to pay it as a matter of course. Now they claim the balance; and that is all there is in the case. They claim a refund of the taxes they paid on the amount of spirits that had disappeared during the time it was in the warehouse.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is the case exactly.

Mr. PLATT. The matter that troubles me is that this seems to be a claim dating back to 1864, and it is reported here upon the assumption that the tax ought not to have been collected upon the amount of leakage while the whisky was in the bonded warehouse.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the Government was not entitled to collect the taxes on leakage. But they were collected, and I think some half a dozen bills have been passed heretofore refunding the tax. I think this is perhaps the only case remaining.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senator whether suit could not have been brought in the Court of Claims to recover?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not know whether it was brought or not, and I do not care, so far as that is concerned, not to be abrupt to the Senator from New York; but, under the circumstances, it seems to me there ought to be no objection to the bill. It is the last one of a series where it has been recommended by the Department that the tax be refunded, and it seems to me these people ought to be treated like the others.

Mr. HILL. Can the Senator assure me that this is the last one?

Mr. PLATT. If I had not been interrupted, I was going to say that if this was the last of a series of cases where the tax had been remitted, having been collected in 1864, I should be perfectly satisfied with the passage of the bill, but if it is taking a case out of the rule as it was then adopted and making an exception in behalf of certain persons, when others who are similarly situated do not receive the benefit of the exception, I think we had better pass a general law upon the subject.

Mr. TURPIE. This is the last of the series of bills.

Mr. PLATT. Then I make no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF JAMES W. SCHAUMBURG.

The bill (S. 488) for the relief of the legal representatives and devisees of James W. Schaumburg was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives or devisees of James W. Schaumburg, deceased, the amount of the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of dragoons from July 1, 1836, to March 24, 1845, as heretofore found to be due to him by the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF A. H. HERR.

The bill (S. 450) for the relief of the estate of A. H. Herr, deceased, late of the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Had not that bill better go over until we get some information about it?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I beg pardon.

Mr. WHITE. Is the Senator from Oregon interested in the bill?

Mr. PLATT. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am interested to the extent simply that I reported it; that is all.

Mr. WHITE. The amount involved seems to be rather large.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to examine the report.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] takes quite an interest in the bill.

Mr. WHITE. He could probably explain it if he were here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over without prejudice.

UNCOMPAHGRE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The joint resolution (S. R. 102) directing the Secretary of the Interior to open for public entry all that certain part of the public domain in the State of Utah known as the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. CANNON. In view of the fact that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] has not concluded his remarks on the subject, and in pursuance of the agreement with him, I ask that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice.

PROOF IN PENSION CASES.

The bill (S. 2404) defining and regulating proof in certain pension cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "as," to strike out "satisfactory" and insert "sufficient."

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it would not be better to insert "prima facie"?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state in response to the Senator from Missouri that I so wrote the bill originally, but certain lawyers on the committee objected to that term. I am not a lawyer myself, and I am disposed to be guided by the opinion of the Senator from Missouri on that matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out "sufficient" and insert "prima facie."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Everybody understands that term.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 strike out "sufficient" and insert "prima facie"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the consideration of any application for a pension under any law of the United States the fact that the applicant was accepted and mustered into the military or naval service of the United States shall be taken and held as prima facie proof that such applicant was of sound body and mind at the time he was so accepted and mustered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AFFIDAVITS IN PENSION CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 2519) to amend section 4746, Revised Statutes of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 4746 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read:

SEC. 4746. Every person who knowingly or willfully in anywise procures the making or presentation of any false or fraudulent affidavit concerning any claim for pension or payment thereof, or pertaining to any other matter within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions, or who knowingly or willfully shall make, or cause to be made, or present, or cause to be presented, at any pension agency, any power of attorney or other paper required as a voucher in drawing a pension, which paper bears a date subsequent to that on which it was actually signed or executed, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or by both.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the bill, in line 5, by inserting after the word "amended" the words "so as to read."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. As the next two cases on the Calendar were reported by myself, I think I will take advantage of this opportunity to move to adjourn. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 11, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 11, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on motion of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d ultimo, the number of enlisted men and apprentices in the Navy and Marine Corps March 31, 1896, and also the number of "blue jackets" enlisted in the rating of landsmen; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, certain information relative to the delay in the transmission of public documents through the Washington city postoffice; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of Labor Assembly, No. 1697, Knights of Labor, of Wellston, Ohio, and a petition of the Order of Knights of Labor of Little Rock, Ark., praying for the passage of the so-called Phillips bill, authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions of the legislature of the State of Massachusetts, in support of the Monroe doctrine; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

[Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In the year 1896.]

Resolutions in support of the Monroe doctrine.

Resolved, That the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in general court assembled, has seen with profound gratification that the action of the United States is about to secure a settlement of the controversy between Great Britain and Venezuela which is honorable to both nations, will establish the principle of arbitration in international disputes, and by enforcing the Monroe doctrine, which should be firmly sustained by the United States wherever it justly applies, will protect the smaller American governments from the danger of European aggression.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, properly attested, be transmitted by the secretary of the Commonwealth to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

In senate, adopted April 29, 1896.

In house of representatives, adopted in concurrence April 30, 1896.

A true copy.

Attest:

WM. M. OLIN,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions adopted by Boot and Shoe Cutters' Assembly, No. 3662, of Lynn, Mass., favoring the passage of the so-called Phillips bill, authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions of the Brookfield Conference of Congregational Churches, adopted at its annual meeting at Ware, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation to insure the safety of American citizens, including missionaries, residing in the Turkish Empire; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Revere, Mass., remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called Pasco amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill, which is now in conference, or of any measure which shall in any manner curtail the present jurisdiction of the Boston postal district; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Cigar Makers' Union, No. 80, of Danville, Ill., praying for the Government ownership and control of telegraph lines; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ALLEN presented the petition of John Lynch and sundry other settlers on the Sioux Indian lands in Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation remitting the payments required by section 21 of the act of March 2, 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Nashville, Tenn., praying for the establishment of a department of commerce and manufactures; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ADDRESS OF NATIONAL IRRIGATION CONGRESS.

Mr. WARREN. I present an address issued to the people of the United States by the National Irrigation Congress, at its fourth annual session, at Albuquerque, N. Mex., September 16–19, 1895. The congress was composed of delegates from very many States and Territories; and I ask that the address may be printed as a miscellaneous document, and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HILL. What is the necessity for printing it in the RECORD when it is to be printed as a document?

Mr. WARREN. As a miscellaneous document there will be two or three hundred copies printed.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to its being printed as a miscellaneous document; but I do not think we ought to encumber the RECORD. I think we are trespassing now altogether too far upon the proper province of the RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from New York is disposed to object I do not wish to press the request.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be printed as a document.

Mr. HILL. I will object to its being printed in the RECORD, but not as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The address will be printed as a document and lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 3032) for the relief of William H. Wilder, testamentary executor of the succession of Myra Clark Gaines, deceased, late of the parish of Orleans, in the State of Louisiana; and

A bill (S. 3033) for the relief of William H. Wilder, testamentary executor of the succession of Myra Clark Gaines, deceased, late of the parish of Orleans, in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 105) for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, S. Dak., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2499) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company," reported it with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. MCMILLAN), from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3008) authorizing the employment of day-labor in the construction of certain municipal buildings and works in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr MCMILLAN), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1417) to regulate the employment of labor on public buildings and public grounds belonging to the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FRYE. I report back favorably from the Committee on Commerce without amendment the bill (H. R. 8038) for the protection of yacht owners and ship builders of the United States, and submit a report thereon. I give notice that I shall not call the bill up until the next session of Congress.

Mr. VEST. On behalf of the minority of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], and myself, I propose an amendment to the bill, and ask that it may be printed and go over with the bill until the next session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2739) to confirm the title to the Aspen town site, in the State of Colorado, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan, reported it with amendments.

FORT SULLY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETTIGREW subsequently submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes.

FORT LEWIS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 5481) to restore the lands embraced in the Fort Lewis Military Reservation, in the State of Colorado, to the public domain.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It is a House bill, and local in its character.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPUTY MARSHALS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. TELLER. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back with an amendment the bill (S. 3050) to validate the appointments, acts, and services of certain deputy United States marshals in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, and submit a report thereon. I am directed by the committee to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in line 10, section 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That hereafter United States marshals in said Territory shall give bond, with two or more sureties to be approved by the judge of said district, in the sum of $20,000, conditioned as by law required in regard to the bond of other United States marshals: Provided, That whenever the business of the courts in said Territory shall make it necessary, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, for the United States marshal of any district therein to furnish greater security than the official bond herein required, a bond in the sum not exceeding $50,000 shall be given by said marshal when required by the Attorney-General, who shall fix the amount thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States, to report it with a recommendation that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and that the bill (S. 742) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy which was reported from the Judiciary Committee April 13, with amendments, and is now on the Calendar, be substituted for the House bill, the intention being to substitute for the bankruptcy bill which was passed by the other House Senate bill 742, as reported from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am authorized by the minority of the Judiciary Committee to state to the Senate that the minority of that committee dissents from this report. The minority of the committee favors the House bill on bankruptcy, and will advocate the adoption of that bill with any necessary amendments that may occur to the minority when it comes up for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

FORD'S THEATER DISASTER.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am instructed by the Commission on the Ford's Theater Disaster to report a bill, accompanied by a written report. I suppose it will be necessary to submit a motion that the usual number of copies of the report be printed for the use of the Senate, as it comes from a commission and not a committee, and the ordinary rule of the Senate requiring a certain number of reports to be published from a committee would not cover this case. I therefore move that the usual number be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from West Virginia. This, I understand, is the report of the commission recommending payment of damages to those who were injured in the Ford's Theater disaster.

Mr. FAULKNER. Recommending payment to the injured and including the three death cases that were not presented when the former payment was made at the last session of Congress.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to ask the Senator whether he is not also going to propose an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill covering the cases.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have it now in my hand and will offer it as soon as the bill is read.

The bill (S. 3117) to provide compensation for injuries to person of employees of the Government in the disaster at Ford's Theater, which occurred on the 9th day of June, 1893, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER. I submit the bill in the form of an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3118) to remove the charge of desertion from Joseph B. Colbert; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3119) making appropriation to the Department of Justice to pay Ellery P. Ingham, late United States district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, for extraordinary services rendered in relation to the condemnation proceedings for sites for a new United States mint at Philadelphia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 3120) granting a pension to John Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 3122) for the relief of Bridget Lane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Pacific Railroads (S. 2894) and the views of the minority on that bill and other bills reported adversely by the committee be printed together as one document, for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I have conferred with the chairman of the committee, and he desires that this order shall be taken.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 981) relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2488) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes";

A bill (S. 2790) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell;

A bill (S. 2843) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Boonville, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 2870) to permit Rene C. Baughman to lay pipes in a certain street in the city of Washington.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 3751) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2231) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LACEY, Mr. WILSON of Idaho, and Mr. UNDERWOOD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1171) to pension Hannah Yasell;

A bill (H. R. 1261) for the relief of John Kehl, and to restore him his former rating;

A bill (H. R. 1299) to pension Harriet Woodbury, of Windsor, Vt.;

A bill (H. R. 1936) to remove the charge of desertion standing against David Mosten;

A bill (H. R. 3524) for the relief of James McGowan from the charge of desertion;

A bill (H. R. 3937) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenney, widow of Samuel W. Kenney;

A bill (H. R. 4199) to correct the military record of Edward H. Munson, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second New York Regiment Infantry; and

A bill (H. R. 4598) granting a pension to May Cray.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8820) making provision for the deportation of refugee Canadian Cree Indians from the State of Montana and their delivery to the Canadian authorities; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETER P. FERGUSON.

Mr. VILAS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6431) to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765, the same being the amount of a certain judgment recovered by the United States against Ferguson on the 24th day of December, 1892, in the circuit court for the western district of Wisconsin, for $1,600, and also $165 expended for costs by Ferguson in defending the action, and which judgment was paid in full by him, it being for the value of timber cut from certain lands in Ashland County, Wis., and claimed by the United States, and which lands were subsequently determined by the Supreme Court in the case of Wisconsin Central Railroad Company against Forsythe to be owned by the railroad company, through whom Ferguson obtained his title.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. L. HALL.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1572) for the relief of W. L. Hall.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $178 to W. L. Hall for money expended by him in the discharge of his duty as deputy United States internal-revenue collector during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1890.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. BATE. If there is no objection, I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 167) authorizing foreign exhibitors at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition to be held in Nashville, Tenn., in 1897, to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits, and allowing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The joint resolution was reported unanimously from the Select Committee on International Expositions and has also received the unanimous action of the other House.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

GILMAN WILLIAMS.

Mr. GEAR. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 1020) granting an increase of pension to Gilman Williams.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the pension of Gilman Williams (insane), of Company H, Third Ohio Infantry Volunteers, to $30 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TALLAHATCHIE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. WALTHALL. I ask for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 137) declaring a certain bridge across the Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, State of Mississippi, a lawful structure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out the resolving clause and insert

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 10, section 1, to strike out "by" and insert "on"; so as to make the proviso read:

That the said temporary pile bridge shall be removed thoroughly and completely on or before the 31st day of December, 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill declaring a certain bridge across the Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, State of Mississippi, a lawful structure, and for other purposes."

FRANK D. ORME.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to call up Senate bill 2083 for immediate action.

Mr. FRYE. Quite a number of Senators are asking me that they may have an opportunity to request unanimous consent for the consideration of bills. I feel that the river and harbor bill ought to be proceeded with and certainly it should be completed to-day, but I do not like to oppose my wishes to those of the Senators who are seeking for this opportunity. I give notice that promptly at 1 o'clock I shall demand the regular order and move to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2083) authorizing sale of the title of United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That before the said conveyance is made the said Frank D. Orme shall satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that all taxes and assessments against such lot have been paid.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state that this is a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. It seems to be a unanimous report, and there is no possible reason why the bill should not pass. There is a sort of a cloud over the title. I understand that the gentleman who has the title has already paid a good deal more than the price of the lot, but he is anxious to get rid of all question about the title, and therefore he is willing to pay another thousand dollars, and the Commissioners and the Committee on Claims and the Committee on the District of Columbia and all recommend that this should be done.

Mr. ALLEN. What title has the Government to the property?

Mr. CULLOM. Originally the Government owned the title, I understand, and it was conveyed in some way, I do not know exactly how. Perhaps the report of the committee, or the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] himself, will be able to satisfy the Senator from Nebraska more readily than I could do, as I am not so familiar with the subject as the Senator from West Virginia, who made the report. I call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state that this is a case in which the title of the property has really never been in the United States since 1842, yet there is an apparent cloud upon it that has prevented parties from buying it, as the title companies will not guarantee it. There was a commission appointed I think in 1840 or 1842 to make sale of certain Government lots. They were sold and some of the parties buying did not pay the purchase money. My recollection now is, though I can not remember the exact fact, that in some way this property was not entirely paid for by the original purchasers, but they transferred it, and the title is perfect from 1846 down. There are two little cabins on it, you may say of no value whatever. The Commissioners and also the Attorney-General estimated the full value of the property that ought to be demanded from this person at a thousand dollars, and as by prescription the title would have been perfected long years ago, the Commissioners thought it advisable, in consideration of $1,000, and the requirement that all back taxes shall be paid to the District government up to the present time, though there is no report of any due, to accept this amount as full and complete compensation to the Government for the value of the property. I understand that the Attorney-General also indorses the proposition. There is a written report in full on the subject.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that he will find in the report a letter from the Attorney-General, a letter from A. A. Birney, United States attorney for the District of Columbia, and also a letter from the Commissioners, as well as other letters, recommending that this be done.

Mr. ALLEN. I have not examined the report; my attention was simply attracted by the statement that the property was to be sold at its assessed valuation. The difficulty, as I see it, is that if the Government has title to this property it ought not to be sold for less than its actual fair market value. If the Government has no title to it, then we ought to relinquish any apparent title that we have of record to this man without any compensation.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think the reason why the sum of $1,000 was fixed is because that was assumed to be a full compensation for the original sale, and as a part of the purchase money of the original sale was not paid there is a defective title.

Mr. ALLEN. If the bill authorizes the sale of the property for what it was worth in 1842, I am opposed to it, and I think the case ought to be investigated further. If the original purchasers or contractors for this property in 1842 have suffered it to lapse and have not performed their contract by paying as they should, they should not be permitted, nor should their assignees be permitted, to wait for over fifty years, until the property becomes valuable, and then procure an act of Congress authorizing the transfer of the property at its original value.

I ask that the bill may go over, that it may be investigated.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not insist upon the bill going over.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not know how we could investigate it more thoroughly. If the Senator himself will read the report he will see that the committee gave it a most thorough investigation, and that this proposition is indorsed by all of the Federal office-holders who could have any information on the subject as a most fair and liberal proposition.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not see that that adds strength to it.

Mr. CULLOM. The man who has the property has paid more than it is worth two or three times, I understand.

Mr. ALLEN. The statement of neither the Senator from Illinois nor the Senator from West Virginia seems to be clear. I gather that in 1842, or about that time, the Government contracted to sell this property to some individual who is not named. The person with whom the contract was made failed to carry out the provisions of the contract and has failed, up to this time, to carry out the provisions of the contract or to make the payment required by the contract of sale. Now, fifty-four years after that transaction, this bill proposes to permit the transferee or assignee of the original contractor to obtain title to this lot by the payment of a sum that would have been a fair equivalent for the property fifty-four years ago. That seems to be the statement as made by the Senator.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think that Mr. Birney's letter, which is printed in the report, and which is short, states the case much better and more clearly than I did, and the Senator will see that his views are concurred in by the Attorney-General and by all. Mr. Birney says:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to state that in accordance with the directions contained in your letter to me of the 3d ultimo I have made an investigation with a view to ascertaining "the right, title, and interest" of the Government in and to lot 5, in square 1113, being the lot referred to in Senate bill No. 2083, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.

The condition of the title to the lot is shown in a report made to me by Assistant District Attorney Taggart, which is inclosed herewith. From this report it appears that the legal title to the lot passed from the Government to James Greenleaf by a certificate granted to him under date of July 10, 1794—and which was duly recorded among the land records, and that it remained outstanding in Greenleaf and his assignees until restored to the United States by a decree of court passed in the year 1831; that immediately it was listed for taxation, for the nonpayment of which it was sold and a tax deed issued.

I find that I did not state the time correctly—

The only title of Mr. Orme is traceable to this tax deed, and the question presented is whether in the event of a suit an adverse possession under it could, the circumstances considered, be successfully set up as a bar against the United States. I have carefully considered the views expressed by Mr. Taggart, and concur in his opinion that the conflicting claims of the Government and of Mr. Orme in the premises make the case a proper one for adjustment through compromise, and that the interest of the United States should be relinquished upon the payment of a suitable sum.

The condition of the title to this lot is substantially the same as that of the title to lot 1 in the same square, in respect of which I recently made a like recommendation.

Two papers transmitted to me with your letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

A. A. BIRNEY,
United States Attorney, District of Columbia.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

That presents a different view from what I expressed.

Mr. ALLEN. I am entirely satisfied from that report on the case that the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. FAULKNER. Why so?

Mr. ALLEN. I object to the further consideration of the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the bill will go over.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 175) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain uses of national military parks.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that, in order to obtain practical benefits of great value to the country from the establishment of national military parks, the parks and their approaches be declared to be national fields for military maneuvers for the Regular Army of the United States and the National Guard or militia of the States; but they shall be opened for such purposes only in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and under such regulations as he may prescribe, and it authorizes the Secretary of War, within the limits of appropriations which may from time to time be available for the purpose, to assemble, at his discretion, in camp, at such season of the year and for such period as he may designate, at such field of military maneuvers, such portions of the military forces of the United States as he may think best, to receive military instruction there, and to make and publish regulations governing the assembling of the National Guard or militia of the several States upon the maneuvering grounds, and detail instructors from the Regular Army for such forces during their exercises.

Mr. STEWART. From what committee was that bill reported?

Mr. HAWLEY. From the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will make a brief explanation. The commissioners of the magnificent Chickamauga Park and the adjoining possessions of the Federal Government find a disposition to go there on the part of the National Guard or militia of the several States, and it will also prove a very fine ground for any regular troops who may be within easy reach, simply for drill. The National Guard perhaps will go there and camp.

There is no money whatever required by this bill. Anyone who has been to the Chickamauga Park will remember the fine fields there are there for the maneuvering of troops and how admirable a place it would be for the National Guard of Alabama or Georgia or Tennessee to pass a week there and drill, and, if they choose, to fight over again the battles of the war. This is simply permissive. It is to be regulated entirely by the Secretary of War.

Mr. STEWART. Voluntary action?

Mr. HAWLEY. Voluntary action entirely.

Mr. STEWART. Without any expense to the General Government?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no expense authorized by this bill except such as the Secretary of War may make within the limits of the appropriations which may from time to time be available for such purposes to assemble the regular troops there. If he gets the appropriation he can do it, and if he does not of course he can not.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT-HOUSE AND JAIL AT NAVAJO, ARIZ.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house and jail at the county seat thereof.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Territories with amendments, in line 7, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "five" and insert "six," and after the word "county," at the end of the bill, to insert:

Provided, That a vote of the duly qualified electors of said county shall first be taken upon the question of the issue of the bonds under the provisions of this act, which election shall be held in all respects as required by the general election laws of the Territory of Arizona, and unless a majority of the qualified electors of said county shall vote at said election for the issue of bonds as in this act provided, said bonds shall not be issued.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of supervisors of the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, be, and are hereby, authorized to issue bonds of said county not exceeding $15,000 in amount, payable in not less than five nor more than twenty years, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent per annum, interest and principal payable in lawful money of the United States, interest payable semiannually, and which said bonds shall not be sold for less than par, for the construction of a court-house and jail at the county seat of said county: Provided, That a vote of the duly qualified electors of said county shall first be taken upon the question of the issue of the bonds under the provisions of this act, which election shall be held in all respects as required by the general election laws of the Territory of Arizona, and unless a majority of the qualified electors of said county shall vote at said election for the issue of bonds as in this act provided said bonds shall not be issued.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. MAHONY.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 900) to provide for the payment of the claim of William H. Mahoney.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to receive and redeem, without the indorsement of N. A. Rogers, and to pay to W. H. Mahoney, the present owner thereof, out of the moneys appropriated for the redemption of bonds issued by the Treasury Department pursuant to an act of Congress approved March 2, 1861, to provide for expenses incurred by the Territories in the suppression of Indian hostilities therein in the years 1855 and 1856, the sum of $500, upon the delivery by W. H. Mahoney to the Secretary of that certain bond designated as "Oregon war debt bond No. 1358," issued on March 24, 1862, by the Treasury Department pursuant to said act, and upon W. H. Mahoney giving a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000 to hold harmless the United States against repayment of said bond, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend the bill by correcting the spelling of the name "Mahoney." Wherever it occurs the name should be spelled "Mahony."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be made, in the absence of objection, wherever the name appears in the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the payment of the claim of William H. Mahony."

POINT BONITA LIFE-SAVING STATION.

Mr. WHITE. There is on the Calendar a bill (S. 2980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California, which was favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce without amendment. There is a House bill on the same subject, which is in exactly the same words, and has lately been referred to the Committee on Commerce. I ask that the House bill may be recalled from the committee and substituted for the Senate bill and now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Commerce will be discharged from the consideration of the bill, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHITE. I now ask for the consideration of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITE. I now move that Senate bill 2980, for which the House bill has been substituted, may be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

FORCE SCHOOL PROPERTY.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 142) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to dispose of the Force school property on Massachusetts avenue and to obtain another site for that school.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to dispose of the Force school property on Massachusetts avenue and to obtain, by purchase or condemnation, another site in the vicinity and to erect on the new site a building for school purposes.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRENCH W. THORNHILL.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3606) granting a pension to French W. Thornhill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Dr. French W. Thornhill, of Spring Valley, Minn., at $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA D. LARSH AND CHARLES M. LARSH.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 412) for the relief of Mrs. Emma D. Larsh, of Denver, Colo. I desire to offer a substitute which will embrace that bill and the one following on the Calendar, being the bill (S. 413) for the relief of Charles M. Larsh, of Denver, Colo. The bill which I desire substituted for these bills is exactly the same as one which has been introduced in the other House and favorably reported upon by the committee there.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3121) for the relief of Mrs. Emma D. Larsh and Charles M. Larsh.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator what is the basis of that bill? The committee report shows nothing of it. Has it been recommended by the Department?

Mr. WARREN. In reply to the question of the Senator from Wisconsin, I desire to say that two bills were introduced and favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. The facts in the case are these: These entrymen made entry upon a section of land, proved up upon it, and paid the Government the amount of money that is sought to be recovered. At a later time an agent of the Government approached the parties and threatened them with suit, both criminal and civil, on the ground that they had made some agreement as to water.

The man and his wife relinquished the land, other parties settled upon it, proved up, and paid for it. As shown by the report, an affidavit made by the agent of the Government shows that the statement I am making is correct; that he obtained this relinquishment by threats of personal prosecution rather than a voluntary relinquishment. If this bill passes, the people will have gotten back the amount of money they paid, and will have lost the use of it for a number of years, and lost their rights. The Government, on the other hand, will have lost nothing, but will have gained the relinquishment of their rights and the use of the money since.

Mr. VILAS. Do I understand the Government has received from the subsequent purchasers the full price?

Mr. WARREN. Exactly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I now move that the two Senate bills on the same subject, being the bill (S. 412) for the relief of Mrs. Emma D. Larsh, of Denver., Colo., and the bill (S. 413) for the relief of Charles M. Larsh, of Denver, Colo., be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PORTLAND, OREG.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask the Senate to consider at this time Senate bill 1827, which is a very short bill and will not consume time.

Mr. FRYE. I gave notice that at 1 o'clock I would be obliged to call up the river and harbor bill. I know of no Senator who has more interest in that bill than the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope the Senator will allow me to call up the bill to which I refer. It is a bill to increase and limit the appropriation for a public building at Portland, Oreg., and to designate its uses. It is important that it should be passed, and it is less than half a page in length.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. FRYE. I will yield to the Senator from Oregon, but to no one else, I desire to say now, so that no one will ask me to do so.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1827) to increase and limit the appropriation for a public building at Portland, Oreg., and to designate its uses.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 11, after the words "court rooms," to insert "Signal Service offices"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the appropriations heretofore made for the purchase of a site and the construction of a public building at Portland, Oreg., there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the further sum of $650,000, which amount, including the amount heretofore appropriated, shall be the limit of the cost of such building, such building, when completed, to be for the purposes of a custom-house, appraisers' stores, court rooms, Signal Service offices, and office of the United States surveyor-general.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 1171) to pension Hannah Yazell;

A bill (H. R. 1261) for the relief of John Kehl and to restore him to his former rating;

A bill (H. R. 1299) to pension Harriet Woodbury, of Windsor, Vt.;

A bill (H. R. 3037) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenney, widow of Samuel W. Kenney; and

A bill (H. R. 4598) granting a pension to May Cray.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 1936) to remove the charge of desertion standing against David Mosten;

A bill (H. R. 3524) for the relief of James McGowan from the charge of desertion; and

A bill (H. R. 4199) to correct the military record of Edward H. Munson, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second New York Regiment Infantry.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WHITE to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I had supposed that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], or some one of the majority of the Committee on Commerce, which reported the amendment, would reply. The Senator from Maine, however, declined to do so, claiming that he had the right to conclude the debate. I therefore propose to occupy the attention for a short time upon the proposition reported by the majority of the committee.

If this, Mr. President, were an ordinary case I should not feel called upon to say anything after the able, the exhaustive, and the unanswerable argument made by the Senator from California on Friday and Saturday of last week in opposition to the amendment of the committee; but I do not regard this as an ordinary case. Disclaiming any intent to reflect upon the motives of any Senator who supports this appropriation of $3,000,000 for Santa Monica, yet from my standpoint I regard it as the most unjustifiable and inexcusable attempt that I have ever seen in the Senate to disregard the public interest, to override public sentiment, and to make an appropriation of money the effect of which will be to benefit private individuals only. For that reason, as well as one other, which I shall now state, I feel called upon as a member of the Committee on Commerce to present my objections to the adoption of the committee amendment.

The other objection to its adoption is that I feel a deep interest in the passage of the river and harbor bill. I believe it is important to the country that some river and harbor bill should become a law during the present session of Congress, and I believe, furthermore, if this amendment is forced on the bill that it will greatly endanger and probably defeat any appropriation for rivers and harbors during the present session of Congress.

The people of this country, or a great majority of them, approve appropriations for the improvement of rivers in this country, because they believe the rivers are the only protection they have against the inordinate and exorbitant charges of railroad companies. They approve such appropriations when they are made in the public interest. They do not, however, approve such appropriations when made to subserve private interests only.

In every other item of this bill save one, in every item of every river and harbor bill which has passed heretofore, the universal rule has been to make appropriations for rivers and harbors upon the report of army officers belonging to the Corps of Engineers. There are but two exceptions to that within my knowledge. One was an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River below New Orleans, which improvement was made under the supervision of Captain Eads, and in that case there was a contract between Captain Eads and the Government, that unless he succeeded in doing what he proposed to do no pay should be given him. There is one other appropriation which was made in 1892, I think, for Brunswick, Ga., upon the same principle as that which was made for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River with Captain Eads; but with those two exceptions, all appropriations made for these public purposes have been made upon the report and estimate of the army engineers. This is the first attempt to overrule and override the report of army engineers by private engineers, hired by private parties who have private interests at stake. These are the reasons why I deem this amendment so very objectionable. It is because of the fact that there is no Government engineer who has ever said that this appropriation should be made for Santa Monica.

I do not now propose to go into the particulars to the extent to which the Senator from California did, but I shall state the general facts, which are admitted and not denied. In 1890 it was believed by Congress that it was important to make provision for a deep-sea harbor upon the Pacific Coast. In the river and harbor act of that year it was provided that three army officers belonging to the Corps of Engineers should be appointed as a board to visit the Pacific Coast to select between certain points named in that order a deep-sea harbor for that coast. That board was appointed by the Secretary of War, and consisted of the following distinguished officers of the United States Army: G. H. Mendell, colonel, Corps of Engineers; G. L. Gillespie, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers; W. H. H. Benyaurd, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers. I shall not go at length into this report, as the Senator from California did, but I will read the conclusions at which these distinguished officers of the United States Army arrived. They say:

> In its natural condition San Pedro Bay is better protected from the dangerous winds and seas than Santa Monica Bay.

They conclude as follows:

> In view of the fact that San Pedro Bay in its natural condition affords better protection both from prevailing winds and from dangerous storms than Santa Monica Bay; that protection can be secured at less cost for equal development of breakwater at the former than at the latter; that a larger area of protected anchorage from the prevailing westerly swells can be secured, the severe storms from the southeast being infrequent, and that there is already an interior harbor that will be a valuable addition to the outer harbor, the board considers San Pedro Bay as the better location for the deep-water harbor provided for by the act.

They all three united in that report. There was no dissent from any quarter.

Mr. President, if this had been an ordinary case, if extraordinary influences had not been brought to bear, Congress, upon that report made by these engineers, would have made the appropriation in 1892 for this deep-water harbor at San Pedro. Why was it not done? The reason was that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] either before or after this examination was made—I do not know which—had visited the Pacific Coast. He remained for a number of days at Santa Monica and also visited San Pedro. In his opinion Santa Monica was the better place for this deep-sea harbor, and he believed that the engineers of the United States Army had made a mistake. So believing, that was stated to the committee and no appropriation was made.

What was done, and done, too, upon the recommendation of the chairman of that committee and placed in the river and harbor bill of 1892? I will read the provision, which is as follows:

> The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of five engineer officers of the United States Army, whose duty it shall be to make a careful and critical examination for a proposed deep-water harbor at San Pedro or Santa Monica bays, and to report as to which is the more eligible location for such harbor in depth, width, and capacity to accommodate the largest ocean-going vessels and the commercial and naval necessities of the country, together with an estimate of the cost. Said board of engineers shall report the result of its investigations to the Secretary of War on or before the 1st of November, 1892; and $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, are hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Mr. President, the Senate will bear in mind that when the Senator from Maine differed with the other board, out of consideration for his great ability, out of consideration for his thorough knowledge in regard to the commerce of this country, the committee submitted to have another board appointed, and in order that it might have weight and force and its conclusions to be final, there were five engineers, and not three, placed upon the board under the law which I have just read, directing them to proceed to the Pacific Coast to make a critical examination of these two points and to report their findings to the Secretary of War. Those engineers were appointed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], who was at that time Secretary of War. The last board consisted of the following-named gentlemen: William P. Craighill, colonel, Corps of Engineers (and now General Craighill, Chief of Engineers); Henry M. Robert, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers; Peter C. Hains, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers; C. W. Raymond, major, Corps of Engineers, and Thomas H. Handbury, major, Corps of Engineers.

Without going at length into their report, I will read a few extracts as to what these five distinguished men say, and I assert here to-day that these five men, and no man would assert to the contrary, are as eminent in their profession, as distinguished and honorable gentlemen as ever served, or are to-day serving, in the United States Army, who had no interest in the result; educated at West Point to tell the truth, to rely upon their honor, would be actuated by no personal motives, or anything except an honest desire to comply with the law, and to discharge their duties in a manner creditable to themselves. They say:

> The board is of opinion that the location of San Pedro is decidedly the best, considered as a place of shelter and for receiving and discharging freight.
> The location at San Pedro has natural protection from all winds and seas, except from the southeast around to the southwest. The San Pedro Hill, 1,493 feet high, which forms the west side of the bay, furnishes a more perfect shelter from wind and sea than can be afforded by any artificial structure in Santa Monica Bay. In all the proposed locations the foundations are favorable.

Mr. BACON. What is the last sentence? Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. BERRY. It says:

In all the proposed locations the foundations are favorable.

Here it is repeated in a stronger way, if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will notice it:

In all the harbors the holding ground is good. Some doubts have been expressed with regard to the character of the holding ground at San Pedro, but after diligent inquiry the board is satisfied that it is as good in this location as in the others.

The final conclusion, the wind up of the report, is as follows:

Having made a careful and critical examination for a proposed deep-water harbor at San Pedro or Santa Monica bays, as required by law, the board is unanimously of opinion that the location selected by the board of engineers of 1890, at the present anchorage at the westerly side of San Pedro Bay under Point Firmin, is the "more eligible location for such harbor in depth, width, and capacity to accommodate the largest ocean-going vessels and the commercial and naval necessities of the country."

That is the conclusion of the second board sent there at the instance of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], because he was dissatisfied with the first report.

Mr. GEORGE. Did they make an estimate?

Mr. BERRY. There is an estimate of cost.

Mr. GEORGE. Made by the last board?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir. I will turn to it later. I do not know whether I can put my hand on it now. There is an estimate. I forget the amount of it. It is $4,000,000, is it not, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. FRYE. The first board reported $4,000,000; the second board about $3,000,000.

Mr. BERRY. Very well; the estimates are there.

Mr. GEORGE. How much difference was there between the estimates of the two boards?

Mr. BERRY. It is some hundred thousand dollars more at Santa Monica than at San Pedro, as I remember it.

Mr. FRYE. The first board estimated $700,000 more at Santa Monica than at San Pedro and the second board estimated $37,000 more at Santa Monica than at San Pedro.

Mr. BERRY. Bear in mind that here were eight engineers, first one board of three and then another board of five, all distinguished in their profession, having no interest except a desire to report that which they believed was for the best interests of the country, and they unanimously say that San Pedro is the better location.

Now, is that all that can be said in behalf of San Pedro? No. The public sentiment, the common sense of the people of southern California, before this board had ever gone there, had almost unanimously agreed that San Pedro was the better place for the location of a deep-sea harbor. Up to that time I assert here without fear of contradiction ninety-nine one-hundredths of the people of that State believed that San Pedro was the proper place for the harbor. It is true—and this was shown before the committee—that a number of them stated that there had been some change of sentiment, but I will meet that later, and show how the change was brought about. Not only that, but these reports were before the Committee on Commerce. Both of the Senators from California were there in the committee room, of opposite political beliefs. One of them has resided in that immediate locality for thirty or forty years.

The member of Congress who represents that district in the other House was also before the committee. They all three united in saying that if any appropriation were made for a deep-sea harbor there it should be made at San Pedro and not at Santa Monica. It would seem to a man who is not familiar with this case in all its surroundings that that ought to have been sufficient. Here were two boards of engineers; here was the public sentiment in that section of the country; here were both Senators from that State and the member of Congress, who stated before the committee that every man who was a candidate in that section last year declared himself in favor of San Pedro as the location of the harbor. Yet, notwithstanding all that, a majority of the Committee on Commerce said, "We will locate this deep-water harbor at Santa Monica and not at San Pedro."

Mr. President, I propose to show the only reason they gave for it. I intend to state it fairly, and if I misstate it I stand ready to be corrected. The first and most powerful reason was the fact that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] had seen the two locations and believed that Santa Monica was the better place. To offset that I will state that there are two Senators who sit on this side of the Chamber who have frequently been to both localities, and they say that San Pedro is by far the better place of the two. What else did we have besides the statement of the Senator from Maine or his opinion? We had in addition two civil engineers, men said to be eminent in their profession. One is Mr. Hood, who is the general engineer of the Southern Pacific Railroad, of which Collis P. Huntington is president, as I understand. Mr. Hood is said to be an engineer of ability. He came before the House committee, and we have his testimony as taken there. He said he believed Santa Monica was the better place; but the Senate will bear in mind that the same engineer went before the last board of five United States engineers, presented everything to that board that he could say in behalf of Santa Monica, and they considered every statement he made before they made their last report.

I have nothing to say against Mr. Hood; I am told that he is a splendid engineer; but when it comes to taking his testimony, interested as he is, interested as he admits he is, being the engineer of the man but for whom no question would ever have been made in favor of Santa Monica, being the engineer of the man who is most directly interested financially in having a deep-water harbor located at Santa Monica, as a matter of course his prejudices and his predilections are to be taken into consideration in coming to a conclusion as between him and disinterested officers of the United States.

There was one other civil engineer. That is Mr. E. L. Corthell. The Senator from Maine says Mr. Corthell is a distinguished engineer and a great man. Mr. Corthell in his answer to the minority of the committee practically admits all that the Senator from Maine says about him—that he is a great engineer, a great man. I do not dispute it. I am not here to deny it. But I say that he comes before the Senate and before the committee as the employee of Mr. Huntington. It is true that in the reply he made to the minority of the committee, which he had printed as a pamphlet and circulated in the Senate, he tries to evade the force of that fact, but I state that his own statement before the committee of the Senate shows that Mr. Huntington paid his expenses; that Mr. Huntington first spoke to him about going there, and that while he was unwilling to go without the approval of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], who was then chairman of the House committee, he went there as Mr. Huntington's employee, and his efforts and his attempt to show that he is a disinterested engineer have only weakened with me the statement he otherwise made.

Mr. GEORGE. Was he at that time employed by the Southern Pacific Company?

Mr. BERRY. I will show the Senator his own statement about it, taken down by a stenographer. I asked him this question:

In the beginning of your remarks you said something about going out there at the instance of Senators. Did I understand you to say so?

Mr. CORTHELL. I meant with the approval of Senators.

Senator BERRY. They did not employ you to go out there, did they?

Mr. CORTHELL. No, sir.

Senator BERRY. Who employed you?

Mr. CORTHELL. Nobody at the time; but afterwards Mr. Huntington paid my expenses. Mr. Huntington asked me, in the first place, if I would make the examination. I said that I did not think I would like to do so in my position, because it would be officious if I should make an examination and ask to be heard before a committee. I said: "If Senator FRYE and Mr. BLANCHARD (then chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors) would like me to make an examination I will make it."

Senator BERRY. There was no order of Congress for you to make it?

Mr. CORTHELL. No; I received a telegram from Mr. CATCHINGS while at San Diego, asking my opinion, but expressly stating that he did not intend to employ me, but that he wished me to give my opinion.

In the reply that he afterwards made to the minority of the committee after the testimony was taken—I do not undertake to quote him literally, but I shall do so if it is questioned—he says, "I consider that I went out there at the request of the chairmen of the committees of Congress." He says, furthermore, "It is true that as I was leaving for California Mr. Huntington spoke to me about it." But he says here that Mr. Huntington first asked him to go, and that he was unwilling to go unless it was approved by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and by the chairman of the House committee.

Mr. GEORGE. What I wish to know is whether at that time or before or afterwards he was in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. BERRY. He was. He so stated in his answer to the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. The Senator from California asked him this question:

You had done some work for Mr. Huntington before that?

Mr. CORTHELL. I was, for four years, when obtaining a charter from Congress, the representative of six railroads at New Orleans, and the president of the Southern Bridge and Railroad Company while the charter was being obtained for a railroad bridge over the Mississippi; it was (by previous agreement among the directors of the companies) then transferred to the railroad interests. That was the object of getting the charter. I resigned my position as president, and was reelected chief engineer and Mr. Huntington was elected president. Those are my relations with him. Of course I was very glad on account of these relations to do anything which I could properly do that Mr. Huntington requested.

That is his own testimony taken before the committee.

I do not propose to comment further upon Mr. Corthell. I have never believed in Senators standing here and criticising to a great extent others who can not reply to them upon the floor of the Senate; but when Mr. Corthell answered saying that he was disinterested in this matter, as he said two years ago, when he saw proper to go into the public prints and print a pamphlet replying to the committee which had made a report here, it seems to me he laid down the gage and he can not complain of any comments which may be made upon him.

If he had come before the committee and frankly said that he made the examination in the interest of Mr. Huntington, that he was paid by him to make it, that he believed it was correct, I would have had more respect for his opinion. But when he seeks to make it appear before the Senate that he is disinterested, when it is known to a number of Senators on this floor that he has been one of the most active agents Mr. Huntington has had here for the last ten days who have thronged the Marble Room and the corridors of the Capitol, then he can not very well say that he comes here in a disinterested capacity.

Now, having said this much, I do not propose to comment upon the testimony in regard to the different conditions that exist out there. I do not pretend to know, nor would I know if I were to go there, as to which is the better harbor, Santa Monica or San Pedro. Mr. Corthell may be a great and distinguished engineer. He is undoubtedly swift to state everything that is favorable to Santa Monica and slow to state anything that is favorable to San Pedro. Probably he is correct; I do not deny his position; but I remember one point which he made, and that is this: He stated that while the winds there blew in a southerly direction, as I understood him, the waves beneath, which went down to the bottom, would carry the sand in a northerly direction and would greatly interfere with, and pile up and pack sand against, the breakwater, if it was built at San Pedro.

Bear in mind that he said the sand coming from the bottom of the ocean would be carried northerly so as to interfere with the breakwater. Then he was confronted by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] with this proposition. The Senator from California said that a boat was sunk in San Pedro Harbor loaded with coal, and that the coal afterwards drifted in a southerly direction and came out on the beach south of San Pedro. Mr. Corthell said yes, he had been informed of that occurrence and had made a note of it, and that the undertow or the wave action—I do not know what he called it—would carry the sand to the north, but that the wind or something else would carry coal sunk there down south. That may be all true, as I have stated; I do not pretend to be informed upon the subject, but it convinced me that no question could be put to that man which militated against Santa Monica or which would show in favor of San Pedro that he was not ready with some kind of answer to meet it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator remember that the first board held to precisely the same theory that Mr. Corthell did—that the action of wind on the sand would result in gradually filling it up, providing a breakwater were attached to the shore without any break in it?

Mr. BERRY. I do not remember that either the first or the second board said that there was some kind of a peculiar undertow on the Pacific coast which would carry sand in one direction and coal in another.

Mr. FRYE. That is not the question at all.

Mr. BERRY. I will say to the Senator that my information about the first board is that it had been represented to them, and they believed, that there might be danger to the breakwater from drifting sand. They made provision for an opening, as I remember it, to meet that condition.

Mr. FRYE. Exactly.

Mr. BERRY. The last board stated that they did not attach any importance to that, and in that one particular they did not agree with the first board. That is my recollection.

Mr. FRYE. But the first board did agree with Mr. Corthell.

Mr. BERRY. As to the sand, but not as to the coal.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, the coal. It is altogether too small business to argue anything of that kind in a case involving so much as this does.

Mr. BERRY. What is small or large business to argue I will be the judge of, and not the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. I beg the Senator's pardon; I should not have said what I did say.

Mr. BERRY. But I admit that there are questions in this matter much larger than, and which rise high and far above, any question as to whether Santa Monica or San Pedro is the better harbor. I assert here to-day, in answer to the Senator from Maine, that in my opinion it would be much better that there should never be a deep-sea harbor upon the Pacific Coast, it would be much better to take the $3,000,000 and dump it into the Pacific Ocean, than that the country should come to know that the Senate is willing to override its army engineers, to override the public interest, to override the public opinion, in order to make an appropriation for private greed and private gain. That is the main objection I have to this report.

I frankly state that of my own knowledge I do not know which is the better place. I do know that these army officers, who are disinterested, say that San Pedro is the better place. I do know that Major Raymond, a man of remarkable intelligence, who has been an engineer in the United States Army for thirty years, who is now in charge of the great breakwater on the Delaware at Philadelphia, says that in his opinion a breakwater could not be built at Santa Monica; that so far as he knows, and he has studied the question for thirteen years, there is not a breakwater throughout the wide world located in a harbor situated as Santa Monica is. That is in his testimony, and the Senator will not deny it.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Arkansas know, when he says that Major Raymond has charge of the Delaware appropriation, that the committee deliberately overruled Major Raymond and overruled the Board of Engineers and put a provision into the Delaware appropriation that no further money should be expended on the project which they had under consideration, nor should there be expended any money hitherto appropriated to carry out the contracts which the army engineers had made?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. I will yield to the Senator from California in a moment. If it were entirely polite to do so I should reply to the Senator from Maine as he did to me a moment ago and say, in the way he puts it, that this is too small a matter to enter into the discussion of this great question. The Senator from Maine knows that in the case to which he refers the people of Delaware, through their Senator here, and through ex-Senator Higgins, came before the committee and represented that the work upon the Delaware River was obstructing some creeks and rivers in the State of Delaware; that it was cutting off from communication with Philadelphia and with Wilmington and with other points a number of the people of that State, and that it endangered their homes. They said the river would probably overflow, and they would lose everything they had. In view of that statement, made by these two distinguished gentlemen from Delaware, the committee did agree to suspend the work there until it could be ascertained if there was not some way by which those people could be protected. Does the Senator from Maine mean to insinuate to the Senate that that action was taken because of the incompetency of Major Raymond in any way?

Mr. FRYE. It was taken because the Senate committee did not believe that if the projects of the army engineers were carried out Delaware and its rivers entering into the Delaware River could be protected, and they overruled the board, as they do, without the slightest hesitation, whenever they think they ought to do so.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Arkansas permit me?

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand the Delaware case, it is not stated fairly at all by the Senator from Maine. The committee, as I understand it, prevented further work upon the project in order to protect the riparian rights of various landed proprietors. They did not stop the work because they assumed to know more about the engineering project than the Government engineers did, but they did so to protect private interests upon the shore with which the Government engineers were not at all concerned; and they acted, too, upon the request of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. BERRY. Major Raymond, and no one knows it better than the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee, stated that under the law he was only required to do the work so as to improve the commerce of that great river, and that he was not charged with the protection of the rights of individuals or the effect that his work might have upon individuals in the State of Delaware. That is the fact, and any idea that the Senator from Maine may mean to convey to the Senate that there was any reflection upon Major Raymond or upon the board of engineers in that action of the committee is unwarranted by the facts. Not one word was ever asserted there that they were doing the work contrary to law, or that they were not doing it for the best interests of the improvement of the Delaware River. So much, then, for that case.

Mr. FRYE. We stopped their project very suddenly.

Mr. BERRY. These two engineers of whom I have spoken, Mr. Hood, who is a regular engineer of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and Mr. Corthell, employed by C. P. Huntington, are the only two private engineers who have ever gone there and made examination and examined those works with a view to determining which is a better place for a harbor. I will admit, and it is in proof, that a large number of sea captains and pilots have made statements on both sides of this question as to which is the better place in regard to holding ground. But I am talking about engineers who went there and made the examination. Here are eight United States engineers, disinterested, gentlemen of ability, educated at the cost of the Government, honorable men, one of them to-day a general in chief of the engineers, standing on one side, and on the other side stand Mr. Hood, the regular engineer of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and Mr. E. L. Corthell, who admitted himself that Mr. Huntington paid his expenses when he went to make the examination. So much, then, for that.

What other argument is used by the Senator from Maine as to why this should be done? One argument used is that Mr. C. P. Huntington had a railroad at Santa Monica and another short road running up to San Pedro; that he had started to build a pier, and spent a considerable amount of money at San Pedro; that he dropped that work, went to Santa Monica, and has put in probably, he said, about $1,000,000 in building a pier at Santa Monica.

I have been asked by Senators outside if San Pedro is the better place why did Mr. Huntington drop that scheme and go down and spend $1,000,000 at Santa Monica? Mr. President, I do not know all the reasons that actuated Mr. Huntington; I would not undertake to state as a matter of fact what controlled him. My information in regard to his character is that it would be a hazardous undertaking for any mortal man to attempt to account for his motives in the great transactions with which he has been connected.

I can give my opinion, however, as to why this change was made and why he put his money in at Santa Monica and ceased to put it in at San Pedro. The Senate will bear in mind that at San Pedro the shore line, the wharf privileges, were owned largely by the county of Los Angeles and the State of California. Under the rules and regulations the shore privileges and the wharf privileges are open to any man and to any railroad that sees proper to go there. One railroad had taken advantage of that and had come into San Pedro across what was called Rattlesnake Island. Already at San Pedro Mr. Huntington had competition with the chief railroad in California, that is, the Terminal Railroad, which had some connection with his chief competitor, the Santa Fe Railroad, in the State of California. That is one reason why. He had a competitor already at San Pedro and he could not have a monopoly of those privileges there.

I will tell the Senator from Maine (and I am sorry that he has left his seat) what I believe to be another reason. Bear in mind, I do not state it as a fact, but I state it as my conclusion after having heard all the testimony. The other reason I believe to be is that the Senator from Maine had been out there and had given an opinion that this breakwater ought to be built and would be built at Santa Monica. No man knew better than Mr. Huntington the powerful influence of the Senator from Maine in the Senate, augmented in a matter of this kind, as it would be, by the fact that he was chairman of the Committee on Commerce. In addition to that, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] was also a member of the Committee on Commerce, and was known to be most earnestly in favor of the location of the deep-sea harbor at Santa Monica. I imagine that having competition at San Pedro, believing that with the influence of these two popular Senators, supplemented by his own influence, which is not to be despised in a great contest, he believed he would be able to force the location of the deep-sea harbor at Santa Monica and get the appropriation. That is my belief as to the reasons and motives that actuated him.

Mr. GEORGE. What competition is there at Santa Monica?

Mr. BERRY. There is no competition there.

Mr. GEORGE. Is there any chance for competition there?

Mr. BERRY. There is a dispute on that point. There are different statements made about that. The Senator from Maine has quoted frequently and relies almost entirely upon the civil engineers. I think I will read from another civil engineer in answer to the Senator from Mississippi. Now, bear in mind, as I said before, the Senator from Maine relies entirely upon the civil engineers. I propose to read from the testimony of a civil engineer on the other side. I frankly confess and state that he had the same interest to testify in behalf of San Pedro that Mr. Corthell had to testify in behalf of Santa Monica. He was employed by the friends of San Pedro to come here and appear before the committee and make his statement. His name is Mr. H. Hawgood. After stating what he believed, and giving his reasons for believing that San Pedro was the better place, he was asked in regard to the approaches at Santa Monica:

Senator WHITE. Taking the approach from Santa Monica by the tracks of the Southern Pacific Company, what are the facilities for other tracks of railroad companies, independent of the Southern Pacific?

Mr. HAWGOOD. In my opinion, there is room for one other track outside of the track of the Southern Pacific as far as Santa Monica Canyon. From Santa Monica Canyon west there is no room for a track.

Now that is one witness. This is contradicted by Mr. Huntington. He says that ten tracks can be built there. I believe, if I am not mistaken from the testimony, however, that they are all compelled to approach to where the pier is now located through a tunnel, over which they will be compelled to go.

As I said before, Mr. Huntington could get no privileges at San Pedro over and above any other railroad. At Santa Monica, while he stated that he owned only the railroad tracks, no man can take the testimony and come to any other conclusion than that the Southern Pacific can dictate its own terms, except so far as the law would step in and convey the right of way giving others the opportunity to approach there.

Mr. President, with the exception of the opinion of citizens out there, large numbers of whom came here and testified, some for Santa Monica and some for San Pedro—I believe with that exception and the testimony of sea captains who had gone to these different ports, I think I have fairly stated the testimony that was presented before the committee. I repeat what the Senator from California said, that no engineer of the United States Army, no engineer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, has ever stated that Santa Monica is preferable to San Pedro. It stands to-day before the Senate, if the amendment of the committee be passed, that we are going to set aside the rule that appropriation shall be made upon the reports and estimates of the army engineers and base it upon the report of men who admit that they were employed by the party who has the largest interest—financial interest—in locating a deep-water harbor at Santa Monica.

Now, I want to correct one other impression that prevails, and in a very short time I will conclude. I heard a Senator say the other day that he knew nothing about this question, but that he was in the habit of following the committee. I heard it said by the Senator from Maine that no man except the Senator from California, as he understood, in the committee was in favor of San Pedro.

Mr. President, I propose to state the facts in regard to what was done in the committee precisely as I remember them. After the testimony had been taken, after everything had been heard, there were some members of the committee who believed that it was not best this year to appropriate any money for either place, that is, for an outside harbor at San Pedro or for a breakwater at Santa Monica. They believed that owing to the depleted Treasury, owing to other considerations, it would be better to appropriate for the inside harbor at Wilmington and San Pedro and leave the other matter open. Knowing that a number believed that way, a motion was made in committtee that no appropriation be made for the outside harbor.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Arkansas feel at liberty to state everything that takes place in committee?

Mr. BERRY. If there is the slightest objection to it, if the Senator from Maine thinks it is improper, no consideration could induce me to do so. I never dreamed that there would be objection to it. If it is improper——

Mr. FRYE. It is unusual, to say the least.

Mr. BERRY. Is it unusual to state how the committee stood?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. BERRY. To state how many voted for the proposition and how many voted against it?

Mr. FRYE. I do not see any objection to that, but it is unusual to state the various processes by which a committee reached a result.

Mr. BERRY. Then, if that be objectionable I will make another statement. I am astounded, however, that the Senator from Maine should object to it. I might have expected other Senators on the other side of the Chamber to have objected—I mean members of the committee—but I did not expect the Senator from Maine to object.

Mr. FRYE. Why?

Mr. BERRY. Why did I not expect it?

Mr. FRYE. Yes. Why except the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BERRY. Because I never supposed anything occurred in committee that the Senator from Maine cared for the whole world to know.

Mr. FRYE. I do not care for the whole world to know; but I understood the Senator to commence by a statement that the Senator from Maine said so and so.

Mr. BERRY. I said the Senator from Maine stated outside of the Chamber that he understood the Senator from California was the only man who was in favor of making the appropriation for a deep-sea harbor at San Pedro.

Mr. FRYE. At the present time?

Mr. BERRY. Yes; at the present time.

Mr. FRYE. I have made no statement on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. I do not think you have made any either way in regard to it.

Mr. FRYE. No, sir; I have made no statement on the floor of the Senate of any kind.

Mr. BERRY. I said you have not, except now.

Mr. FRYE. And I should not have felt at liberty myself to have stated what I know took place in committee.

Mr. BERRY. Very well; I think the Senator is probably a little bit over particular. It has been done here again and again.

Mr. FRYE. I withdraw any objection.

Mr. BERRY. But if there be any doubt about it—if the Senator from Maine thinks it is improper—I will not do it. He states, however, that the vote of the committee upon the amendment is legitimate. Then, that being true, I will state that there are 15 members of the committee, and 9 of them voted in favor of Santa Monica and 6 voted against the appropriation.

Mr. FRYE. Is that true?

Mr. BERRY. Is that statement legitimate?

Mr. FRYE. Is it true?

Mr. BERRY. That 6 members of the committee voted against this appropriation? It is true, absolutely true. I will call the names, and if anyone can say it is not true, let him rise and so state. I state that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and myself, making 6, voted "no" on the appropriation for Santa Monica. That I state. If I have misstated any Senator let him rise and correct me.

Mr. FRYE. Did some of the Senators state why they voted that way?

Mr. BERRY. You have objected to such a statement being made by me on this floor.

Mr. FRYE. Very well, then; I will not ask the question.

Mr. BERRY. You have objected to that. If you want to go into it, if you will open the doors and say it is entirely proper, I will tell the Senator almost everything that was said in the committee as far as I know.

Therefore I say when a Senator says he will follow the committee he means to say that he will follow the majority of 3 on that vote.

Now, what more? That was the vote. The Senator from Maine objects to stating anything that was said in the committee. I will state then that since that time in the Senate the Senator from California has offered an amendment to the proposed committee amendment in which he proposes that instead of making the appropriation for Santa Monica the appointment of a new board shall be provided by Congress, and in order to get rid of the prejudice that they say exists against army officers the Senator from California says we will take one army engineer, we will take one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and we will take one from the Navy, and send that board there, and although we have two boards already, yet if we send the new board thus constituted, so confident is the Senator from California in the justice of the cause of San Pedro that he says, "Send this board there, and if they say Santa Monica, let it be Santa Monica, and no man hereafter will raise his voice." That is the amendment that is pending here now. He has said that we have two boards in favor of San Pedro. You have no board in favor of Santa Monica. Yet so certain is he that any fair, any honest board, any board which is not employed by the parties in interest, that will go there will say that San Pedro is the proper place, he proposes that to the Senate. Is there a man on this floor who can say that that is unfair? If Senators believe that Santa Monica is the proper place, if they believe that a fair board will say so, let them vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from California. It will not delay the time, because the amendment provides that the appropriation shall be made and that it shall be expended at the point the new board says is the proper place.

Mr. President, in view of all the facts, in view of the fair proposition that has been made, I appeal to the honor and to the fairness of the Senate to say if they think it is fair treatment of the Senator from California and the members from California and the overwhelming sentiment of that State when they have said: "Although we have two official reports, we will risk the entire case upon a new board, a fair board, one that is totally disinterested; we are willing for that board to determine the question, and if it says Santa Monica then we will abide by it?" Do you believe that if those who advocate Santa Monica thought that the better place they would not accept the proposition? What injustice is there in it? I call upon the Senator from Maine to tell the Senate, when he comes to speak, why this is not a fair proposition.

These are my views, Mr. President, about the case. Take it all in all, this is the most extraordinary proposition I have ever known submitted to the Congress of the United States. I do not believe that there is a man throughout this broad land in the United States, save and except Mr. C. P. Huntington, who would have had the assurance, in the face of the reports of these army officers, to have come to the Congress of the United States and asked them to give him $3,000,000 in money to build a breakwater to serve his private interests. I say that I think he is the only man who would have made such a proposition. But the matter rests with the Senate to determine whether they will agree to the amendment reported by the committee or whether they will agree to the proposition made by the Senator from California. As I said once before, to me it is a matter of the most utter indifference, so far as I am individually concerned, save and except that I believe if the precedent be once set that private interests and private engineers can set aside the reports made by army officers, if we discredit the eight distinguished engineers and follow the lead of two men hired by those who have the greatest interests in the matter, we set a precedent that will come to plague us hereafter. If this can be done on the Pacific coast there are many other ambitious men on the Atlantic Coast and upon the Gulf of Mexico who stand ready to get any number of civil engineers to set aside the reports made by the board of army officers. I think that the Senator from Maine scarcely knows to what extent the precedent may lead if the Senate adopts the amendment reported by the committee.

I repeat what I said in the early part of my remarks, that I think it much better that no deep-water harbor should ever be had, that it were far better the money should be utterly and absolutely thrown to the winds, rather than that we should make thousands of people throughout this broad land believe that the appropriation was made, not in the public interests, but in order to promote the private financial interests of individuals, be those individuals whom they may, whether the most powerful man in the land or the humblest citizen who walks this Union. In either case, if it once be understood that the Senate will be controlled by the reports of private engineers made for private individuals, then, Mr. President, the river and harbor bill will no longer be considered for the best interests of the entire Republic, but it will be solely a question as to who can bring the greatest influence to bear, who can hire the most engineers, who can succeed in setting aside and discrediting and humiliating the Engineer Corps of the United States.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I was unavoidably called away from the city at the time when the minority report in regard to this item in the river and harbor bill was presented. If I had been here I should have agreed with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. I am one of those mentioned by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] who are unable to appreciate the immediate necessity for expending $3,000,000 upon an outside harbor at either San Pedro or Santa Monica. I have endeavored to exclude all personal feeling in my consideration of the case, not pretending to be better than anybody else, hoping I am not any worse. I have friends directly and largely interested at both localities, and I have heard the testimony, the arguments, and the acrimonious discussion which have accompanied this subject from its inception until now.

I do not lay great stress upon the wishes of the people of southern California, and especially those at Los Angeles. They are neither better nor worse than the average citizens of the United States. I have generally found that our citizens want money expended at their localities, and if they can not get it at one place in the immediate vicinity they will take it at another. Our experience upon the Committee on Commerce, to speak of that only, has in this particular instance verified that statement.

The first impression made upon me was that there was a universal clamor for this improvement at San Pedro. Somebody telegraphed from the House of Representatives (and this is in evidence) that Mr. Huntington had been successful in defeating the appropriation at San Pedro, but that they could obtain an appropriation at Santa Monica of $3,000,000 for an outside harbor connected with the improvement of the inner harbor at San Pedro, and immediately the electric wires were almost burned in congratulations upon the prospective appropriation, which would give an expenditure of $3,000,000 at Santa Monica and of $392,000 upon the inner harbor at San Pedro. It is not saying that there was any corruption in this case; it is not saying that those people are any worse than the people at other places, but when they came to the conclusion that they could get $3,392,000 expended at the two places in the vicinity of Los Angeles, their zeal for San Pedro at once abated, and they were willing to take the money at either place.

I do not take any stock in the abuse of Mr. Huntington because he is a railroad president and a rich man. He is like the rest of the world, looking after his own interests. He is neither better nor worse than other men in his position. He has evinced his honesty in this matter at least. He has shown that he is sincere in preferring Santa Monica, because he has given up an investment of nearly $1,000,000 at San Pedro. His testimony before the committee, uncontradicted, was that he commenced, or rather his subordinates commenced, an improvement at San Pedro, and when they drew upon him up to $900,000 he concluded that the matter was worth looking after individually. He went to San Pedro, saw the incipient improvement made with his money or that of the company of which he is president, and he states that he came to the conclusion immediately that they had selected the wrong place. He said, "You never can build this outside harbor here with these southwestern winds and no bottom to the ocean after you get out 2 miles. I will abandon this investment; I must have a harbor for my steamship line." And he went up the coast and found Santa Monica, and on his own account commenced the improvement. He has spent a million dollars there, giving up the million dollars at San Pedro, which he says is not a total loss, but almost a total loss as an investment. I take it that a man, no matter how rich, with Huntington's brain, and that is unquestionable, who abandons an investment of over $900,000 for his own interest—I grant you without any patriotism—is perfectly sincere when he says that Santa Monica is the best place for this outside harbor.

Mr. President, there are two questions in this case, leaving out all the talk about monopolies and lobbies and all that sort of thing. Any United States Senator who permits the lobby to influence him, it goes without saying, is unworthy of a seat on this floor, and nothing he says should be considered. There are but two questions. In the first place, is there an immediate necessity to expend $3,000,000 at either of these places for an outside harbor? I came to the conclusion that there is not. We have a river and harbor bill here carrying $70,000,000, unheard of as to magnitude in the history of this Government. I call the attention of Senators—that is too strong an expression—I simply remark that we are not now with an overflowing Treasury, but we are with a Treasury that in a few months, if this "endless chain" continues, will be confronted with the necessity of issuing more bonds to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government. With that contingency staring us in the face we bring in here a river and harbor bill amounting, with immediate and contract expenditures, to $70,000,000, a thing unheard of before.

Is this a time to make such appropriations? Is this a time to hurry forward to expend money when you can do without expending it? What would be thought of a private citizen, the ordinarily sound business man, who would conduct his affairs in that way; who, with monetary depression, with embarrassment on every hand, seeks for an opportunity to spend more money and incur more liabilities? I do not know any such rule in my public action. I endeavor (though oftentimes drawn aside by the seductive blandishments of friends and constituents) to conduct the public business as I do my own and as the trustee of an express trust. I am not hunting for an opportunity, in the present condition of the Treasury, to spend money. Those of us who know something about making a river and harbor bill appreciate the statement that you are met in every item with solicitations and with inducements of every sort to contract liabilities to spend money; and if a sacrifice has to be made in the way of diminution of expenditure, every Senator and every Representative demands that it shall be made at the expense of somebody else rather than of his immediate constituents.

We have attempted honestly and faithfully to diminish the amount carried by this bill, but we have been unable to do so. We have struck out three continuing contracts, and they have all been put back by the Senate, as I knew they would be at the time we struck them out. We have endeavored to diminish appropriations, but every Senator has said: "Do not commence with me; commence with my neighbor. If you are going to make sacrifices, sacrifice somebody else; but here is a great improvement which is necessary to the whole country, with an immense commerce, and you will delay the advance of a vast section of country in its march toward improvement and the future; and I must have this money." So we are here to-day with the most unparalleled bill in the way of expenditures that has ever been known in the history of this country.

I did not think that $3,000,000, under these circumstances, should necessarily be expended upon either of these harbors, and I will give my reasons for it. In the first place, take Santa Monica. Mr. Huntington has made an improvement there, which has stood for three years and been most successful, according to all the testimony on both sides. He has now in existence an improvement which, of course, he will finish whether the Government gives him a dollar or not. He is that sort of a man. It has answered all his purposes so far for his steamship line. Three hundred vessels have landed at Santa Monica in the last year, all of them safely and satisfactorily, and it only remains for the Government to complete this improvement, commenced by Mr. Huntington and built with his money or that of his company. So with Santa Monica. The port of Los Angeles—because Los Angeles is behind both these improvements—is a city of 100,000 people, situated at one end of the triangle. There [indicating on the map] is Los Angeles; here is San Pedro; and here is Santa Monica. It is 3 miles farther from Los Angeles to San Pedro than it is to Santa Monica. Two railroad companies are fighting each other. The first, running from Los Angeles to Santa Monica, is the Southern Pacific, under the control of Mr. Huntington, and the other is the line running to San Pedro under one interest. The people of Los Angeles appeared before our committee about equally divided. Some of them who had investments in the direction of San Pedro wanted the money expended there; others testified that the city of Los Angeles recently had started toward Santa Monica, and they wanted the money expended at Santa Monica.

I have spoken of Santa Monica in its present condition, but there is certainly no necessity for putting $3,000,000 there. Commerce is not languishing; commerce is not endangered. There never has been a more successful public improvement in the history of this country than that at Santa Monica so far as it has gone.

Now, take San Pedro. San Pedro accommodates all vessels of a small or medium size. The engineers report 14 feet at low water now over the bar at San Pedro, and they testify that with the expenditure of $392,000 they can put 18 feet of water on that bar at low tide, and with the rise of the tide, which is between 5 and 6 feet, you would have a depth of from 24 to 25 feet at high water, which would admit all large vessels, except the largest sized and vessels of war, which would be compelled to lighter in order to reach the inside harbor, which, although small, is absolutely perfect in its protection from storms. Where is the overruling necessity for expending $3,000,000 at that place? I want to speak frankly, for I have no connection with either of these factions, and I want to do my duty to the people of the United States.

Unfortunately, Mr. Huntington is a political factor in California. They test every man's competency and qualification for office there by the question: "Is he for Huntington or against him?" You can not hold a town meeting but what the question is, "Is this man a Huntington man or not a Huntington man?" In the present condition of public sentiment I would not make this appropriation at this time, and I will proceed to give my reasons for that.

My friend from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has animadverted pretty severely upon Mr. Corthell. I know Mr. Corthell very well, and I will state why I know him. As every old Senator here knows, I was the warm, intimate friend of James B. Eads, although we differed politically. I think he was the greatest riparian engineer the world ever produced, and his works to-day prove it and will continue to prove it to the end of time. When Eads was struggling against the Engineer Bureau in building the great bridge at St. Louis, they said it could not be built with 525-foot spans, and yet it stands there to-day as solid as this continent, in spite of their resolutions, unanimously adopted in the city of St. Louis, that a span of 525 feet could not be built. You can build one of 1,500 or 2,500 feet if you have got the money, as Eads told them. They said that Eads could not build the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi. They are there to-day bridling the mouth of that river, and the bridle remains on it in spite of the predictions of the Engineer Bureau.

In all these great works Corthell was Eads's lieutenant, and Captain Eads thought he was one of the ablest engineers upon this continent. It is true that he accepts money in his profession to go and examine improvements. This is entirely legitimate, as a lawyer takes money for examining a brief and giving his opinion upon it. There may be room for criticism as to the propriety of his appearing before the committee and stating that he had been sent there at the instance of Senators and members of Congress, and that his expenses had been paid by Mr. Huntington; but he came before the committee and with carefully prepared maps—and there is one of them [indicating]—and he made the statement as an engineer, and risked his reputation upon it, to say nothing of his personal veracity, that at Santa Monica up to the way where the ships land there was a gradual shoaling for 12 miles, which broke the force of the oceanic waves and necessarily protected ships.

It does not require an expert to know that as you approach shoal water a wave diminishes in violence and height, and as you go to deep water the waves increase in violence and height. It is the unanimous opinion of experts and the testimony of individuals that at Santa Monica the waves decrease in violence as they approach toward the way, and that is the principal argument used in behalf of the Santa Monica improvement. Corthell went there and sounded the ocean, looked across upon its floor, so to speak, and brought here that map, taken from those soundings, and he says that is the physical condition of the floor of the ocean at that point. He also says that he examined and sounded the bottom of the ocean at San Pedro and found that 2 miles out it went down into—I forget how many fathoms, but almost without bottom. After you go out 2 miles from the mouth of the inside harbor of San Pedro how many fathoms is it?

Mr. FRYE. At 3 miles it is 300 fathoms.

Mr. VEST. Three hundred fathoms at 3 miles.

Mr. WHITE. It depends upon which direction you go.

Mr. VEST. Of course. The southwest wind is the dangerous wind, Mr. Corthell says, as it comes directly into the mouth of that inside harbor, and that any ship lying outside is dashed upon the bar, and if it misses the bar, upon the coast adjoining. But the point I make is that Mr. Corthell states, as a matter of physical examination, that 2 miles or 3 miles out from the mouth of the inside harbor of San Pedro there is 300 fathoms of water, and nothing like this gradual shoaling which they find at Santa Monica.

Now, Mr. President, after receiving this testimony the committee sent for General Craighill, who is now the head of the Engineer Bureau, and who was the president of the commission that made this report. I believe he was on the second commission. He was then Colonel Craighill. I believe I asked him this question: "Did you examine the floor of the ocean at Santa Monica and at San Pedro; and, if so, what have you to say in regard to Mr. Corthell's statement (who was sitting there in the room) that there is a gradual shoaling up toward Santa Monica, while there is a depth of 300 fathoms 3 miles out from San Pedro?" He said he did not examine the floor of the ocean.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Missouri is not accurate. In the first place, General Craighill's statement was made before the statement of Mr. Corthell was made. General Craighill was asked if he examined the holding ground at San Pedro in person, and he said, "No; but we took the testimony of topographical engineers," I think was the reply.

Mr. WHITE. Of the officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. BERRY. "Of the officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and all the other testimony, and we heard Mr. Hood, who had theretofore made the examination." Those are the facts.

I direct the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that the Senator from Missouri is calling attention to matters which occurred in committee, and I understood the Senator from Maine objected to that.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Missouri has been talking about testimony taken before the committee.

Mr. VEST. I am talking about the testimony of witnesses. There is no necessity for any heat about this matter.

Mr. BERRY. There is no heat about it.

Mr. VEST. If I misstate it I can be corrected from the testimony. I am not here in the interest of either of these locations. It does not make any difference when General Craighill made this statement, whether it was before or after Mr. Corthell. He made this statement, which impressed me more than anything else. He said: "We are not riparian engineers; we are fortification engineers."

Mr. FRYE. That is what I was going to ask the Senator.

Mr. VEST. That struck me, because I have always believed that that is the defect in the system of putting all the rivers and harbors exclusively under the Engineer Corps. I asked him specifically that question, and he said: "We are not riparian engineers; it is for the Coast and Geodetic Survey to examine the floor of the ocean and make soundings; but we are fortification engineers"; and if you will take the report upon San Pedro you will find one-third of it, speaking with all due limitation, is as to the point of defending San Pedro in case of war, proving that they were fortification engineers and looked upon the subject from that view of the case.

But, Mr. President, that is a trivial matter compared with the fact that the board of engineers now report that with $392,000 they can put 18 feet of water at low tide upon that bar at San Pedro, and with the rise in the tide which comes upon the lower Pacific Coast there is between 5 and 6 feet of water, which would make 24 or 25 feet at high tide, and that would float any except the largest ships, including men-of-war, which could be lightered over that bar.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator please state the depth of water within the bar?

Mr. VEST. It varies. We had maps before the committee.

Mr. WHITE. It is 14 feet inside.

Mr. FRYE. And it is proposed to make it 18 feet.

Mr. VEST. The engineers propose to have an average depth of 18 feet at all stages in the different portions of that inside harbor. When there is high tide there is an increase of between 5 and 6 feet, the tide being much higher there than it is on the Atlantic Seaboard and considerably higher than upon the Gulf of Mexico. I grant the largest-sized ships, the armored vessels, for instance, would be compelled to lighter in order to get over that bar; but if these engineers have $392,000 they say they can give us 18 feet at low water over that bar at San Pedro. I say that meets all the probable exigencies of the present and the future, and it saves to us out of these schemes nearly $3,000,000 for an improvement that is not necessary, for an outside harbor at either locality.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, or the chairman of the committee, at what rate per cubic yard do the engineers estimate for excavations at the bar at San Pedro?

Mr. VEST. I am not quite able to answer. Perhaps $2.50.

Mr. WHITE. Two dollars and a half.

Mr. VEST. Is there an estimate in detail in regard to the cost of the work?

Mr. WHITE. Here is the estimate:

Entrance, 36,000 cubic yards, at 50 cents	$18,000
Reef, 37,000 cubic yards, at $2.50	92,500
Reef to wharves, 150,000 cubic yards, at 40 cents	60,000

Mr. MORGAN. What is the estimate for dredging—how much a cubic yard?

Mr. WHITE. Four hundred and ninety thousand cubic yards, at 30 cents per yard. That would cover what I suppose to be dredging.

Mr. MORGAN. Thirty cents a cubic yard for dredging?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. We are doing it in the Bay of Mobile for about 8 cents, and carrying the material away.

Mr. FRYE. Seven and seven-tenths cents.

Mr. MORGAN. How far do they carry the material at Mobile?

Mr. FRYE. They land it away beyond the works, entirely away.

Mr. MORGAN. Three or four miles.

Mr. WHITE. I would state that I believe the distinguished gentleman who made the calculations, Colonel Benyaurd, believes that he has estimated perhaps too much for the softer material in view of the present developments in dredging, and so on; but we are told that the estimate is quite low enough, perhaps too low, as to the rock upon the reef.

Mr. MORGAN. How long ago was it that these estimates were made?

Mr. WHITE. About two years ago.

Mr. FRYE. Only about two years ago. It is fair to say that the estimates are nearly double on the Pacific Coast to what they are on the Atlantic.

Mr. WHITE. That is correct.

Mr. VEST. I was going to say that the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] and I believe the Senator at my left [Mr. WHITE] said that the price of work is nearly twice what it is on the Atlantic Seaboard and on the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. MORGAN. Machine work would be quite as cheap, I should think.

Mr. VEST. But all sorts of labor and supplies would be much higher.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. I should think a dredging machine could be worked there as cheaply as here.

Mr. VEST. I have spoken of the aggregate cost of the inside harbor of San Pedro, which is $392,000.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether 18 feet is the deepest channel possible, or whether an appropriation would enable the engineers to make a still deeper channel than 18 feet?

Mr. VEST. I suppose, as a matter of course, they could make a deeper channel by an expenditure of more money; it goes without saying, I think, that they could.

Mr. WHITE. There is a survey provided for in this bill having in view the obtaining of 25 feet of water.

Mr. LINDSAY. One other question. When vessels cross the bar is there sufficient water in San Pedro Harbor?

Mr. VEST. It is a mere question of the expenditure of money. They propose to make the average depth 18 feet, and, of course, the inside harbor would have the advantage of the rise of the tide, which can be relied upon safely at all times. It is simply a question of the expenditure of money as to deepening the water upon the bar in the inside harbor, the fact always being undisputed by all factions and interests that the inside harbor is perfectly safe from all storms. Nature has provided a harbor there which is now available for all small-sized ships, and the only advantage of such a harbor as is proposed at either place is to provide for large-sized ships.

Now I come to the last consideration. I have stated that if I had been here I would have signed the report drawn by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] upon the line of opinion which I have expressed here and am endeavoring to give my reasons for. If the Senate concludes that it will not adopt that line of argument, and it will insist upon an outside harbor, against my judgment in the premises, the only question is whether we can adopt the amendment as to Santa Monica as it stands, which puts the improvement at Santa Monica absolutely, or the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], which leaves that question, together with the location of the improvement of San Pedro, to the report of another board of engineers. I am of opinion that if the Senate concludes to make the improvement of the outside harbor, a slight amendment of the proposition of the Senator from California should be adopted, and I will give my reasons for it.

After General Craighill stated before our committee that he was not a riparian engineer, after he stated that he was not prepared to contradict the statement of Mr. Corthell as to the floor of the ocean at the two places, it seemed to me that the necessity immediately arose that the floor of the ocean at these two places should be examined by competent experts, because it becomes a matter of the highest importance to know whether this shoaling process for 12 miles out exists at Santa Monica, as Mr. Corthell states. If it does, it follows mathematically that there can be found no harbor superior to that for the largest sized ships, as well as the smaller vessels.

It becomes also of the highest importance to know whether it is true, as stated by Corthell, that when you go out 3 miles from the mouth of the inside harbor at San Pedro you strike 300 fathoms of water. If you do, none but the strongest works that can be invented by mortal man will resist the waves that come from that water, impelled by the southwest wind, as Corthell said, and there is nothing to contradict him in the report of these engineers, because they stated that they did not examine the floor of the ocean; that they left that to the Geodetic Survey.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. FRYE. On the contrary, we have the chart of the Coast and Geodetic Survey now, where all these tracings have been made, and they all confirm Mr. Corthell's statement.

Mr. VEST. I had not alluded to that fact and have not examined it.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. BERRY. All confirm the statement as to what?

Mr. FRYE. As to the depth of water 3 miles out.

Mr. WHITE. I deny that absolutely.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will yield to me one moment, I do not think he wants to place General Craighill in a wrong position. I take it for granted he does not.

Mr. VEST. Of course not.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator has stated that General Craighill has said that he was not prepared to contradict the statement of Mr. Corthell in regard to the holding ground at San Pedro. That is not in General Craighill's testimony. He never, so far as I remember, mentioned Corthell. The Senator from Missouri asked him if he had examined the holding ground at San Pedro in person, and he said no; that they took the testimony, as the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] says, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. General Craighill said they took testimony there from all parties in regard to it, and he reported that the holding ground there was equal to that of any other place. Therefore to say that General Craighill said that he was not prepared to contradict Mr. Corthell's statement is not placing General Craighill in a correct position. The testimony will show for itself. The only thing he said about fortification engineers came in this connection. He was asked the question, and he said in reply that in case of war San Pedro would be far better. He was asked what he meant by that, and he said, "As to protection from an enemy;" and then he dropped the remark—and it was the only place he used it—"We are fortification engineers." That is the testimony.

Mr. VEST. I admit that, and I have not the slightest amendment to make to it. I will take the statement of the Senator. I do not want to do any injustice to General Craighill. The point I was making was simply this: So far as the testimony before our committee is concerned, Corthell's statement is uncontradicted that the ocean floor shoals for 12 miles up to Santa Monica; and it is also true that General Craighill did state, as the Senator from Arkansas remarks—and I do not care, so long as he said it, in what connection it was—that he was a fortification engineer and not a riparian engineer. I say when that board went there to examine, under an order of the Government of the United States, the question as to where should be this outside harbor, it was their duty in person to examine the floor of the ocean and to tell us what was the depth of the two places, in order that we could determine what was the violence of the waves and where the harbor should be located.

Permit me to say that we have had one or two glaring instances of the fact that these gentlemen belonging to the Corps of Engineers, men of the highest character—I make no assault upon them—but they have in another instance delegated to subordinates what they should have done themselves. I know we had a conspicuous instance of it at Brunswick, Ga., in the case of the large improvement there, for which we have been appropriating for some years. We sent a commission there to examine, and they delegated the duty to a subordinate, and no member of the board ever went in person to examine it, as we intended they should do. The result is, we are now just where we commenced, and we are compelled to rely upon subsequent examinations, perhaps, in order to carry on that work.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, in fairness, the Senator from Missouri ought to state that the board to which he now alludes was not exclusively from the Engineer Corps, but it was a mixed board.

Mr. VEST. I know it was, but still they ought to have gone in person. That is the point I make. When we send a board, either members of the Geodetic Survey or of the Corps of Engineers, to examine an improvement and report on it to the Senate, so that we may make or withhold large appropriations, it is their duty to go in person and not leave it to any lieutenant or sergeant to go and make the examination and let him report to them, and let them adopt his suggestions and report to us. We do not send them there for any such purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. How is the fact in regard to Santa Monica and San Pedro? Did the board go to these places?

Mr. VEST. It was stated—that is my recollection, though I paid no very great attention to it—that they went to both places. They went to Santa Monica and stayed one day, some witnesses swear, and others that it was a day and a half or possibly two days; but they made no soundings. That is the point that struck me. They said that they had made no examination of the floor of the ocean. It seems to me that that is one of the most important parts of this whole examination.

Now I come to the last thing I want to say, and I will not trespass upon the Senate longer. The amendment offered by the Senator from California should be amended in one particular. In the personnel of the new board which the Senator proposes shall be sent out there he has an army officer, a member of the Corps of Engineers. I would not put a member of the Corps of Engineers upon that commission; and I will give my reasons for it. General Craighill made the report which is now attacked by the Santa Monica people. He is now at the head of that Bureau; and, without intimating that there would be any undue influence at all, we all know in the Army and in the Navy the reluctance with which any army or navy officer will overrule his chief. If we make as one of the members of this board a member of the Corps of Engineers, he will consider himself, with that sort of military or caste courtesy which obtains, possibly properly among these gentlemen, constrained to adopt the conclusions which his chief at one time adopted, and which he defended before the committee. I would make up that commission of two Geodetic Survey men and a naval officer, or one officer from the Geodetic Survey, one from civil life, and a naval officer; but I would not put upon it a member of the Corps of Engineers of the Army.

I agree thoroughly with that provision of the amendment which says that the report, whatever it may be, in favor of either place, assuming of course that we intend to make the improvement at one place or the other, shall be conclusive, and that the appropriation shall take effect eo instanti upon that report being made and approved by the Secretary of War, because if I have any hope now, legislatively speaking, it is that I shall never hear of Santa Monica or San Pedro again.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, with reference to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment which I offered, I could not consent to it, of course, without consulting with other Senators. Personally, as I before remarked, I am perfectly willing to have this matter submitted to any impartial board. All I want is that some official authority may pass upon this question before it is voted on, if an appropriation is to be made for Santa Monica.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I desire briefly to give the reasons why I oppose the appropriation for Santa Monica.

As very correctly stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], the first point to be considered is whether there is any necessity at either one of these points, San Pedro or Santa Monica, for a deep-sea harbor; and the second is whether, if so, the point at Santa Monica or San Pedro is to be the one selected.

The statement in favor of a deep-sea harbor at either one of these points was that the city of Los Angeles had in late years developed much commerce and intercourse with the East. It was also stated, whether in committee or whether on the outside I do not now remember, that the Australian trade and the trade generally with the Orient would seek the port of Los Angeles rather than the port of San Francisco. But it is to be borne in mind that that trade is prospective; that there is no large amount of it at either one of these points at the present time. It is known, however, that for some years Mr. Huntington has had ships anchor and discharge their cargoes at Santa Monica, and I must confess, as I stated in the committee, that the fact that Mr. Huntington has voluntarily left San Pedro and has established his wharfage at Santa Monica is, in my mind, a very strong fact to induce the conclusion that Santa Monica presents the best deep-sea harbor facilities.

On the first proposition, whether there is any immediate need for a deep-sea harbor at either one or the other of these points, I will say that there is not, in my opinion, sufficient testimony to establish the commercial need of a great governmental work—the construction of a deep-sea harbor at either one of the points at present. But the argument of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] went, it appears to me, a little too far in this direction. He stated that in the condition of the Treasury as it exists these appropriations are not warranted. I do not entirely agree with him in that statement. I do not agree that because the Treasury is strained, because it is difficult to keep up the gold reserve, necessarily river and harbor improvements should not be undertaken. The point with me is to establish whether it is necessary, whether it is useful; and if that be so I do not think the present condition of the Treasury is such as to prevent the necessary appropriation to effect these public purposes. My opinion is that the Treasury is depleted of its gold not by reason of a deficit of revenue, but by reason of the constant agitation of the financial question, and my own view is that as the Wilson Act gets older, gets in better working harness, the receipts will come up to the expenditures more nearly than they do now. We have some $270,000,000 in the Treasury, and I can not see why it is that there is such a spasm of economy upon us when these necessary appropriations in regard to the improvement of rivers and harbors demand our attention.

But this controversy has largely drifted, not as to whether either one of the points should have this appropriation, but whether San Pedro or Santa Monica should have the appropriation. It is very easy to criticise the Army Engineer Corps. It is very easy to point to the example of Captain Eads and to point out the mistakes of the Army Engineer Corps in condemning the work which Captain Eads afterwards proved to be entirely successful and entirely appropriate. But we have a certain system under which these river and harbor appropriations are applied. We rely upon the findings and the reports of the commissions of the Army or the Navy, as the case may be. If they are useless let us get rid of them. As long as we have them we must necessarily follow them, as a general rule.

Now, as against Santa Monica Harbor the reports of two commissions are absolutely adverse. They are not only adverse to Santa Monica, but they are favorable to San Pedro. I was captivated with the very learned and very exhaustive statement of the civil engineer, Mr. Corthell. I thought he presented his case with great ability. I am perfectly willing to concede his ability without any other proof than that furnished by himself in his own statement; but we have adopted a regular system of improvements to be made according to the findings and reports of the Army Engineer Corps. Are we to discard them and take up the captivating report of an engineer on the outside?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I know but little personally about this controversy, but the Senator is touching upon a point now that attracts my attention to a little history to which I should like to call his attention, if he will allow me.

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In 1873 I took my seat in the Senate. At that time the city of New Orleans in the Senator's State had no foreign commerce—none at least of any importance.

Mr. CAFFERY. Oh, I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not to amount to anything.

Mr. CAFFERY. We had some foreign commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. A vessel drawing over 6 feet of water could not come to New Orleans. At that time a controversy was going on in one of the committees of this body, of which I happened to be a member. Mr. Eads came before the committee with a project for improving the mouth of the Mississippi River. I had but little faith in it. I was a member of the committee, as I stated. The army engineers were unanimous in opposition to his scheme from the Chief of Engineers down. Finally, after a long controversy before the committee, Mr. Eads submitted a proposition that seemed to be fair, in which he said to the committee and to Congress: "If you will pay me so much money I will give you so many feet of water; and when I give you so many more feet of water, you will pay me so much more money." It struck the committee as being a bargain which the United States might perhaps make without running any great risk on the part of the Government. We finally made a bargain with him, as the Senator knows. We ignored the engineers, or rather we entered upon the scheme suggested by Mr. Eads.

What has been the result? We all know it has been one of the grandest successes that have ever attended any engineering project in the United States or anywhere, so that now the city of New Orleans, the great city of the State represented here in part so ably by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], instead of having little or no foreign commerce, is, I believe, third in foreign commerce in the United States.

So, Mr. President, while of course I have the very highest respect for the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, and while as a rule I have always been inclined to follow them, at the same time there are exceptions, and that is one great exception wherein the Engineer Corps were at fault. They were in error in their positive statement that the scheme of Eads would not work.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Louisiana excuse me? I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether in that case it was not a fact that a contract was made, and as a result of that contract Mr. Eads was to get the money, provided he obtained the water?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. There was no absolute appropriation made in defiance of the Government recommendation?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am not referring to the case as parallel to this. It may or may not be; but I am attracting attention to it for the purpose of showing that the Congress of the United States are not necessarily bound to follow the Army Engineer Corps, and that their recommendations are not regarded by Congress as conclusive.

Mr. WHITE. No one claims infallibility.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Sometimes it is not best to do so; and in that particular case, if we had followed the Engineer Corps, we perhaps would not have had the great improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi which we have now.

Mr. CAFFERY. I agree with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. There are exceptional cases where some extraordinary genius may prove that the Corps of Engineers might do better by trying some other than their own plans; but I am speaking of a systematic plan of improvement. We have adopted a river and harbor plan under the specifications and findings of Corps of Engineers belonging to the Army and Navy. Now, as I said in opening, either we have to follow their findings and their conclusions as a general proposition, or we have to reject them entirely, discard that system, and adopt some other. But one swallow does not make a summer, and the improvement of the jetties of the Mississippi River does not prove that the whole scheme of river and harbor improvements in the United States could be better undertaken and accomplished by some other plan than the one we have.

I will say to the Senator from Oregon that he is a little wrong in regard to the improvements to the mouth of the Mississippi River. There was 14 feet of water at the Southwest Pass at the mouth of the river. That 14 feet was kept open by dredging, and we did have a considerable amount of foreign commerce coming through the channel 14 feet in depth at low water. The Eads jetties have to be dredged constantly now to keep them open, as was predicted by the Army corps, and a deposit of sand is made at the entrance of these jetties to the Gulf. Not only is the silt carried out and deposited at the end of the jetties at the Gulf, but the channel itself has narrowed, and it is only kept open by constant dredging. It is not kept open to the extent that Captain Eads, great genius though he was, said would be the result of his jetty process.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What is the ordinary depth?

Mr. CAFFERY. The ordinary depth is 26 feet, but I saw in the paper that a vessel was grounded right athwart the channel.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana to repeat his last statement.

Mr. CAFFERY. I say that the jetty system as proposed and adopted under the contract system between Mr. Eads and the Government of the United States has not accomplished all the results that were predicted for it by its originator, Mr. Eads, and that in order to keep up this depth of 26 feet the Eads heirs have constantly to employ a dredge boat to aid the current in washing out this depth.

Mr. TELLER. I understood the Senator to say that the army engineers were more nearly correct than Mr. Eads. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. CAFFERY. No, sir. I said they were correct in their statement as to the deposit of silt, and that the current would not keep it washed out as Mr. Eads said it would.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think Mr. Eads ever claimed that it might not be necessary to do some dredging. When his proposition was submitted it is a notorious fact that the army engineers declared it would be a failure. It has not been a failure.

Mr. CAFFERY. No; I do not say it has been a failure.

Mr. TELLER. In the controversy between Captain Eads and the engineers, Eads won by getting the Government to make the contract, he won by getting the depth of water he said he would in spite of their prediction, and he got his pay.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I do not propose——

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Louisiana will permit me, in justice to the memory of Captain Eads, to make a statement. As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has stated, the engineer officers made two predictions—if there is any doubt about it I can refer to the records—first, that there would not be sufficient power of current to produce the erosion that Captain Eads said would be produced by the volume of water in the Mississippi River; second, that possibly if there was, the effect of this erosion, the scouring process, would be to create a bar at the mouth of the jetties in the Gulf of Mexico, which would finally become impassable, even for ships drawing 8 or 10 feet of water. Captain Eads contended that the power of this silt-bearing current would be such as to force the silt or the deposit in the Mississippi River coming from the alluvial lands far enough out into the Gulf to permit it to be scattered, and that the bar would not be formed to the extent they claimed, and that there would be sufficient force of current. But he never did say that it would not be necessary to dredge. On the other hand, he said it would be necessary to dredge. He took the contract, no cure, no pay. He was not to get a dollar unless he produced a certain depth of water. The Government made a contract, a part of which was that Captain Eads or his representatives should secure for a number of years, twenty years, I believe, so many feet of water in this channel through the Southwest Pass. Every year an officer of the Government of the Engineer Corps is sent there, who sounds the whole length of the channel and reports to the Department whether Captain Eads or his representatives have secured that depth, and until that officer reports that it has been secured the estate can not draw one dollar. If it has been secured, they receive $100,000 a year.

These are the whole facts, and there has not been a year in which the money has not been paid. As a matter of course, if he had not secured the depth of water he would not have received a cent.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am not to be understood as attacking the memory of Captain Eads. He has been a great benefactor to my part of the country. But I have only stated the facts which have been communicated to me by the local engineer in charge in Louisiana. A great contention between Captain Eads and the army engineers was as to whether a plan of confining the water in narrow jetties and permitting the water to wash out to a sufficient depth would succeed of itself. I never heard before that Captain Eads claimed that he had to use dredgers in order to aid the river. I do not believe there would have been any contention between Captain Eads and any of the Engineer Corps or anybody else if he had conceded that it would be necessary to keep the channel open by dredging. But the case of Captain Eads is not parallel to the case here.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to correct the Senator from Louisiana. Captain Eads made a contract to keep the channel open.

Mr. CAFFERY. Precisely. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. TELLER. That presupposes something to be done besides building jetties. That was a part of his system. It had to be done.

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir; I know that. I know it was contemplated that the jetties would do the work without dredging.

Mr. VEST. They did most of it.

Mr. CAFFERY. I know that the work of the current has been supplemented by the artificial work of dredgers. That I know. I have heard it stated that it was doubtful whether Eads's heirs would continue the dredging to maintain the depth, as the expense of dredging about equals the installments they would derive from the Government for keeping open the channel.

Mr. VEST. Who stated that?

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. J. B. Quinn.

But the case of Eads is not parallel to the case here at all. There has been no contract of any kind, nor is any contemplated by anybody, to get so much depth of water, or to protect the harbor at Santa Monica or San Pedro by artificial works. It is a question solely whether this work is to be done under the present system of the Army Engineer Corps, and I say if it is to be done under that system you can not travel outside of the system. You can not go beyond the findings of the engineers and take up the report and the findings of a civil engineer when there is no sort of liability upon his part or upon the part of his employers. This is not a no-cure-no-pay case. Here is a case where the money of the United States Government is asked to be appropriated under the supervision of its Corps of Engineers, when the engineers have repudiated it, when they have condemned it.

Now, if a great engineer like Captain Eads were to undertake to build a breakwater at San Pedro or Santa Monica, as the case may be, for so much money to accomplish such and such results, that would establish a case parallel to the case of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi. But that is not the case here. The case here is to violate the findings of the army commission, when the money is to be spent under their direction. That is the case. They have condemned Santa Monica. They have accepted San Pedro, and I say that we have either to follow generally the report of the army engineers or we have to discard the system entirely and adopt the system of contract.

I have no sort of feeling in this controversy. I do not consider that the fact that Mr. Huntington supports the Santa Monica improvement is of any weight whatever toward its condemnation. But when both Senators from that State, when, as I am told, every Representative in the House representing California wants the appropriation for San Pedro Harbor, and when that application of theirs, or indorsement of theirs, is backed up and sustained by the report and recommendation of the Corps of Army Engineers, I do not think it would be competent or safe or wise to throw aside both their indorsements, the recommendation of the engineers, and take up the report of an outside engineer, backed up by the experiments of Mr. Huntington. It is true, in one sense, that an appropriation for a harbor is a national affair. A harbor of the dimensions and of the sort that is contemplated here at one or the other of these points partakes of a general character. It is of interest to the whole nation. It concerns everybody, as it were, but it more directly concerns the people living in that country; and I have lived long enough to know, I think, that the counsel, the advice, the indorsement of the people immediately in interest, having the welfare of their constituents at heart, ought, from the nature of the case, to carry very great weight. It would take testimony absolutely conclusive to convince my mind that their indorsement is wrong in the premises before I would disavow it.

The chairman of the committee, a very able man, who has made a study of these matters for years, has arrived at his conclusion from facts and premises that in his opinion are sufficient to warrant it. I complain of nobody's action, and I discard as utterly irrelevant to any intelligent discussion of this question the fact that Mr. Huntington supports one or the other of these projects. That these corporations have great influence I know, and that they exercise great vigilance everybody knows, and if their case is not won it is not because of the lack of energy or vigilance on their part. They are very well able to represent themselves in any enterprise of this sort. But it looks to me like a purely commercial enterprise. I can not see from my standpoint how it would be entirely and exclusively in the interest of a railroad. But be that as it may, I shall follow the lead, all things being equal, of the representatives from the locality of an improvement of this sort, and it would be an extreme case, it would be a case where the testimony leaves no leg to stand upon, that I would go against their judgment in the premises. But the case we have presented before us is one that not only does not militate against their views, but one that is indorsed by the highest authority in the United States in regard to these improvements. I am inclined to the belief, however, that temporarily, at least until the commercial needs of that part of the country are developed into larger proportions, the improvement of the inside harbor at Wilmington is sufficient for present purposes. It will be a considerable saving to the country right now not to expend the $3,000,000 asked for for San Pedro or Santa Monica, and if the needs of commerce do not justify it, I adopt the conclusion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and say that the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] in that regard ought to have the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I am very sorry that I am compelled to exhaust the patience of the Senate with a further discussion of this matter, but as chairman of the committee and its mouthpiece, as a matter of course I must defend its action and I know of no better defense of the contention which the committee has made than the picture upon which Senators are now looking.

Here [indicating on map] is the bay of Santa Monica. Point Dume is off here [indicating]. Here is Vincente [indicating]. Here [indicating] is the present pier in Santa Monica Bay in the center of the curve of the bay. These are the proposed wharves [indicating]. If built they will accommodate about 200 ships at one time. Here [indicating] is the proposed breakwater to protect the ships in the inside.

Mr. MORGAN. How far from the coast?

Mr. FRYE. It is about a mile and one-third from the shore. It is about 8,400 feet long. It includes inside of it an area of about 555 acres of deep water, which will accommodate about 222 deep-draft vessels at anchor. Every inch inside is excellent holding ground, being mud and gravel. It is absolutely protected by a range of mountains over a thousand feet high from the north winds, the northeast and the northwest winds. It is absolutely protected on the other side by the highlands—these are the highlands [indicating]—from every southeast wind. The dangerous wind of the Pacific coast is that from the southeast. There is no great fear of the other, except occasionally a heavy southwest gale. This bay [indicating] is absolutely protected from everything except the southwest wave line, as it is called, and the westerly winds.

Now, here is a remarkable fact, and, without knowing the fact, no engineer, whether he be civil or war, is able to determine whether or not a harbor can be made a safe one. As I said, the heavy winds and gales are from the southeast. Whenever there is a heavy gale from the southeast the wave line is from the southwest, at an exact right angle to the southeast inshore wind, undoubtedly showing that the action of the mountains has affected the wind near shore in such a way that a heavy southwest gale in the open ocean becomes, when you approach the shore, a southeast gale.

Now, a breakwater, as a matter of course, every Senator knows, has nothing to do with the wind. It is to stop the waves, and that is the only purpose. The only necessity in the Bay of Santa Monica for any protection whatever comes from the southwest wave line. For the three years the pier has been there, there never yet has been any damage done it, because there has not happened during that time any heavy southeast gales, or southwest wind at sea, and southwest wave line. But it is liable to take place any hour of time. It is liable to take place when 50 ships are lying in this open roadstead [indicating], and if it did every ship would go ashore. For two or three years there had been no dangerous wrecks in the harbor at Apia, but one day there were scores of men-of-war lying there, a gale came up, and hundreds of lives were lost, and several ships were driven ashore. Harbor protection is not for fair weather; it is not for ordinary weather; it is against extraordinary weather; and because these three years have passed and there has been no extraordinary weather it is not, as the Senator from Missouri says, an argument against the necessity of protection at all. To-morrow, or a week from now, when great ships are lying there, that terrible southwest gale sweeping across the great Pacific may bring in enormous waves and drive every ship ashore, sacrificing property and human life.

Here to the right is Point Fermin [indicating]. Here, at that point [indicating], is where the first board started its breakwater, running it out two or three thousand feet, and then leaving an open space of 1,500 feet, then running four or five thousand feet in the direction here shown [indicating]. There [indicating] is Wilmington Harbor.

Mr. WHITE. The inner harbor.

Mr. FRYE. It is called the inner harbor; it is the inner harbor of Wilmington which has been talked about. The harbor which it is proposed to make at San Pedro is here [indicating]. Now, here is the remarkable fact to be noted. The first board of engineers found that if a breakwater were attached to the shore and run eight or ten thousand feet from shore, the harbor made by it inside would certainly fill up with sand, and in that Corthell and Hood concur. So the three army officers and the two civil engineers agree that if a breakwater is so attached and extended from the shore the harbor will fill up. What did the first board do? They provided for that reach of breakwater, then an open space of 1,500 feet right in the harbor, then a breakwater running off in this direction [indicating]. Which is the direction of the southwest winds? There it is; Senators can all see it. Exactly straight in to the 1,500 feet the first board of army officers left open. Is there any safety in that harbor? Can any ship lie there in a heavy southeast gale when southwest waves are coming in?

How happened it that the army board of engineers made such a blunder? It happened simply because they did not know that a southeast gale on shore was accompanied by a southwest wave line from the ocean. That is all. They made a profound mistake because they did not make the necessary inquiry. There is not a Senator on this floor who does not know that they made a mistake. There is not a Senator here who can not see that if they had made it on purpose to receive the southwest wave line they could not have placed it in any better position. There it is, right straight in [indicating].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is there any dispute about that matter?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no; that is the exact location of the breakwater. This is an exact map in every respect. There is no undertaking to cheat or defraud anybody about this matter in any direction on either side that I know of.

Mr. STEWART. Do they now admit that it would be a failure?

Mr. FRYE. They never have been asked. I do not think they would admit it, but every Senator here who is in my hearing and in sight of this map knows that it was an absolute failure.

Now, the second board (whether they had ever found out the mistake I doubt) started theirs from the shore and followed it right out to the end of the breakwater without any break in it. They disagreed entirely, you will see, from the first board, because the first board said a breakwater of that kind would fill up with sand. The second board say, as a matter of course, it will not fill up with sand, because they made their plan of a breakwater from the pier outward without any break in it. Did they know anything about the southwest wave. I think the evidence is conclusive that they had not found it out. What is the evidence?

Somebody wished to know where you could place the wharf in San Pedro, and I assure the Senators it is a very serious question. Here is the Southern Pacific Railroad, that "horrible instrument of injury to the country," running right along here and out to this point [indicating]. This is a very high bluff [indicating], I should say 60 or 70 feet high, rocky and perpendicular. The waves of the ocean are nearly all the time dashing up against it at the foot. Where are you going to put your wharves? Where will you locate them? The second board of engineers said that you could make a dozen in some way or other—it would be very expensive for this railroad—by running your railroad out on the breakwater, and then attaching your wharves to it.

Now, is not that conclusive proof that the second board did not know that the southwest wave line accompanied a southeast shore wind? Have not Senators here seen the power of waves on the Pacific when they come sweeping in across the sea over water that is 300 fathoms deep within 3 miles of the shore and strike that breakwater 10 feet up out of the water? How long would a railroad track stand on the top of that breakwater? How long would a ship lying by the wharves stay there? Those waves would break over that breakwater from 40 to 50 feet high, and, as a woman would sweep with a broom the dust from the ground, sweep away your railroads and your railroad tracks and completely submerge every vessel lying by the wharves attached to the breakwater.

Here is what is called the Terminal Railroad [indicating]. It comes down here to Rattlesnake Island and out to that little island on that point [indicating].

Mr. WHITE. That is a jetty.

Mr. FRYE. That is a jetty down to here [indicating].

Mr. WHITE. Yes, here [indicating].

Mr. FRYE. Here is the Pacific Railroad, down to here [indicating].

Mr. WHITE. The Terminal Railroad.

Mr. FRYE. One is the Terminal Railroad and the other is the Southern Pacific Railroad. Now, to a certain extent this is a railroad fight. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] thinks it is a fearful thing for a Senator to be on the side of a great railroad and a "greedy monopoly." I never have seen anything more greedy in my experience than this little Terminal Railroad. It is about 40 miles long. What is it there for? It was built there after the first report of the board of engineers. Under the first report of the board of engineers there were certain gentlemen who thought they saw a chance for a speculation.

They saw that the Southern Pacific had the entire north side, all the land on it; that there was a chance to get a little terminal railroad down on the southerly side; that if that breakwater was built and it became a great harbor, necessarily there must be two great competing lines stretching from the Pacific shore over toward the Atlantic. They built this railroad with the understanding and expectation that when the harbor was completed some great transatlantic railroad would be obliged to gobble up the little terminal railroad and make it a very handsome speculation. That railroad is in the fight. The Southern Pacific, as a matter of course, is in the fight because it is up there [indicating]. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad is in the contest. Why, I do not know. Here is the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe [indicating]. It runs away up to that point now [indicating]. Here is the harbor [indicating]. Here is the Southern Pacific [indicating], running to the place where they have located their wharves. Here is a little tunnel [indicating]. I heard it asked in the Senate half a dozen times if another road could go through that tunnel. What do you suppose that tunnel is? It is a tunnel under a street a couple hundred feet long. You can cut it out; you can throw it away; you can build a bridge over it, and 40 railroads can go through if they please any time and anywhere. You will observe that there is plenty of room. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company could get but 50 feet wide. The trustees of the town owned this front down here [indicating].

Mr. DAVIS. Of San Pedro?

Mr. FRYE. Of the county or town; I do not know which.

Mr. WHITE. Of the town.

Mr. GRAY. Of Santa Monica.

Mr. FRYE. Yes. They own it. They refused to let the Southern Pacific Railroad have an inch of land outside of their place for two tracks, and the Southern Pacific does not own an inch of land at Santa Monica. They own nearly all of the land on the north side here [indicating].

Mr. CULLOM. San Pedro?

Mr. FRYE. San Pedro. There is room at Santa Monica for twelve tracks, for ten more tracks. Any other railroad can get it just as easily as the Southern Pacific Railroad Company did. Mr. Huntington said he would build the tracks for them for $10,000 a mile, and this bill provides that they shall use his wharf if they desire to do so.

Now, can some Senator tell me why the telegrams from the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad have been falling here upon Senators in the last ten days as the snowflakes fall in the winter storm, except that it is the remains of the old fight between the Southern Pacific and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad? They made it once. They lost from ten to twelve million dollars in the encounter and went into bankruptcy. I happened to be the unfortunate owner, I am happy to say of a very small amount, of stock in the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, and only a few months ago I paid an assessment on it. I can think of no reason why they should interfere except for the remains, as I say, of the old fight. That is just about the condition of the whole thing; and I say no man on earth can make an argument in favor of Santa Monica so strong as that picture itself, silent though it be.

I wish to call your attention to one point more in this connection. You see that arrow is southwest [indicating]; as a matter of course, southeast would be this way [indicating]. Will any Senator tell me how that breakwater protects the proposed San Pedro Harbor from a southeast gale? Not the slightest under the sun. The southeast gale comes right square into the mouth of it. As a matter of course, if the breakwater be extended away around it could not keep the wind out. It has full sweep and full sway. It is admitted by everybody in this controversy that it is the southeast wind that the mariners are afraid of on the Pacific coast. Yet the harbor of San Pedro, fix it up the best way you can, is right out with open arms, apparently anxious to receive into its bosom the terrific southeast gales, while the other one is absolutely protected from them. I think that is all I want of the map. [The map was removed.]

Mr. President, I am very happy to see your face once more.

I should like, in the first place, to dissipate if I can a little of the fog that has been placed around this controversy. I have to a certain extent made allusions to the railroads. The Senator from Missouri did to a certain extent allude to the people of Los Angeles. Somebody told me that the member of Congress from that district was placed on a platform two years ago in favor of an appropriation for San Pedro, and that his convention met a week ago and put him on a platform in favor of an appropriation for Santa Monica.

The city council unanimously the other day voted for an appropriation for Santa Monica. I think the Senator from Missouri described the conditions at Los Angeles about right. But what has Los Angeles to with this anyway? Why, the Senator from Missouri and I have been in this fight for about eight or ten years, I believe. We know all about it. We have got tired of it, too. I am very sorry to find him willing to have it run any further. I wish to get rid of it forever. I never want to hear of it again.

Give Los Angeles an inner harbor of 18 feet depth of water and it will accommodate all the commerce of Los Angeles for the next fifty years. It is ample for it. If you put a breakwater outside of the interior harbor, you are throwing away $392,000. The idea that the Los Angeles people are to instruct Congress as to where they shall put a harbor! For the commerce of Los Angeles? Nobody has ever talked about that. It is for the commerce of the world, and not only is it for the commerce of the world, but it is for a harbor of refuge, just as important as a harbor for commerce. The Atlantic coast has harbors of refuge all along. We are building one now at Sandy Bay, on the New England coast, at a cost of $5,000,000, and we have them every 40 or 50 miles—harbors in which tempest-tossed ships can run for refuge. They are just as important for protection to life and property as are protected harbors for commerce.

The harbor that we are talking about here is not a little harbor for a town or a city. It is a harbor for the commerce of the world, a harbor for the ships of the world, and Los Angeles has no more interest in it and no more to say about it than the people in the city of Portland, Me.

We have heard talk about corruption and bribery, but in this body there is more bribery from the good feeling which exists between Senators than from any and every other cause known to man. I think that we yield our preferences and our wishes to Senators when no amount of money and no amount of honor would induce us to do it under any circumstances; and I admit that I am one of the yielding kind, for while it has been charged in Los Angeles that I am owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad I would rather have the kindly regard of these Senators I am addressing, and their confidence, than the support of all the railroads and railroad magnates on the face of the earth, and all the money that all of them possess. The Examiner said if I succeeded in getting Santa Monica adopted as a harbor my pockets would be lined with gold, a happy way they have of talking about public men, sir, in your State, Mr. WHITE; pleasant and agreeable compliments they pay us—a high estimate they make of us. I thank a kind Providence that ever since my mother put the first pocket into my pantaloons it has been just as well lined with gold from that day to this as my modest necessities ever required.

Mr. HILL. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Republican State convention recently held in California declared in favor of silver.

Mr. FRYE. I think very likely they did, and against railroads. I do not understand that the Senators from California are entitled to any more recognition in the question of whether a harbor shall be established at Santa Monica or shall be constructed at San Pedro than the Senators from the State of Minnesota; neither did the Committee on Commerce, although we had one of their Senators on the committee as a member. It is not a harbor for California; it is just as much a harbor for my ship which sails out from the city of Bath as it is for the ship of the Senator from California which sails out through the Golden Gate—just exactly. It is just as much a home for the safety of the ship which sails from the lakes, if it can escape to the ocean, as it is for a ship which comes from Australia.

There is another thing which I am sorry has crept in to becloud this case, because I think it is gravely unjust. The Senator from California—I am sorry his speech has not been published in the RECORD, and I have to take the report of it from the morning Post—in concluding says:

> "It will be a donation of $3,000,000 to a private corporation," said Mr. WHITE. "It will be taking $3,000,000, which the United States engineers have recommended be not expended and spending it on an individual. It will not be for a public benefit, but for the benefit of an enterprising person who is developing a large commerce over one of the most magnificent wharves in the world."

The distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] intimated that it would be a terrible thing for the Senate of the United States to yield to the "greed of one man." Ah, both of those utterances savor a little bit of the slogan of the sand lots of the Golden Gate, where the name of Huntington is conjured to frighten babies with and used by demagogues to make the knees of weak-kneed politicians tremble. The "greed of one man"! Yet the "one man," the Senator admits, is building up a great commerce, which is coming over the finest wharf in the whole world. If that man is building up a great commerce is he not entitled to have a harbor to which that commerce shall come just as much as if it were built up by twenty different men? Is Mr. Huntington to be excluded from all the benefits of legislation?

Why, pray tell me, if he succeeds in establishing a great line of ships from China and Japan, and they bring the contributions of the Orient down to Santa Monica Bay, then take them on the Southern Pacific Railroad and land them at New Orleans as cheaply as to-day they can be carried from San Francisco to Ogden, and then they are put on board his great line of steamers, 20 in number, from New Orleans and carried to New York for one-fifth the cost from Ogden to New York by rail, is he to be punished for it? Is he entitled to the reprobation of the Senate? Is he to be summoned up here as a ghost to frighten Senators from voting as their consciences dictate? Mr. President, if that is the course to be pursued, we must re-form this river and harbor bill; we must change it entirely, we must strike out quite a number of items we have in it.

Take the item for Newport News. There was the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, dead, an utter wreck. This man, Mr. Huntington, took it and brought it to life; and with his courage and indomitable energy built one of the finest roads in this country from Cincinnati to Newport News; and to-day it is carrying more corn than any other line on this earth. Oh, cut out the appropriation for Newport News, because Huntington built the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad! That is the appeal.

Take another thing. We have been helping great shipyards by giving them contracts for building vessels, and I am glad of it. They needed it. We wanted to build the vessels in the United States. We had ingenuity enough; we saw that all needed, was encouragement. We have been helping great iron works, Bethlehem and Carnegie's, by giving them contracts and a chance to make money, and thus get their plants together. It was a good thing to do. But there was a quiet man in the United States who did not call upon the Government for any help. Nobody in the Senate knew anything about what was going on at Newport News. One day I received an invitation to go down and see a ship launched at Newport News. I did not know there was a shipyard at Newport News; I had never heard of it. I went down there, saw a great iron ship married to the ocean, and it had been built in the finest shipyard in the world, equipped with every kind of conceivable modern machinery, costing $6,000,000. It employed thousands and thousands of men; it has enabled them to support their families; they have built themselves houses, and for the next half century it will support those men, educate and clothe and feed the children; and Huntington did it. Oh, cut off the appropriation for Newport News; he ought not to have it! Huntington ought to be punished for building that shipyard, which is to-day underbidding every shipyard in America and building the great war ships of the country.

Cut it off from Norfolk, where he has a great line of steamers. The improvements there are a benefit. Cut it off from New Orleans. He runs 20 steamers into New Orleans.

Oh, it is too paltry to undertake to stop any legislation with that cheap, demagogical cry that because Huntington has done it no help can be given to Huntington. He employs to-day 75,000 men; pays them their wages when they are due, and there never has been a laboring man who has worked for him to whom he has not given his wages the day it was due; one instance I know, where a railroad was an utter wreck and owed the laborers $500,000, and Mr. Huntington put his hand into his pocket, gave the $500,000 to the railroad, wrecked as it was, to enable it to pay its laborers, took the wrecked railroad as security, and then put his energy and courage into the railroad and brought it up to life, activity, and value.

Mr. President, enough of this sort of paltering has been indulged in here. Let us come right back to the questions of where a harbor should be made, and whether it should be made at all. It has been said, and truly, that we sent a board of army engineers out there. I have called your attention to their report. I do not yield to any man in the Senate or anywhere else in my respect for the army engineers. They are gentlemen—thoroughbreds. They are educated men and scientific men. Their integrity can be trusted without question. I would risk my life and my reputation and my money with the Corps of Army Engineers as quickly as I would with my own father. But, as the Senator from Missouri said, they are finite; they make mistakes; they are frequently overruled. They are fortification engineers, as General Craighill said in our committee room, not riparian engineers.

It is said we can not overrule them; we must not overrule them. Your attention has been called to instances where we have deliberately overruled them. We have overruled them three, four, or five times in this very bill which we are now considering. We sent either a board or an engineer down to Brazos River to see whether or not it could be improved and a great commercial harbor made there. The engineers reported that it was an utter impossibility; that the jetty system there would be an entire failure; that the river would fill up. Colonel Ernst afterwards made another report, and he more strongly said that it was an utter impossibility; it could not be done. We authorized a company to do it, and in the river and harbor bill. That company sent for Mr. Corthell, this gentleman who perhaps may be doubted as authority because somebody paid his board. Mr. Corthell went and made a plan and specification for a jetty system for the Brazos River. The company adopted it, and to-day they have 20 feet of water and the river is scouring its channel. They want the United States now to take it up. They called upon us, and we concluded to have a commission to investigate. Did we appoint a board of army engineers as that commission? Not a bit of it. We disregarded the Corps of Engineers and appointed outside men to make that investigation. Why? Any Senator can answer the question who pleases.

In this same bill there was a proposition for a great harbor in Georgia, the harbor of Brunswick. There was a gentleman there who thought that with dynamite he could make all the channel that was neccessary. I will say for myself that I never believed it. The army engineers laughed it to scorn, said it was an utter impossibility, and that it could not be done. We authorized, in spite of the army engineers, two or four years ago, this man to go on with dynamite and make his channel. He went on and claimed that he had made that channel of a certain depth. Another board of army engineers reported to us that he had not made the channel and was not entitled to pay, but we paid him $30,000. How about the army engineers being supreme authority with the Committee on Commerce? Again, in this very river and harbor bill, he came in for a renewal of his contract, and we renewed it, the army engineers saying that the thing was an utter failure. He came in and proved by divers persons, ship captains and others, that it was not a failure; that he had that depth of water, and the majority of the Committee on Commerce determined against the army engineers, said he had procured a certain depth of water, and they not only renewed the old contract, but they doubled it, they tripled it, and provided for the making of a channel three times as wide as in the first bill. Then they did not leave it to the army engineers to measure—think of it—to see whether or not he had gotten a certain depth of water and was entitled to $30,000. Who did it? We took a man outside of the army engineers, a Geodetic Survey man.

In my experience with river and harbor bills, wherever a majority of the committee wish to overrule the army engineers that majority does it without the slightest compunction of conscience.

A board of army engineers made its report, and I declare that never in a single instance did the first board of army engineers or the second board of army engineers, either one of them, condemn Santa Monica as a harbor, and no condemnation of it can be found in their report. They simply expressed a preference for San Pedro and gave their reasons, and the most prominent reason was that it was better adapted to fortifications than was Santa Monica. That was the principal reason, and, as the Senator from Missouri has said, occupied more space in their report than did anything else.

Another reason they gave was that it was impossible, they thought, to find the right kind of rock at Santa Monica. Now it turns out that there is any quantity of rock at Santa Monica, of the very best kind of granite, 175 pounds to the cubic foot, which is about the best granite you can find, and any quantity of it, illimitable. They declared in their report that there would be danger of one railroad being able to charge any price it pleased for hauling rock if it were hauled by railroad. I propose to add an amendment to the Senate amendment like this: "Provided, That whatever rock is transported by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, there shall be no charge for hauling higher than one-half cent a ton a mile"—the lowest rate known to railroads; and Mr. Huntington before our committee said that he would guarantee that it should be hauled for that.

When the report was made to us in our Committee of Commerce we considered the matter, and determined not to appropriate for a harbor at San Pedro at that time. Shortly afterwards I went out there. Now, the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], who is perfectly fair in his argument, I admit, and argued both sides of the case, with so much fairness that every once in a while I felt a little uncertainty as to whether he was not going to take my side, alluded to the "distinguished navigator from Maine," and his visit to San Pedro somewhat sarcastically; but I'll forgive him. I will say, nevertheless, I went out there. I do know something about harbors. I have common sense, I think; what they call in New England "horse sense"; and I have looked over a great many harbors in my life. I am able to form a general judgment. I think I could tell, looking at that picture [indicating], which was the better place for a harbor; and I pity the Senator who could not. I went down there on that bluff [indicating] at San Pedro.

Who took me there? The Southern Pacific Railroad owned me then, of course, because the president of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company took me there, and he had about a dozen of his Southern Pacific officers with him. I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] was there with me, and the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. Senator Stanford was urging the necessity of an appropriation, stating that it was vital to their railroad, that it was vital to the interests of commerce, that a great commerce would spring up there if they could only have a safe harbor. I loved dear Senator Stanford with all my heart; I should have been delighted to have served him in any possible way. He was a kindly gentleman in every respect. I stood on that bluff [indicatting], about 70 feet high, the bluff running down straight, rocky, and looked out into this proposed harbor. About the first question I asked the Senator—there was only a slight breeze blowing, that was southerly, and the little waves were rushing up against the rocky side of this bluff upon which I stood—I asked the Senator which was the troublesome wind there. He said it was the southeasterly wind. "If your bad wind is the southeasterly wind," I said, "Senator, how is that harbor, which looks right into the southeast, going to be protected? How are ships going to be protected? Where are you going to put your wharf?" He said they were going to put a wharf—Senators can perhaps see the little point running out there about half an inch along the right side of that picture [indicating]—there, inside of that breakwater. "But," said I, "my dear Senator, that wharf will not stay there at all. The southeast wind will take that wharf off"—Senators can see the line there [indicating]—"and any vessel that lies there."

Mr. GRAY. Which is southeast?

Mr. FRYE. This is southeast [indicating]. The southeast wind comes right here where I am pointing [indicating].

Mr. WHITE. The Senator is a little bit out of the way.

Mr. FRYE. There is southwest [indicating]. The wind comes right in here [indicating]. At any rate there was no place there to put a wharf, and no man on earth could find one.

Shortly afterwards they went to work on that wharf. They spent several hundred thousand dollars in building it, and got it out perhaps a hundred or a hundred and fifty feet, when they concluded it was money thrown away and gave it up. Whether I am a "navigator" or not, I made up my mind very deliberately then that a safe harbor at San Pedro was an impossibility on account of the southeast winds. I did not know anything about the southwest waves then at all. I so told Senator Stanford. He argued the question with me, and by that time there were a hundred or two hundred people around listening, and I finally in jest said to the Senator, "Senator, if these Los Angeles people want a harbor, suppose they move their city down to San Diego. There is a good harbor there." You ought to have read the Los Angeles papers that night. There was nothing on earth bad that I was not. I never got such a lecture in my life as from those newspapers, and some of them have kept it up ever since.

The next day I went up to Santa Monica; I think it was Saturday; and for two days I enjoyed the gracious hospitality of one of the pleasantest homes which I ever visited in my life. The host was so much of a gentleman that he never mentioned harbor to me. But on Sunday, having nothing to do, I went prospecting on harbor business. I looked off onto Santa Monica Bay right from a a high bluff; right up here [indicating]. Here is Santa Monica. I was right here on this bluff, and looked out into this beautiful bay. It was a still day, and the bay looked like a lake. I thought I never had seen in my life a better place made by the Almighty for a harbor than that was. It seemed to be absolutely perfect. No northeast wind, no north wind, no southeast wind, no southwest wind could touch it; it was a remarkably well-protected resting place, and it did not need a great expenditure to make it absolutely safe, so it seemed to me. I have never divested myself of that first opinion, which I formed then, notwithstanding the reports of two boards of army engineers; and the other board, which is proposed now, if it should come to the same conclusion, would leave me in precisely the same spot. That may seem like obstinacy, but it is a deep, well-fixed judgment of my own.

I came home, told my experience to the committee, and they voted against an appropriation for San Pedro, as has been announced, indicating influence which I did not suppose I possessed with the committee or with the Senate.

We had another board appointed. That board went out, as has been stated, and made the usual examination made by boards. They followed very largely in the footsteps of the first. I never dreamed they would come to a conclusion in favor of San Pedro. I took it for granted that they would decide in favor of Santa Monica. I know them better now. You can not get one Department officer ever to overrule another one, his predecessor; you can not get an army board of engineers to overrule in the essentials a prior board of army engineers. You put one on the board provided for in the amendment and he never will overrule the Chief of the Corps of Engineers, who has been on one of the boards. The last board, however, differed from the first very essentially in this: They said that the harbor would not fill up with sand if there was a continuous breakwater from the shore out. The other said it would; Corthell said it would; Hood said it would. This board said it would not. As I told you a while ago, they provided for wharves attached to a breakwater that would rise 10 feet above the level of the ocean. I am sailor enough to know that that will not do, and I think any Senator here is sailor enough to know it will not do. That board made its report, and still the Committee on Commerce would not make the appropriation for San Pedro, and, in my judgment, never will. You send out a board now of Geodetic Survey men and a naval officer without that provision, that if they decide in favor of San Pedro then the Secretary of War shall make the contract, and let that report come before the Committee on Commerce, I will guarantee that that committee will not provide for an outside harbor at San Pedro. That is so; they would not do it. The inner harbor at San Pedro is enough at that point.

What comes next? I am not conceited enough to set my judgment against Army engineers, not at all. I felt a good deal of anxiety about this matter, and one day I heard that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, which had been trying to induce me to favor San Pedro, had deserted San Pedro and gone to Santa Monica. I made some inquiries in relation to that. I found that the name of their engineer was Hood. I wrote to Mr. Hood and asked him if it was true that the change had been made, to send me his report on which the change had been made. He sent it. I regard this as the strongest argument in favor of Santa Monica which can be made by any Senator. The Southern Pacific Railroad instead of having invested $1,000,000 had invested $3,000,000 at at San Pedro. They own nearly all the land on the north side of San Pedro. They had spent $900,000 trying to get wharves, and the time came when their commerce was increasing to such an extent that wharfage was an absolute necessity.

Why do you suppose they selected Mr. Hood? To do their will? Not at all. Because he was a fool? Not at all. These great railroad corporations manage to secure the best talent there is in the world, and they pay the requisite salaries to obtain the talent. They had to pay my friend sitting there, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] a handsome salary to obtain his legal abilities in their interest. They succeed in getting the best there is, and why not? When they are seeking an engineer for whom do they look? They look for a man upon whose judgment may depend the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars, upon whose judgment success or defeat lies. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company selected Mr. Hood, one of the best engineers in the country. Mr. Huntington said to Mr. Hood: "Mr. Hood, the time has come when we must make some expenditures. I want you to investigate the harbor of San Pedro thoroughly, completely, and make your report to me."

Mr. Hood made the examination, spending all the necessary time. He made all the requisite soundings, found out all about the bottom of the ocean, found out all about the winds, found out all about the waves, looked it all over to see where wharves could be constructed. Then he made a report to Mr. Huntington that San Pedro could not be improved; that you could not make a safe harbor there; that it would, with the best breakwater that ever was built, be open to the southeast gales, and no ship could lie there in a southeast gale whether she was anchored off or was inshore at the wharf. He said that a large part of the area within the breakwater was upon rocky bottom and there was no proper holding ground. The fact that kelp is growing there now inside the breakwater—and any Senator can see it if he goes there—discloses ledges at the bottom just as certainly as the magnet is disclosed when steel is around. The report of Mr. Hood, their engineer, was not made to influence the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] at all. Nobody knew that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] would ever see it or ever hear of it. It was made for the company, and the company alone. On that report the Southern Pacific Railroad deserted their $3,000,000 planted down at San Pedro and went up and planted $1,000,000 in building at Santa Monica, as the Senator says, the finest wharf or pier in the whole world.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Maine allow me? How came the Southern Pacific Company to locate at San Pedro in the first instance?

Mr. FRYE. I do not know.

Mr. HILL. Did they have an engineer upon whose advice they then acted?

Mr. FRYE. I do not know.

Mr. WHITE. Hood was then their engineer.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know how they ever came to locate at San Pedro.

Mr. STEWART. They bought an old road, and there was a small harbor there.

Mr. HILL. Did they have their choice of the two places originally?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. They bought an old road?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. Permit me to correct the Senator from Nevada. The county of Los Angeles contributed a considerable sum of money to enable the completion of a railroad from the city of Los Angeles to San Pedro. There was a good deal of public money in it.

I desire to correct the Senator from Maine in one particular. He stated that the Southern Pacific has deserted San Pedro. That is an error. They are running trains there regularly and are carrying a large amount of freight which they get upon their cars by means of the inner harbor at San Pedro to-day.

Mr. FRYE. I mean they deserted it as a deep-sea harbor. Of course their tracks are there. Mr. Huntington said they had sacrificed two-thirds of their property in leaving it.

Mr. WHITE. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. FRYE. He ought to know perfectly well. The pier at Santa Monica, built out a mile, has stood for three years, and not a bolt or plank has started. I say that no man, I care not how ingenious he may be, can make an argument that speaks with the power that single act does.

I was not content. I saw Mr. Corthell one day—this man who, because his board was paid, would sacrifice, perhaps, his reputation, which has been earned by lifelong service, and deliberately undertake to deceive Congress. Who is Mr. Corthell? He is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers; the American Society of Mechanical Engineers; the American Institute of Mining Engineers; the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers; the Institution of Civil Engineers, of Great Britain; the Society of Arts, of Great Britain; the Imperial Institute, of Great Britain; the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders, of Scotland; the French Society of Civil Engineers, corresponding member of that society for the Northwest of the United States; the Mexican Association of Civil Engineers and Architects; honorary member of the Geographic and Statistical Society of Mexico; the American Geographical Society; the National Geographic Society, of Washington; the Boston Society of Civil Engineers; the Engineering Association of the South; the Western Association of Engineers, at Chicago; fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; second vice-president of the American Society of Civil Engineers in 1888; first vice-president in 1893 and 1894; president of the Western Society of Engineers in 1889.

And yet for his board bill Mr. Corthell might sacrifice his reputation. What a proposition that is to make to the United States Senate! What a weak, silly foundation that on which to place an argument! He was Mr. Eads's right-hand man for four years, in full, complete charge of the jetties in the Mississippi River. He was employed as the leading engineer for the Brazos Company, and made a success of it. Mexico heard of him. They needed a great harbor at Tampico. It was one of the most troublesome places in the world to make one. They had been trying for it for years. They sent to this engineer, Corthell. He went down there, and to-day they have one of the finest harbors in the world, a perfect success. They sent for him out on the western coast of the Pacific, at the western terminal of the Tehuantepec Railroad. There the English propose to expend some $3,000,000 in creating a harbor. Corthell was sent for. He made a plan and specifications, and in the English contract for the building of the harbor the Corthell plan is entered. To-day he stands at the head, or nearly at the head, of the civil engineers on the question of riparian improvements in the United States of America.

I met him. I knew him. I asked him if he could not go to Santa Monica and San Pedro and make an examination and report. I was still uncertain. The engineers disturbed me as they disturbed others. I did not even yield to the fact that I had heard of the change which had been made. He said he was doing nothing and that he could go. I asked him if he would go. He said he would. Mr. Huntington undoubtedly paid his expenses. I did not and could not. My lean pocket is only enough for my modest necessities and not enough to pay engineers.

Mr. WHITE. When did the Senator from Maine request Mr. Corthell to go there?

Mr. FRYE. I can not tell the Senator. That, of course, is too indefinite to remember. I know I made the request.

Mr. WHITE. More or less.

Mr. FRYE. I have not the remotest idea. It was after the second board had reported, certainly.

Mr. Corthell said he could go. He went. He spent a month or two months, I do not remember which, and he came back with his report. It was in favor of Santa Monica and against San Pedro, with reasons given from the first to the last, disagreeing with both boards in many particulars and uttering his disagreement in unmistakable language. He declared that you could not make a safe harbor at San Pedro, that there was no power on earth to prevent the southeast gales from sweeping square into San Pedro. He declared that a breakwater built as the last one is proposed to be built would certainly fill with sand. He declared that no railroad track could be maintained on that breakwater an hour. He declared that no wharves could be attached to it, and that if they were no ships could live at the wharves when there was a gale from the southeast and the waves came in from the southwest. He joined issue with these engineers in all those regards.

As to Santa Monica and the present location, it must be remembered that the present location is one that has never been examined by our army engineers at all, and when Mr. Davidson's letter was read and he talked about ruins on the shore and where he walked, Mr. Davidson was walking from way up here [indicating] around to Point Dume, here [indicating]. Point Dume is more than 17 miles from the breakwater which is proposed for Santa Monica Harbor, and when my friend the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] spoke of the depth of 270 fathoms, etc., he was reading the depth of water off Point Dume, more than 15 miles to sea.

Mr. WHITE. There are 200 fathoms of water within your 12 miles.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, very well; within the 12-miles limit, occasionally. Here is the map, and any Senator can see it. The figures are all down here, showing exactly the depth of water. You draw a line across there [indicating], and it would be about 15 miles.

Mr. WHITE. There seems to be some conflict in the record with reference to that. Mr. Corthell's last statement is 12 miles.

Mr. FRYE. Twelve miles, then.

Mr. WHITE. It is in one place stated at 15 and in another at 12 miles. I suppose it depends upon how it is measured with reference to the two capes.

Mr. FRYE. The course of the southwest wave line is that [indicating]. It is marked on the map. Follow the course of the southwest wave line from that breakwater out and this is an absolutely correct representation of the bottom of the sea—the red line, every inch of it. You follow it out from San Pedro to Point Firmin, which is only a little ways out there [indicating], and this [indicating] is an exact representation of the bottom of the ocean there [indicating]. If it had not been for that formation [indicating] in Santa Monica the wharves could not have stayed there a year. That gradual decline [indicating] into the depths of the ocean is what saved the wharves. They could not have lived in San Pedro a year with 300 fathoms only 3¼ miles off, with nothing to break the force and the power of the waves.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Maine allow me? I ask for information. He stated that the harbor at San Pedro would be dangerous on account of the southeast gales, being open to them, and further that the swell came from the southwest. I want to know of the Senator whether any engineer has stated that the breakwater designed to keep off the swells at San Pedro could not be made strong enough under the specifications they have to resist the action of the waves?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Corthell stated in his testimony that he thought a certain portion of the last breakwater as it was practically out in the open sea, had been made too weak to withstand the waves and probably would give way.

Mr. WHITE. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that Mr. Corthell stated, on page 38 of the hearings, that he had spoken to Major Raymond about the matter, and that Major Raymond had said to him, which he had no doubt was true, that the breakwater was upon the same section as that constructed in the Delaware, and that he was not therefore disposed to dispute that proposition. You will find it on page 38 of the hearings.

Mr. FRYE. I remember he said it at some other place. I did not know anything about that. I shall return to the statement of Engineer Corthell again before I finish what I have to say.

I said that the engineers had never condemned Santa Monica, and I said that San Pedro would be open to the southeast gales. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], in the minority report and in his speech, too, said that the army engineers found that this harbor was not in danger from southeast gales. If he had turned to page 11 of the same minority report he would have found a quotation from one of the engineer reports which says that the dangerous winds come from the southeast and south, sweeping directly up the coast, and that San Pedro Bay is directly exposed to the southeast seas. In another place he will find, on the same page, that many vessels, a partial list of which is given there, have been wrecked in that bay, being caught there by southeasters. On page 23 he will find that the engineers say "the location at San Pedro has natural protection from all winds and seas except from the southeast around to the southwest."

The Senator from California further says that the affidavits of 40 shipmasters show that there is good holding ground, and I am glad he said in the roadstead at San Pedro. The roadstead is southerly and southeasterly from Wilmington, and is not within the harbor protected by the breakwater.

Mr. WHITE. That I absolutely deny, for I have seen the ships riding there myself, and know the locality myself.

Mr. FRYE. As to Santa Monica, and condemning it—page 11—the remarks of the army engineers are as follows:

> On the other hand, Santa Monica Bay is entirely sheltered from southeast gales by the highlands of San Pedro Hill.

These hills, on page 23, are reported to be 1,493 feet high; and these mountains, as they may well be called, now quoting from the report, furnish at Santa Monica "a more perfect shelter from wind and sea than can be afforded by any artificial structure." So I was correct in my statement. You can not find in the army reports total condemnation of Santa Monica as a harbor. There is only a preference for San Pedro.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Maine is doubtless weary, and I suggest that we might defer the further consideration of this matter, if it be agreeable to him.

Mr. FRYE. I confess I am warm.

Mr. GRAY. It is a very warm day.

Mr. FRYE. It is a warm day, and it is very warm in the Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. As the Senator from Maine is about to yield the floor, I desire his attention for a moment.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to go on to-morrow morning as soon as the Journal is read, and I ask unanimous consent that I may do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Maine, in order that he may be prepared to deal with the subject, that he explain to the Senate to-morrow whatever plan may exist for the building of this breakwater; whether any plan has actually been made.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; the plan has been made.

Mr. MORGAN. And an estimate made?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; the plan has been approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MORGAN. Approved?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I think that plan (I do not understand that it has received the approval of the Secretary of War; I never have seen it) should be brought from the obscurity where it may rest.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to observe in the presence of both Senators that the Congress of the United States could hardly be expected to enter upon the construction of a breakwater on the Pacific Coast that is to cost millions of dollars—three millions, is it?

Mr. FRYE. It has been submitted to the War Department. All the plans and specifications have been submitted to the Chief of Engineers. I have his report here, in which he says that it can undoubtedly be built for the money which is called for, and that it will give the necessary protection.

Mr. WHITE. I have seen the paper to which the Senator from Maine alludes. I should like to have it here to-morrow, so that Senators, several of whom have asked me about it, may be able to peruse it in the RECORD.

Mr. FRYE. And the testimony of Colonel Hains is to the same effect.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire for my part to know something about that, because until we have the plan on which we are to spend the money, which has been surveyed by competent engineers and the cost estimated, of course we are in the dark as to what we are doing.

Mr. GORMAN. I submit an amendment which I ask to have read and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 10, on page 100, insert:

> Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall so adjust the contracts herein authorized to be made by apportioning them in such way as not to obligate the Government under this act and all prior acts "providing for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," which provide for contracts beyond appropriations made, for a sum exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000 in any one fiscal year for such materials and work authorized to be contracted for in all of said acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of which the Senator from Maryland gives notice will be printed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will announce the first pension bill on the Calendar.

MRS. MARIETTA HAYES.

The bill (S. 1898) granting a pension to Mrs. Marietta Hayes was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "pension," to strike out "law" and insert "laws"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Marietta Hayes, mother of Watson Hayes, late a private in Company E, Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RACHEL PATTON.

The bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll, at $20 per month, the name of Rachel Patton, of Paris, Edgar County, Ill., formerly the widow of John H. Patton, late captain of Company C, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. COCHENOUR.

The bill (H. R. 3189) to increase the pension of John S. Cochenour was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension rolls the name of John S. Cochenour, late captain of Company H, Sixtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE H. VANDEVER.

The bill (S. 2645) granting a pension to Mrs. William Vandever was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, before the word "Vandever," to strike out "Mrs. William" and insert "Jane H."; and in line 7, after the word "Infantry," to insert "and late brigadier-general, United States Volunteers"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane H. Vandever, widow of Gen. William Vandever, late of Ninth Regiment Iowa Infantry, and late brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the bill be read again as to the amount.

Mr. CULLOM. It grants $30 a month.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the chairman of the committee why the amount was not fixed at $50, the rate that has been usually granted in cases of this character?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will simply say in reply that the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], formerly the chairman of the committee, reported the bill, and I do not at this moment recollect why the rate was fixed at $30 a month. It seems to be a bill coming from the part of the country the Senator from Nebraska represents, and I presume there is some good reason for it, but I can not now state it.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the amount should be fixed at $50 a month at least.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to it at all.

Mr. CULLOM. What was the rank, I inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. He was a brigadier-general.

Mr. ALLEN. He was a brigadier-general first, but later he was a brevet major-general, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. He was a brigadier-general.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me ask the Senator was this lady his wife at the breaking out of the war or during the war.

Mr. GALLINGER. That I can not state.

Mr. GEAR. What is the question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. ALLEN. I move that "$50" be inserted in place of "$30."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, before the word "dollars," strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty"; so as to read:

At the rate of $50 a month.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Jane H. Vandever."

SARAH L. HIVELY.

The bill (S. 2074) granting a pension to Sarah L. Hively was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "Colorado," to strike out "Cooy" and insert "Cavalry"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah L. Hively, widow of Andrew L. Hively, late private Company C, Third Regiment Colorado Cavalry Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month from the passage of this act in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Hively."

SILAS B. HENSLEY.

The bill (S. 2763) granting a pension to Silas B. Hensley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Silas B. Hensley, late private Company K, Third North Carolina Mounted Infantry, at $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH E. COTTON.

The bill (S. 2529) for the relief of Sarah E. Catton was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 5, after the name "Sarah E.," to strike out "Catton" and insert "Cotton"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah E. Cotton (nee Sarah E. Thompson), late hospital nurse in the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Sarah E. Cotton."

ALBERT ELLIS.

The bill (H. R. 708) to increase the pension of Albert Ellis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Albert Ellis, late of Company K, Twelfth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, at $24 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRA HARRIS.

The bill (S. 2711) granting a pension to Ira Harris was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Ira Harris, a lieutenant-commander of the Navy, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT B. SIMPSON.

The bill (S. 1124) granting an increase of pension to Alfred B. Simpson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty"; and in line 7, before the letter "B.", to strike out "Alfred" and insert "Albert"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Albert B. Simpson, late of Company C, Second Michigan Infantry, the pension hereby granted to be in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Albert B. Simpson."

MARIA E. WILSON.

The bill (H. R. 1181) for the relief of Maria E. Wilson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "pension," to strike out "and that her pension be rated from the date of the soldier's death as the widow of a captain instead of first lieutenant"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria E. Wilson, widow of Matthew Wilson, late captain Company M, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $20 a month in lieu of her present pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SARAH COMLY.

The bill (S. 937) granting a pension to Sarah Comly, widow of Maj. Clifton Comly, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-five"; and in the same line, after the word "month," to insert "the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by her"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Comly, widow of Maj. Clifton Comly, and pay her a pension of $35 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by her.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions the ground for the allowance of this amount?

Mr. GALLINGER. Unfortunately, the Senator asks me about bills that I am not quite as familiar with as those I reported myself. I will say in regard to the pending bill that the widow is receiving a pension of $25 a month, which is the rate allowed by the pension laws of the United States to the widow of a major. There seems to be a good claim for some increase of pension, but the committee were of opinion that an increase of $10 would be equitable rather than the increase of $25 proposed in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. What I more particularly desired to know is the ground upon which the increased pension is asked and the disability the lady herself is suffering under at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems that she is struggling to support herself and educate a young son, but I do not know that that was the whole ground upon which the increase is given. Major Comly seemed to have had a very meritorious service, and beyond a doubt the widow is in a very frail state of health and is in poverty. That seems to be established by the report.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection to the bill itself, but I think at this time I will offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, also authorized and directed to place the name of Alice V. Cook, of St. Paul, Nebr., invalid daughter of John Y. Cook, deceased, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, on the pension roll of the United States at a monthly pension of $25, to be paid as other pensions are paid under the general laws of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to address himself to the amendment, or may I be permitted to make a statement?

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to make a statement briefly in this connection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduced some time ago the bill which I now offer as an amendment to the pending measure and it was referred to the Committee on Pensions. It was reported back unfavorably at some time to me unknown. I was not in the Chamber when the report was made, but I found afterwards that the Committee on Pensions made a report, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BAKER April 7, 1896, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2285) granting a pension to Alice V. Cook, of St. Paul, Nebr., invalid daughter of John Y. Cook, deceased, late of Company D, Eighth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, have considered the same, and report as follows:

John Y. Cook enlisted on the 5th day of November, 1861, at Sabetha, Kans., in Company D, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteers, to serve three years as private. He was mustered in at Fort Leavenworth November 9, 1861. He died of smallpox in the hospital at Fort Leavenworth February 13, 1863, having served fifteen months and four days.

Sarina Cook, his widow, applied for and was granted a pension at the rate of $8 per month, and $2 for each of her three minor children, one of which was the Alice V. Cook who now asks a gratuity.

Alice V. Cook is now 38 years of age. Since she was 2 years old she has been subject to epileptic fits, which has made it impossible for her to care for herself, and needs the attention of another person. She has become insane, and is now, so it is alleged, an inmate of an insane asylum.

The object of this bill is to grant her a pension at the rate of $25 per month because of her relation to the deceased soldier and because of his service, and perhaps for the better reason that she is helpless.

Shortly after the death of the soldier his widow, the mother of this claimant, remarried, and has provided for the said Alice V. Cook ever since.

With all due feeling for the condition of the said Alice V. Cook, we can not see that there is any liability resting here, and therefore report adversely and ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CULLOM. I should be glad if the Senator from Nebraska would point out the number of the case and the page of the Calendar, so that I may be able to find the bill to which he refers.

Mr. ALLEN. Where it was rejected? I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought the Senator was trying to have a bill passed.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no, sir; I am trying to amend a bill that is now on its passage. The amendment——

Mr. CULLOM. Where is the bill now under consideration on the Calendar?

Mr. ALLEN. The bill is Order of Business 822, as I understand it, a bill granting a pension to Sarah E. Comly, widow of Maj. Clifton Comly. I have offered as an amendment to that bill a bill I introduced some time ago and which was adversely reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. Order of Business 822 is a bill granting a pension to Sarah E. Comly, widow of Maj. Clifton Comly.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; and I have moved to amend that bill by granting Alice V. Cook a pension of $25 a month.

Mr. CULLOM. That seems to be adding another pension case to the one under consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; it is not an uncommon thing, however, to be done here.

Mr. CULLOM. It is the first time I ever saw it done.

Mr. HAWLEY. I never knew it to be done.

Mr. CULLOM. Nor I either.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have been here fifteen years, and I do not think I have ever heard of it being done. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] shakes his head, and if there is anything of this sort he does not remember I do not know what it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is an anomaly; that is all.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think so.

Mr. ALLEN. I have heard the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] say that one of the most important pension bills in this country came about by an amendment offered to a private pension bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is very true. It was an amendment as to legislation. I remember the bill very distinctly; but never when one private pension bill was pending has another private pension bill been added to it.

Mr. ALLEN. What distinction is there between one private pension bill and general legislation with reference to pensions?

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me we had better take one bill at a time. As Order of Business 822 is under consideration, let us dispose of it either by passing it or rejecting it or laying it aside. Then, if the Senator from Nebraska has another bill that he wants to get up for consideration and it is on the Calendar, we will see whether we shall take it up or not.

Mr. ALLEN. What harm is there, let me ask the Senator from Illinois, in putting this amendment on the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. Because I think it is taking an unfair advantage. We do not know anything about the case. It is not here for consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. The report is here before you.

Mr. COCKRELL. An adverse report, too.

Mr. ALLEN. Is not the evidence with the chairman of the committee, as in the other case?

Mr. CULLOM. I object to the consideration of the bill the Senator is trying to amend.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; then I will offer the amendment on the next bill that comes up.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think it would be competent to object to the consideration of the pending bill. I think we had better see this matter out.

Mr. ALLEN. If no measure is to pass here except by the consent of the Senator from Illinois, then I will try it upon every bill that comes up.

Let me say in this connection that I offer my amendment in the best of good faith. I offer it more particularly for the purpose of emphasizing a thing that is apparent and that has been apparent here from time to time. The only statement the Senator from New Hampshire has made with reference to the bill to pension Mrs. Comly at $50 a month is that she is the widow of Maj. Clifton Comly, that she is in feeble health, and that she desires or needs this money for the purpose of educating her boy. That is true of a great many thousands if not hundreds of thousands of widows of soldiers. The same argument used by the Senator from New Hampshire is true with reference to a vast army of soldiers' widows and soldiers' orphans.

Now, what distinction is there between the case of Mrs. Comly and the case of Alice V. Cook? Alice V. Cook was not the child of an officer of the Army. She was the child of a private soldier; and so far as the evidence is now before the Senate her case is much more meritorious than the case of Mrs. Comly. Alice V. Cook was the daughter of a soldier of Company D, Eighth Regiment of Kansas Volunteers, who died from smallpox, and in consequence of the death of her father she was thrown upon her mother for support. She became and is now a hopeless invalid in consequence of epilepsy. She has been and is now in a condition where she needs the constant personal attendance of one person to minister to her wants. It is true that her mother a few years after the death of her first husband remarried, but the evidence before the Committee on Pensions shows that the mother is in a worse condition in consequence of her second marriage than she probably would have been if she had remained a widow. The mother and the stepfather are absolutely unable to furnish the means to support this girl as she should be supported. She is a hopeless invalid. I took occasion in this Chamber but a few weeks ago in a case like this from the State of Missouri that was reported favorably from the Committee on Pensions, as my honorable friend at my right [Mr. COCKRELL] will remember, to ask that the pension be increased from $12 to $24 a month; which was done. I never yet have had an explanation from the Committee on Pensions—I do not mean privately, because they do not owe that to me—I have never yet seen a member of that committee stand in this Chamber and offer a reason why the bill to pension this girl, Alice V. Cook, was reported adversely.

Mr. GALLINGER. It never has come up.

Mr. ALLEN. I have always supposed it was a reasonable courtesy to call the attention of a Senator who was the author of a bill to the fact of its adverse report, so that it might be placed on the Calendar if he desired, instead of being indefinitely postponed, but that was not done in this case.

What merit does this bill for the relief of Mrs. Comly present to this Chamber which is not met and overcome in the case of Alice V. Cook? What reason is there for granting her a pension which does not apply with double force to the case of Alice V. Cook?

It may be an anomaly to have two persons pensioned in one bill, but I know of nothing in the rules or practice of the Senate, I know of nothing in the Constitution, which prohibits it, and I shall insist upon the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. A single word, Mr. President, before the vote is taken. The bill introduced by the Senator from Nebraska was reported upon by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER]. My impression is, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska frankly, that had the bill been in my hands I might have made a different disposition of it. I do not recall the circumstance of it having been considered in the committee. I may have been absent at the time. I should not have voted for $25, but very likely might have voted in favor of $12, which is the amount we uniformly report in favor of invalid daughters when we think they ought to have anything.

There is this to be said in the case in which the Senator is interested: This woman seems to be in an asylum, and presumably is being cared for. As I understand from the report, her mother is caring for her.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report in the case, if the Senator will examine it, reads:

> Shortly after the death of the soldier, his widow, the mother of this claimant, remarried, and has provided for the said Alice V. Cook ever since.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. She does not seem to be dependent according to the report. There may be other facts of which the committee was not in possession.

Mr. ALLEN. Somebody must provide for her. Of course she has not been permitted to starve, or to go absolutely naked, but it is a bare support.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to say to the Senator that, so far as the bills are concerned which he has submitted to the Committee on Pensions, I have personally interested myself to see that they have been fairly considered, and if injustice was done to the claimant in this case, certainly the chairman of the committee is not responsible for it. It was unfortunate, perhaps, that the Senator was not present at the time the report was made to ask that the bill should go upon the Calendar. If I had had any knowledge that he desired that disposition of the case, I should have interposed and had the bill placed on the Calendar.

A single word further in regard to the Senator's amendment. I trust the Senator will not insist upon his amendment to the bill. There is a special reason why it should not be adopted, which, perhaps, has escaped the Senator's attention, as to granting two pensions in one bill. The President of the United States is in the habit of vetoing some private pension bills, and it may be that the objections which the Senator urges may attract the attention of the Chief Executive, and he might want to veto this bill, and he could not veto it without vetoing the Senator's bill at the same time.

Mr. ALLEN. I think my bill will be the salvation of the committee's bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. That might possibly be the case, but the other bill might be the destruction of the Senator's bill. I think the Senator will see that there is an insuperable objection to amending a private pension bill by adding another pension bill to it; and I trust he will not insist on it. The easier way, perhaps, would be to reintroduce his bill and send it to the committee; and I will guarantee that it shall have very careful consideration, and that the chairman, at least, will take a personal interest in it, because the chairman desires always to be just and generous toward the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator takes a broad view of pension matters, especially regarding the unfortunate children of soldiers, and of the private soldier particularly, and in that I sympathize deeply with the Senator from Nebraska; but I trust he will not obstruct the consideration of these bills by offering an amendment which seems to me such a one that it ought not to be offered to a private pension bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to say just one word, and then I will let this matter come to a vote. I can not understand—it may be that I am so obtuse that I can not understand it—why there should be any objection to receiving this as an amendment to the pending bill. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], to whom I am pleased to give credit for always being faithful in the discharge of his duty on the Committee on Pensions, and who, I believe, sympathizes with those who are entitled to recognition at the hands of the Government, has yet failed to state the precise thing for which Mrs. Comly is being pensioned. It is said that she is in feeble health. How far that feeble health goes, to what extent it incapacitates her from discharging ordinary household duties or earning a livelihood or assisting in earning a livelihood for herself and her son, has not been stated. It is said that in consequence of her ill-health and in consequence of her desire to educate her son this bill is offered and recommended. I am in entire sympathy with the bill; I do not want it defeated; and am the last man in this Chamber who would undertake to defeat it. I have within a few moments moved to increase the committee recommendation in a bill which I believe to be meritorious; but, Mr. President, here comes the distinction which has marked the proceedings of this Chamber ever since I have been here—an invidious distinction, a distinction which no man ought to make, and especially the Senate of the United States ought not to make, that in the one case the proposed pensioner is the wife of an officer, and in the other case the proposed pensioner is the helpless invalid daughter of a private soldier.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, if he will follow these bills as they are considered to-day—and I trust they may all be considered—he will find the committee have recommended increases in the cases of widows of private soldiers and in the case of private soldiers themselves. The committee has tried to be just in these matters. The Senator, I think, is rather unjust sometimes in his criticism of the committee, especially in his evident purpose to hold the chairman responsible for pretty much all that is being done by the committee.

I want to say that the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] made the report in this case, and, I presume, considered it with great care, and having been a soldier himself, I take it the committee was somewhat governed by his conclusions.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not my desire to hold the chairman of the Committee on Pensions responsible for everything the committee does or fails to do. I have very great appreciation of the services the honorable Senator has rendered pensioners; and I believe, as I said a moment ago, that he is in hearty sympathy with the policy of making reasonable and necessary pensions.

Now, let us look for a moment at this Calendar. Passing from this bill I come to Order of Business 863, a House bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why skip Orders of Business 860, 861, and 862?

Mr. ALLEN. Because I know nothing about them, only as I see them by their titles; but Order of Business 863 by its title discloses a remarkable fact. It is a bill (H. R. 4182) granting increase of pension to Georgianna C. Hall, dependent mother of Maj. John W. Williams, deceased, late surgeon, United States Army. There is the mother of Major Hall to be pensioned. I have no doubt that the recommendation of the committee is perfectly proper and that the mother is entitled to a pension; and I would not antagonize it unless I was convinced by evidence before me to the contrary; but certainly in this case, Mr. President, this lady did not sustain any closer relation to Maj. John W. Williams than Alice V. Cook sustained to her father, who died, and whose death forms the ground of a pension for her.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, of course, is aware of the fact that a dependent mother has a pensionable status under the general pension law which a daughter has not. There is that great distinction, which the Senator ought not to lose sight of.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know why it should be so.

Mr. GALLINGER. But it is so.

Mr. ALLEN. Calendar Order 871 is a House bill for the relief of Mary Jane Lynn, the daughter of John R. Lynn, a Revolutionary soldier. I presume that the mother has a pensionable status that the daughter does not sustain, according to the existing general law, and it would apply to this case; and yet the committee have reported a bill in her favor.

I turn to Order of Business 913, being a bill (S. 2357) granting a pension to Elizabeth Watts Kearny, daughter of the late Philip Kearny, major-general, United States Army. Mr. President, what distinction is there between the relation of Elizabeth Watts Kearny to her father and the relation existing between Alice V. Cook and her dead father?

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator from Nebraska wants imformation upon that subject I will give it to him.

Mr. ALLEN. How is that?

Mr. SEWELL. Miss Kearny is the daughter of the late Gen. Philip Kearny, one of most distinguished soldiers in the United States Army. This is the first pension that it has ever been proposed to give to a member of his family. His widow never received a pension, and never asked for one.

Mr. GALLINGER. And General Kearny was killed on the battlefield.

Mr. SEWELL. Yes; he was killed on the battlefield, and I was present on the occasion.

As to the case of Major Comly, he was one of the most distinguished soldiers of the late war; and so great was his administrative ability that he was placed in charge of the Government exhibit at Chicago. He was one of the best officers we had in the service of the United States.

In the case referred to by the Senator from Nebraska, he proposes to change the law entirely. You may give a gratuity to that poor woman, now 38 years of age, but she was only pensionable up to the age of 16 or 18, whatever the general law may be——

Mr. GALLINGER. Sixteen years.

Mr. SEWELL. So that the Government has given everything it ever promised in that case. I do not think it is fair for the Senator from Nebraska to undertake to put the beneficiary named in the bill which he has advocated onto another pension bill. If the Senator will bring it in as a separate measure, and make out a good case, I for one would be rather in favor of making an exception of it; and I suggest that the great State of Nebraska, or wherever she lives, ought to take care of unfortunates of that kind. The Government has done its duty fully in the case.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask attention also to Calendar No. 919, being the bill (S. 2983) granting a pension to Ida Emmott, daughter of the late Thomas Emmott. I should like to have some Senator explain, if he can—I know Senators can do a great many things—what distinction there is in the natural relation between Ida Emmott and her father, Thomas Emmott, which does not exist in the case of Alice V. Cook and her dead father?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I should like to say with reference to the claim of Alice V. Cook that there is no legal obligation resting upon the Government of the United States in any respect whatever. She comes here asking relief purely and solely because her father at one time was an honored soldier, not because of any legal relation to the Government or any obligation imposed by the Government, but simply as a gratuity. Now, when she comes and asks relief merely as a gratuity, she should show that she is in a condition to justly receive the gratuity. There was no evidence before the committee that her mother was not in a proper condition and amply able to take care of Alice V. Cook. There was not a particle of evidence showing that her mother by her second marriage had not married a man in good circumstances; there was not a particle of evidence showing that the mother was not amply able to take care of the child. The report in that case specifically finds and states that—

> Shortly after the death of the soldier his widow, the mother of this claimant, remarried, and has provided for the said Alice V. Cook ever since.

There is not a particle of evidence in the record that was submitted to the Pensions Committee that this woman was not still able and willing to take care of this child.

If the Senator had come before the committee, or presented his case, showing by this second marriage the condition of the woman was no better than by the first marriage, and that she was not able to take care of her daughter, then he might have put himself in a position to call upon us for some clemency; but he did not do that. I do not know but that the mother of this child is to-day worth more than the Senator from Nebraska or myself, and is better able to take care of her than either one of us would be. So when the Senator comes and asks a gratuity, let him furnish his proof, and I have no doubt if the Senator will furnish the proof of the proposition that the mother is not able to take care of the child, and will ask the committee to reconsider this matter, perhaps then they will be willing to allow the usual sum of $12 a month. In the absence of all proof they could do nothing else than to report adversely on that claim, as there was no legal liability and no showing that the mother of the child was not abundantly able to provide for her.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it is very gratifying to me to be informed by the Senator from Kansas as to the course I should pursue. Really I do not know what I should have done in the discharge of my duties if the Senator had not made his advent into the Chamber recently to inform me.

The Senator from Kansas says there is no evidence as to the condition of the mother of this girl. I introduced evidence, and sent it to the committee, as to her condition. I think I understand quite as well as the junior Senator from Kansas what constitutes legal evidence and what evidence the committee is warranted in acting upon: and I say there was before that committee the character of evidence which is acted upon by it daily, showing that Mrs. Jones, the mother of Miss Cook, was incapable of supporting her; showing that she and her husband were themselves struggling for a livelihood; and while they did support, in a way, this invalid daughter, Alice V. Cook, they were ill able to support her, and were not able to procure her the medicines and medical attendance and matters which an invalid or a sick person should have. I say that the evidence shows conclusively——

Mr. COCKRELL. She is in an asylum, where she is certain to be cared for.

Mr. ALLEN. My friend suggests that she is in an asylum, where she is bound to be cared for. I recollect no evidence before the committee that this girl is in an asylum at this time; it may be so, and I will not say that the evidence is not there, but what excuse is that? Suppose this girl is in an asylum; it is in consequence of this Government failing to discharge its duty to her.

The Senator from Kansas informs me, and I am grateful for the information, indeed, that it would be a gratuity to give Alice V. Cook a small pension under these circumstances. Mr. President, what is it to be in the case of the daughter of General Kearny? Is it to be a gratuity there, I ask the honorable Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BAKER. In the case of Miss Kearny the evidence before the committee is that she is in a destitute and enfeebled condition.

Mr. GALLINGER. And almost blind.

Mr. BAKER. Yes. There was no such evidence, according to the statement of the Senator, in the Alice V. Cook case.

Mr. ALLEN. What evidence is there in the case of Ida Emmott?

Mr. BAKER. I do not know anything about that case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ida Emmott is in a very deplorable condition, I will say to the Senator; which will be explained when we reach that case.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a gratuity——

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a gratuity when it is applied to Alice V. Cook, the humble daughter of an humble soldier; but it is not a gratuity, it is a just debt upon the part of the Government, when it is applied to the widow of Major Comly or the daughter of General Kearny or the daughter of Thomas Emmott.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope we shall come to a vote. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that the next case on the Calendar is one of the most deplorable cases I ever considered—of a private soldier—and we ought to pass his bill to-day, so that we may get it through the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not antagonizing this bill. I said at the start I was perfectly willing to support it and vote for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. We understand that.

Mr. ALLEN. But when I undertake to amend it in behalf of a girl who has been demented, and who is dependent upon public charity, I find because she is the daughter of a private soldier that distinguished Senators are arraying themselves here against her, when they are advocating the pensioning of others under like circumstances.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to my good friend from Nebraska that this lady would get no benefit from a pension. It is no charity to her. She is insane and in an insane asylum, and is bound to be provided for there with necessaries and luxuries. She can not be taken home to enjoy them, and there would be no enjoyment to her. She would be unconscious of anything that could be done for her, and she is there as well cared for as she could be anywhere on this earth.

Mr. ALLEN. That is no argument at all; and usually I listen with great interest to my honorable friend from Missouri. She is in an insane asylum and can be cared for there, Mr. President, as a subject of public charity. What would be thought of me if I were to say that the daughter of General Kearny can go to the poorhouse and be cared for there? What would be thought of me if I should say the daughter of Mr. Emmott should go to the poorhouse and be supported there? I would not say it; I would not argue it. I say, give to them a pension adequate to their needs and the services of their fathers. Give to this girl a pension adequate to her needs and the distinguished services of her father, humble though his rank may have been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let the amendment be read. I should like to hear it.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to suggest one amendment to the amendment, and that is to insert the words "late a private of," before the words, "Company D."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have a vote now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska as amended.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire is put I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to know the status of this case as applied to my demand for the yeas and nays before we adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the demand for the yeas and nays the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] moved that the Senate adjourn——

Mr. GALLINGER. Which is always in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And only that motion is in order. The question is on agreeing to the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 12, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 11, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to a violation of the privilege of printing in the RECORD, but as I observe that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is not in his seat at this time, I give notice that later in the day, when I hope he will be present, I will bring the matter to the attention of the House.

MOUNTAIN VIEW CEMETERY, OAKLAND, CAL.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 15) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., certain cannon, etc.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to donate and deliver, under such conditions as he may deem necessary in order to insure the proper fulfillment of the purposes of this resolution, to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., such old and unused cannon, muskets, swords, and other implements of war, of copper, tin, bronze, iron, and steel, as are not now and will not hereafter be required for naval uses, for the purpose of being used for parades, anniversary celebrations, and salutes: Provided, That such articles only be donated, under the authority herein contained, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy may be spared without detriment to the public interests: Provided further, That the United States shall not be subjected to any expense in connection with the donation of the articles referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman whether this is a soldiers' cemetery or not?

Mr. HILBORN. These cannon are to decorate the soldiers' plat, where there is a monument.

The Committee on Naval Affairs recommended an amendment, striking out all after the word "California," in line 7, down to the end of line 11, and inserting:

Six condemned cannon and six pyramids of condemned cannon balls for the purpose of decorating the Grand Army burial plat, reserved for the burial of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Union, and to be placed around and near the soldiers' monument already erected there.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 6104) for the relief of Anton Gloetzner.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6398) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a sale of the road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company is made by virtue of any mortgage or other power authorized by act of Congress, the purchasers at such sale, and their associates or assigns, shall constitute a new company, which shall have and shall be entitled to exercise the same rights, powers, privileges, grants, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, granted by the act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, incorporating the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and by acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and the incorporation as hereby provided shall be completed and become effective whenever the said purchasers and their associates or assigns shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a certificate of incorporation here under, duly acknowledged, specifying the name of such new corporation, its president, and the names of its directors, the amount of its proposed capital stock and bonds, not exceeding the amounts which the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company by said acts was authorized to issue, and with like effect, together with certified copy of the decree or decrees ratifying such sale; but nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale.

The Committee on Pacific Railroads recommended an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That whenever any mortgage made by the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company under and by virtue of acts of Congress is foreclosed in any court of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and any sale of the road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property covered by said mortgage is made under a decree or decrees of such courts, the purchaser at any such sale or sales, and their associates or assigns, shall constitute a new company, which shall have and shall be entitled to hold and possess the franchises and property so sold, and to exercise the same rights, powers, privileges, grants, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, granted by the act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, incorporating the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and by acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, which were owned and possessed by said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company or said mortgagees at the time of such decree of foreclosure; and the incorporation as hereby provided shall be completed and become effective whenever the said purchasers and their associates or assigns shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a certificate of incorporation hereunder, duly acknowledged, specifying the name of such new corporation, its president, and the names of its directors, the amount of its proposed capital stock and bonds, together with certified copy of the decree or decrees ratifying such sale: but nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts, or claims, or contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale: Provided, That the amount of the proposed issue of stock of such new corporation shall not exceed the aggregate amount which the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company has already issued and is now outstanding, except that said corporation may issue an additional amount of stock which, with the stock heretofore issued, shall not exceed the aggregate amount heretofore authorized by Congress, and such additional stock shall not be issued except for money, labor, or property, estimated at its actual cost value, in exchange for such stock at its full or par value: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as making any additional grant of lands or other franchises to such successor corporation, or as a waiver of any rights of the United States now existing to enforce any forfeiture of lands heretofore granted to the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or as in any manner affecting the vested rights of any settler or settlers on any of the lands heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company or of any purchaser or purchasers of said lands from said company.

"SEC. 2. That Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object pending an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BLUE. So do I, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. POWERS. This bill is for the single purpose of enabling the bondholders under the first mortgage of the western division of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to purchase the property, which is soon to be sold at foreclosure sale, and to organize a new corporation with precisely the same privileges as the old company. That is the whole scope and purpose of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I dislike very much to object, but it seems to me that this is too important a bill to go through the House by unanimous consent. I would suggest to the gentleman to try to have some time set apart for the consideration of the bill, so that it can be discussed and, if necessary, amended.

Mr. POWERS. There is very little to discuss about it, and if the gentleman will give his attention to the reading of the report, I think he will be satisfied that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. HOPKINS. This bill looks to the organization of a new company and to a variety of things which it seems to me ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole with reference to the amendment of the bill, if necessary.

Mr. POWERS. This is nothing in the world but a bill to enable the mortgage bondholders of the western division of this road, running from Albuquerque west to California, to reorganize into a new company after the foreclosure sale. The road is already a part of the Santa Fe system and there is a foreclosure pending. This road was chartered by Congress, and therefore it is necessary that authority shall be given by Congress for the organization of the successor company.

Mr. HOPKINS. But why not take the bill up in Committee of the Whole and discuss it and, if necessary, amend it?

Mr. POWERS. The difficulty is that the foreclosure sale takes place in a very short time and the bondholders will be all afloat unless some legislation of this kind is had.

Mr. HOPKINS. In making my suggestion I do not contemplate the postponement of the bill beyond the present session. It seems to me that it might be taken up some day this week and considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POWERS. Well, the gentleman is aware of the pressure of business, and I think if he will listen to the reading of the report he will be entirely satisfied.

Mr. HOPKINS. But the point with me, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a matter of too much importance to go through the House by unanimous consent. I think that the creation of a great corporation like this, with the powers contemplated in the bill, is a matter of so much importance that it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, instead of being passed through here hurriedly by unanimous consent.

Mr. POWERS. I think the gentleman misapprehends the scope of this bill. It is not a bill to charter a great corporation, as the gentleman says. The Atlantic and Pacific Railway was chartered to run from Springfield, Mo., west to California. That line is made up of several constituent roads and companies. This is one of those little companies, and the purpose of this bill is simply to enable the mortgage bondholders to continue the ownership of the property after the foreclosure sale which is now pending; and, as I have already said, they must have authority from Congress to organize a new company for that purpose.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am willing, when we come to it, to consider this bill on its merits, but I still think that the bill is of such a character that it ought not to be passed through here by unanimous consent. It looks to the reorganization of this company, or to the organization of a new company and the extinguishment of the old company, with the various incidental claims connected with it, which will drop out of existence when this new company is chartered.

Mr. POWERS. I am quite sure that my friend from Illinois would not like to throw a straw in the way of the passage of a proper measure.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; certainly not.

Mr. POWERS. And if he will be kind enough to listen to the reading of the report, I am quite sure that his objections to the consideration of the matter will vanish at once. It is a mere formal proceeding, to permit the owners of this property to get it into such shape that they may take by legal title.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, we can take any day during the week to consider the bill, and if the gentleman wants me to do so, I will join with him in a petition to the Committee on Rules to have its consideration fixed for some special day. But I do not think it wise to permit matters of such importance, and possible far-reaching consequences, to be considered by unanimous consent. It is a question of too much importance.

Mr. POWERS. My dear sir, pardon me; it involves nothing of the kind. It is a matter the gentleman himself would not object to if he would take time to consider the report. Why, on the very first day of the session he himself, if he will permit me to call his attention to the fact, called up a bill of much more importance and had it put through by unanimous consent. Now, I joined with him in that. It was a proper thing to do. If it is a proper bill there can be no objection to this method of consideration. It does not require delay, such as the gentleman intimates, and he himself will not insist upon it if he would but listen to the reading of the report.

Mr. HOPKINS. But the difference between my bill and this one is that that related to a single person and did not affect the rights of any other individual or the rights of the Government. This, on the contrary, may affect the rights of thousands of people and does involve millions of money.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about the scope of the bill——

Mr. HOPKINS. I think I will have to insist on my objection. I do it of course with reluctance.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2221) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific indemnity lands: Mr. LACEY, Mr. WILSON of Idaho, and Mr. UNDERWOOD.

PASSAGE OF ENGROSSED PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House at this time, as a part of the regular order, certain bills which have been heretofore considered by the House and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and laid aside on a demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The Clerk will now read the engrossed copies of the bills.

SOPHRONIA S. STOWELL.

The bill (H. R. 5996) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ERDMAN. Has debate been closed on all these bills?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on them.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is on the table a Senate bill identical with the House bill just passed. I refer to the bill of the Senate No. 2790, and I ask unanimous consent that it be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. ERDMAN. I object.

Some time subsequently

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, objection has been withdrawn to the request I made for the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill.

So, there being no further objection, the bill, S. 2790, of the same title, was substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the House bill, No. 5996, will be ordered to lie on the table.

It was so ordered.

BILLS PASSED.

Engrossed bills of the following titles were severally read the third time and passed, namely:

The bill (H. R. 1261) for the relief of John Kehl;

The bill (H. R. 3937) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenney;

The bill (H. R. 1299) to pension Harriet Woodbury, of Windsor, Vt.;

The bill (H. R. 4598) granting a pension to Mary Cray;

The bill (H. R. 1936) to remove the charge of desertion standing against David Mosten;

The bill (H. R. 3524) for the relief of James McGowan from the charge of desertion;

The bill (H. R. 4199) to correct the military record of Edward H. Munson, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second New York Regiment Infantry; and

The bill (H. R. 1171) to pension Hannah Yazell.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the several votes by which these bills have been passed, and also move to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called for.

Mr. LACEY. I understand that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM], who made the demand for the regular order has withdrawn it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether he will not withdraw the demand for a few moments?

Mr. KEM. I will do so.

DENISON AND NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask unanimous consent that the House take from the Speaker's table and consider at this time the bill (S. 2488) to extend the charter of the Denison and Northern Railway Company. This bill of the Senate is precisely the same as a House bill which has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House and unanimously reported. The measure is carefully guarded in every respect.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 9 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 30, 1892, be, and the same hereby are, extended for a further period of two years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That section 2 of said act be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That a right of way of 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory is hereby granted to the Denison and Northern Railway Company, and a strip of land 100 feet in width, with a length of 2,000 feet in addition to the right of way, is granted for such stations as may be established, but such grant shall be allowed but once for every 10 miles of the road, no portion of which shall be sold or leased by the company, with the right to use such additional grounds where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 50 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein granted shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone line, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken."

SEC. 3. That section 6 of said act be amended by striking out all after the word "Provided," and inserting the following: "That a map of definite location showing the entire route of said road through the Indian Territory shall be filed and approved by the Secretary of the Interior before any part of the said road shall be constructed."

Mr. KEM. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Texas whether this bill is in the usual form?

Mr. PENDLETON. It is in the usual form; and all the restrictions which are ordinarily imposed by the present Committee on Indian Affairs have been incorporated in this bill.

Mr. KEM. Is this the renewal of an old grant?

Mr. PENDLETON. It is an old grant renewed, with some additional restrictions.

Mr. KEM. Restrictions upon the company?

Mr. PENDLETON. Upon the company.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PENDLETON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DENVER, CRIPPLE CREEK AND SOUTHWESTERN RAILROAD.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8590) granting to the Denver, Cripple Creek and Southwestern Railroad Company a right of way for a railroad through the South Platte and Plum Creek forest reserves, in the State of Colorado.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Denver, Cripple Creek and Southwestern Railroad Company, a corporation incorporated and organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Colorado, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a railroad over and through the South Platte Forest Reserve and the Plum Creek Forest Reserve, in the State of Colorado, heretofore set apart and established as forest reservations by proclamations of the President, dated, respectively, December 9, 1892, and June 23, 1892; said railroad to enter said reservations at the junction of the North and South Forks of the South Platte River, in section 25, in township 7 south of range 70 west of the sixth principal meridian, and to run thence along the water course of the South Fork of the South Platte River to section 3, in township 13 south of range 71 west, and also to be constructed from section 21, in township 9 south of range 70 west, along the water courses of Horse Creek and Trout Creek, in the Plum Creek Forest Reserve, to section 34, in township 10 south of range 69 west; said right of way to be granted subject to the rights, privileges, rules, and restrictions of an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, said act being hereby made applicable to the right of way hereby granted. The said company, however, shall not cut timber upon said forest reservations outside of the limits of said right of way.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. PITNEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 8495) granting to John Hill Post, No. 86, of Boonton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. EVANS. I object.

PIPE LINES IN COLORADO AND WYOMING.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2032) to grant right of way over the public domain for pipe lines in the States of Colorado and Wyoming.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States situate in the State of Colorado and in the State of Wyoming outside of the boundary lines of the Yellowstone National Park is hereby granted to any pipe line company or corporation formed for the purpose of transporting oils, crude or refined, which shall have filed or may hereafter file with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of the ground occupied by said pipe line and 50 feet on each side of the center line of the same; also the right to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said pipe line material, earth, and stone necessary for the construction of said pipe line: Provided, That no such right of way shall be so located as to interfere with the proper occupation by the Government of any reservation; and all maps of location shall be subject to the approval of the Department of Government having jurisdiction of such reservation.

SEC. 2. That any company or corporation desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall, within twelve months after the location of 10 miles of the pipe line, if the same be upon surveyed lands, and if the same be upon unsurveyed lands, within twelve months after the survey thereof by the United States, file with the register of the land office for the district where such land is located a map of its line, and upon the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior the same shall be noted upon the plats in said office, and thereafter all such lands over which such right of way shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such right of way.

SEC. 3. That if any section of said pipe line shall not be completed within five years after the location of said section the right herein granted shall be forfeited, as to any incomplete section of said pipe line, to the extent that the same is not completed at the date of the forfeiture.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall authorize the use of such right of way except for the pipe line, and then only so far as may be necessary for its construction, maintenance, and care.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands were read, as follows:

In lines 3 and 4 strike out the words "and reservations."

In line 12 strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

At the end of section 1 strike out these words:

"Provided, That no such right of way shall be so located as to interfere with the proper occupation by the Government of any reservation; and all maps of location shall be subject to the approval of the Department of Government having jurisdiction of such reservation."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONDELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FLAGSTAFF AND CANYON RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7578) granting the Flagstaff and Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve in northern Arizona.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Flagstaff and Canyon Railroad Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of Arizona Territory, is authorized to construct and maintain a railroad over and through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve (heretofore reserved from entry or settlement and set apart as a public reservation by Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, by proclamation of date the 20th day of February, 1893), said railroad to enter the said Grand Canyon Forest Reserve at or near Moqui Station, Coconino County, Ariz., and to run thence by the most practicable route to a point at or near Cameron Ranch, near the Grand Canyon of the Colorado; said right of way to be granted subject to the rights, privileges, rules, and restrictions of an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, said act being hereby made applicable to the right of way hereby granted.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided, That no timber shall be cut by said railway company for any purpose outside of the right of way herein granted."

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to inquire whether this bill has been submitted to the Interior Department?

Mr. LACEY. It has been.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman have read the recommendation of the Department?

Mr. LACEY. The letter of the Department asks that the privilege of cutting timber be limited to timber within the grant. Under the general railway law the company could take timber anywhere for the building of the road; but on account of this land having been withdrawn and put in a state of reservation, the company can not build under the general law. This bill simply gives the company the right of way, limiting the privilege of cutting timber in accordance with the recommendation of the Department.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior be printed in the RECORD in connection with the action on this bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I will send it up.

The letter of the Secretary of the Interior is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 22, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on H. R. 7578, entitled "A bill granting the Flagstaff and Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve in northern Arizona."

I concur in the Commissioner's conclusion that the bill in its present form should not be passed, but that it should be amended as suggested by the Commissioner, in order that the purpose contemplated by said reserve may not be jeopardized.

Very respectfully, HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN F. LACEY,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL FLOWER, PLANT, AND FRUIT GUILD.

Mr. SCRANTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8497) to incorporate the National Flower, Plant, and Fruit Guild.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask, What is the object sought to be attained by this bill? If anyone fathers the bill, I should like to know what the purpose is in coming to Congress?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCRANTON] presents the bill.

Mr. SCRANTON. The object is to give them a legal organization.

Mr. LOUD. But I will say to the gentleman that they can incorporate under the laws of any State. Is it not a dangerous precedent to ask Congress to grant charters of this or any other character?

Mr. SCRANTON. This is a purely philanthropic and benevolent association.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I understand that; but what precedent has been established for this? Of course I know that if this passes, it will be one precedent; but I should like to know what precedent has been established heretofore.

Mr. SCRANTON. I am unable to answer that question.

Mr. LOUD. I recognize the fact that this seems to be a very worthy object, and if there was no other way of incorporating except by coming to Congress I should raise no objection to it; but I think it is a very dangerous precedent to come, even with a simple proposition of this character, to ask Congress for incorporation, because there is an abundance of power under the laws of any State to incorporate, and accomplish the same object sought to be attained here.

Mr. SCRANTON. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee have reported unanimously. Their report is here. It is very short.

Mr. LOUD. I think I shall have to object.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR LANCASTER, WIS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8324) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate four pieces of condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the Grant County Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Wisconsin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate four pieces of condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the Grant County Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Wisconsin, for the ornamentation of the soldiers' monument in the city of Lancaster: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service, and that no expense is thereby incurred by the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR G. A. R. POST, BOONTON, N. J.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8495) granting to John Hill Post, No. 86, of Boonton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate to John Hill Post, No. 86, Grand Army of the Republic, of Boonton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls for the decoration of the soldiers' monument in said city: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service, and that no expense is thereby incurred by the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8167) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

The bill was read. It provides that the North Dakota and Minnesota Central Railway Company, a corporation organized, created, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, is hereby authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North, at a point to be selected by said company and suitable to the interests of navigation, in township 148 north, of range 49 west, of the fifth principal meridian. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of said corporation, may be so constructed as to provide for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved by the Secretary of War, etc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman whether this bill has been submitted to the Secretary of War?

Mr. EDDY. It has.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has it received the recommendation of the Department?

Mr. EDDY. It has.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDDY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BABCOCK. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

CLAIMS PENDING BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND STATE OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure but the matter I desire to call up would be privileged, but at any rate it would only take a minute to dispose of. I will submit it, and if there be any controversy I will withdraw it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Senate joint resolution 91, providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee and certain claims of the State of Tennessee against the United States, passed the Senate some time ago, Mr. Speaker. I then asked consent that it lie on the Speaker's table until a similar resolution, pending before the House Committee on Claims, should be disposed of. They have since been considering it, and I understand that it will be amended, or it is desired to amend it. I therefore think the better course is to refer the Senate joint resolution 91, and let it be acted on in the committee instead of the House bill. I ask, therefore, that it be referred to the committee now.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reference will be made. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] calls for the regular order, which is business of the District Committee. What bill does the gentleman propose to call up?

Mr. SCRANTON. The demand for the regular order is withdrawn.

Mr. BABCOCK. I withhold it a moment.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF LEAVENWORTH SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 241.

Resolved, That the Speaker is hereby authorized to appoint a committee of five members, who shall be empowered to examine and report to this House upon the plan, practical workings, and management of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and any specific complaints which have been made as to the workings and management of any or all of the Homes, and especially the Western Branch, and to recommend, by bill or otherwise, what may appear to them to be necessary to insure the most effective, economical, and humane application of the funds annually appropriated by Congress for the support of said Homes; and for that purpose said committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and during the recess of Congress, at any place in the United States, to examine such of the Homes as it may deem necessary, to send for persons and papers, also the books, accounts, papers, and all other matters and things pertaining to said Homes and the conduct of any manager or officer thereof, to administer oaths, and to employ such clerical and other assistance as may be required for this work. The Clerk of the House, upon the order of the chairman of said committee, shall advance, out of the contingent fund of the House, such sums as may be required to meet the current expenses for clerk hire and other services, traveling and other expenses, not exceeding $5,000, said amount to be promptly accounted for by proper vouchers duly certified by said chairman.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, strike out the word "Homes" and insert the word "Home"; in line 5, after the word "Soldiers," insert "at Leavenworth, Kans."; in line 7, after the word "management," strike out the words "of any or all of the Homes, and especially the Western Branch" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of said Home"; in line 12, strike out the word "Homes" and insert the word "Home"; in line 14, strike out the words "any place in the United States" and insert the words "Leavenworth, Kans."; in line 15, strike out the words "such of the Homes as it may deem necessary" and insert the words "said Home"; in line 18, strike out the word "Homes" and insert the word "Home."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALL. I want an explanation of the resolution, reserving the right to object.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, the resolution as amended refers solely to and includes the Home at Leavenworth, Kans. There has been so much said about the management of that Home that it would seem to everyone whose attention has been called to it that there ought to be an investigation, both in justice to the men charged as well as in justice to the inmates of the Home; and I trust there will be no opposition to the consideration and passage of the resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand from a hurried reading of the resolution that it limits the expense to $5,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I want to suggest that the last inquiry of this nature, which was also limited to $5,000, cost $11,500 before they got through. That was an investigation held in 1883—a similar one to this.

Mr. TRACEY. That was an examination much more extensive than this. This is confined to a single Home.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That was confined to a single Home.

Mr. TRACEY. I do not see how they could expend the money.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is not.

Mr. HALL. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR BOONVILLE, MO.

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2843) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Boonville, Mo.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SAFETY OF PASSENGERS ON EXCURSION STEAMERS.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill 2642, to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers and oarsmen taking part in regattas, amateur or professional, that may hereafter be held on navigable waters, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered in his discretion to detail revenue cutters to enforce such rules and regulations as may be adopted to insure the safety of passengers on said excursion steamers and the oarsmen taking part in such regattas.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "steamers," strike out the word "and" and insert the word "yachts"; in same line insert the words "and all craft, whether as observers or participants"; in line 11, after the word "steamers," strike out the words "and the" and insert the word "yachts"; also, in same line, insert the words "and all craft, whether as observers or participants."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DINGLEY. One moment. Is this mandatory, or simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. BENNETT. It is left in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What bill does the gentleman propose to take up?

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up the bill H. R. 5731, with Senate amendments that came over to-day.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. This is a House bill; the amendments of the Senate can be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DINGLEY). The amendments may be reported. That is all that is necessary.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman that, while the bill is a little long, it has been the custom so persistently to have all bills read, however small the importance, that it would be well that this bill should be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is a House bill with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has it been read once?

Mr. BABCOCK. This is a House bill with Senate amendments, and therefore it does not require to be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. Ah, the situation is different.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Wholly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to have all of the amendments reported and voted upon in gross?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after "physicians," insert "one of whom shall be learned in the law."

Page 1, line 12, after "remove," insert "after due notice and hearing."

Page 2, section 2, line 14, strike out "and" where it occurs the first time.

Page 3, section 3, line 1, strike out "passage of this act" and insert "1st day of July, 1893."

Page 4, section 4, line 5, strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."

Page 5, section 5, line 24, after "have," insert "been."

Page 6, section 5, line 34, strike out "or of both, as the case may be,".

Page 6, section 5, line 35, strike out "or societies."

Page 6, section 5, line 37, strike out "said boards" and insert "either of the boards named in this act."

Page 6, section 6, line 9, after "and," insert "other meetings shall be held."

Page 6, section 6, line 9, strike out "other."

Page 7, section 6, line 12, strike out "examination" and insert "meeting."

Page 7, section 7, line 13, strike out "department" and insert "departments."

Page 11, section 12, line 7, after "Columbia," insert "nor to medical students who have matriculated in any medical college in the District of Columbia prior to January, 1896."

Page 11, section 12, line 8, after "to," insert "the practice of massage or the so-called Swedish movement cure, nor to."

Page 11, section 12, line 9, strike out "any."

Page 11, section 12, lines 9 and 10, strike out "being given in return therefor."

Page 12, section 13, line 6, strike out "to do so."

Page 12, section 13, line 9, strike out "or both."

Page 12, section 13, line 18, strike out all after "act," down to and including line 20.

Page 13, section 14, line 8, strike out "said board" and insert "the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering the Senate amendments to the House bill in gross?

There was no objection, and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

STORAGE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3462) "To regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia," with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, section 1, line 8, strike out all after "thereon" down to and including "property," on line 10.

Page 2, section 2, line 6, strike out "and" and insert "by the person at whose instance such change of possession is so ordered, and who shall be entitled to recover such payment as part of the costs in such proceeding, or if defeated therein he shall be credited with such payments in taxation of costs against him. And"

The amendments were concurred in.

PIPES FOR PETROLEUM.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2876) to permit Rene C. Baughman to lay pipes in a certain street in the city of Washington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to grant to Rene C. Baughman permission to lay pipes for the transmission of petroleum and its products in the following-named streets in said city of Washington, to wit: From north block No. 697 along the unpaved portion of Half street southeast a distance of 3,000 feet in a southerly direction to the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River; that said pipe line shall be laid under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That said Rene C. Baughman shall furnish said Commissioners with bond or bonds, or such other security as they may require, to guarantee the strict compliance with the permit that may be granted said Rene C. Baughman, and to insure the complete restoration of said unpaved portion of Half street disturbed in laying said pipe line as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. That said Rene C. Baughman shall also lower or re-lay any pipes whenever directed to do so by said Commissioners, by reason of a change in the grade of the street above named or the construction of any public work therein.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TESTIMONY OF PHYSICIANS IN COURTS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up the bill (S. 981) relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the courts of the District of Columbia no physician or surgeon shall be permitted, without the consent of the person afflicted, or of his legal representative, to disclose any information, confidential in its nature, which he shall have acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity, whether such information shall have been obtained from the patient or from his family or from the person or persons in charge of him: Provided, That this act shall not apply to evidence in criminal cases where the accused is charged with causing the death of or inflicting injuries upon a human being, and the disclosure shall be required in the interests of public justice.

The report (by Mr. HULICK) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2647) relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia, have given careful consideration to the same and recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment as follows:

After the word "any," in the fifth line, and before the word "information," in the sixth line, insert the word "confidential"; so that the bill will read:

"A bill relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the courts of the District of Columbia no physician or surgeon shall be permitted, without the consent of the person afflicted, or of his legal representative, to disclose any confidential information which he shall have acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity, whether such information shall have been obtained from the patient or from his family or from the person or persons in charge of him: Provided, That this act shall not apply to evidence in criminal cases where the accused is charged with causing the death of or inflicting injuries upon a human being and the disclosure shall be required in the interests of public justice."

The bill as thus amended receives the unanimous indorsement of the committee.

The object of this bill is to place a physician in the same legal relation to his patient concerning communications made to him by his patient of a confidential nature as that recognized by the common law and enacted into statutory law by almost if not every State in the Union between an attorney and his client concerning communications made to him by his client in that relation, or his advice to his client. The reason for the latter applies with equal force to the former.

Many of the States have extended this privilege to clergymen and priests concerning confessions made to them in their professional character. All such legislation is based upon public policy. The bill under consideration does not go so far as to include the clergy and protect them.

The information thus acquired by the physician must be confidential in its character, otherwise it is not privileged.

This bill was referred to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who submitted it to the District attorney, to the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and to the president of the Medical Society of the District.

The following is the letter of President Ross on the subject:

"OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"Washington, January 13, 1896.

"DEAR SIR: The Commissioners have the honor to make the following response to your reference to them for their examination of and report on House bill 2647, 'relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia.'

"Upon receipt of the bill they conferred with the advocates and opponents of the proposed measure, and ultimately submitted the subject to the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia and the president of the Medical Society of the District, and to their attorney. The Commissioners have no especial qualifications or experience that would render their conclusions on the subject of exceptional value, and therefore take the liberty of transmitting copies of the opinions of the justices of the supreme court of the District, of the president of the Medical Society of the District as the representative of that society, and of the attorney for the District, as the best manner of getting before you the views of the most authoritative exponents of both sides of the question.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN W. ROSS,
"President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

"Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
"Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
"House of Representatives."

The district attorney favors the measure, as expressed in the following letter:

"OFFICE ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"Washington, D. C., December 23, 1895.

"GENTLEMEN: I have examined Senate bill (S. 981, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session) relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia, which you referred to me for opinion.

"The object of this bill is to place physicians on the same plane with lawyers as to confidential communications in the course of their employment. At common law (which prevails in this District) confidential communications made by a patient to his physician are not privileged. This rule has been changed by statute in a majority of the States so that communications made by a patient to his physician or surgeon and information acquired by him while attending a patient in a professional capacity, which are important to enable him to act, are protected.

"Judge Cooley (Torts, 619, 620), after observing that the common law does not extend to the confidence bestowed upon a physician the same protection which it gives to the legal adviser, says:

"'Yet the reasons in support of it are largely the same, and ought to have been recognized as sufficient. The disclosures made to any of the three (physicians, clergymen, and lawyers) may in a measure be compulsory, and what is extorted can never rightfully be made use of except for the very purpose for which it is obtained. The competent physician does not undertake to make cures where he knows nothing of the causes; and he may need to know the history of an ailment before he is able to determine the family to which it belongs, or the remedies likely to be available for its cure. He demands this; and in the mind of the patient the alternative to disclosure may be that he will be wrongly and prejudicially treated. But the disclosure that may be useful for treatment may be damaging otherwise if placed before the public; and if the lips of the physician are not sealed the patient may elect to deceive him rather than to have his body cured at the expense of his liberty or his reputation.'

"The bill very properly excepts evidence in criminal cases where the accused is charged with causing the death, etc., and the disclosure is required in the interest of public justice.

"In my opinion the measure is one that is entitled to be favorably recommended to Congress.

"The bill is herewith returned.

"Very respectfully,

"S. T. THOMAS,
"Attorney District of Columbia.

"The COMMISSIONERS, etc."

The justices of the supreme court of the District recommend unfavorable action thereon by Congress in the following communication:

"SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"Washington, January 17, 1896.

"DEAR SIR: In response to your request for our views as to the desirability of the proposed legislation, we have examined and considered Senate bill No. 981, relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia, and suggest that you recommend unfavorable action thereon by Congress.

"The privilege thus proposed to be extended to physicians, exempting and prohibiting them from disclosure, in the courts, of information obtained in attending a patient in a professional capacity, did not exist at common law, and in a more or less restricted form exists by statute to-day in only 20 of our States and Territories. Of these, New York is the only Atlantic Coast State, and Arkansas the sole Southern State. The legislation is comparatively recent, and of the States adopting it all are quite young except those just mentioned and California, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin.

"The privilege extended to communications between legal adviser and client at common law was based upon public policy and had direct reference to the administration of justice which required 'the aid of men skilled in jurisprudence, in the practice of the courts, and in those matters affecting rights and obligations which form the subject of all judicial proceedings.' The reason for the rule was said to be that without it no man 'would dare consult a professional adviser with a view to his defense, or to the enforcement of his rights.' No such reason exists or applies as to communications made by patient to physician, and it clearly fails with reference to knowledge derived by the physician from observation. There is no occasion for the provision excluding information obtained from the family or others attending the patient, for the rule of evidence as excluding hearsay testimony accomplishes that.

"The enactment sought by this bill would be a serious obstruction to justice in contests over life insurance, personal injury from negligent or willful act, wills, and others in which mental capacity is involved. In such cases, facts coming under the observation of the attending physician are generally of first importance, and in cases involving questions of mental capacity the opinion of the physician, based in whole or in part upon communications made to him by the patient, is frequently the most important evidence adduced. These objections are not obviated by placing such evidence within the power of 'the person afflicted, or of his legal representative' to permit or deny. It is not to be anticipated that such person will ever consent to the examination of a physician whose testimony is expected to be adverse to him, and the other party to the litigation, and the court as well, perhaps with full knowledge of the situation, would be powerless in such instances to require the truth to be shown.

"Under statutes in force in this District, parties to a cause are competent and compellable witnesses in behalf of each other, as well as competent witnesses in their own behalf. They ought not to be permitted to exercise control over the knowledge of others.

"We think that this bill ought not to become law in its present shape; that it is not susceptible of such amendment as will obviate the objections stated; and that such legislation would be detrimental to the administration of justice.

"Very respectfully,

"E. F. BINGHAM.
"A. B. HAGNER.
"A. C. BRADLEY.
"L. E. McCOMAS.
"CHAS. C. COLE.
"WALTER S. COX.

"Hon. JOHN W. ROSS,
"President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia."

The committee hold in high esteem the opinions and judgment of this eminent tribunal and recognize the force of their argument against the bill in its original form, but think their objections are met by the amendment suggested by the committee.

The bill thus amended makes privileged only such "confidential information which he shall have acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity," etc.

It will be observed that the information thus acquired to be privileged must be "confidential"; it must be obtained by him in his capacity as a physician, and it must be "necessary" to enable him to act in that capacity. If any of these elements lack in the information it will not come under the rule as privileged.

We respectfully differ with the learned justices when speaking of the principle as applied to attorney and client, that "no such reason exists or applies as to communications made by a patient to a physician."

We think the reason exists with greater force where the character and reputation, the health and life of the patient are involved. The issues of life and death are placed in the hands of the trusted family physician. The patient should frankly, freely, truthfully, unreservedly make full disclosures to the doctor, and he in turn should be at perfect liberty to ask for and demand all the information bearing upon the disability that would enable him to properly diagnose the case and apply the remedy, without being compelled to make disclosures thereof in court or elsewhere.

There is an unwritten law among the medical profession that forbids any physician to disclose what he has learned about his patient that would reflect upon his reputation or character, under the penalty of dishonorable dismissal from their fraternity.

The learned justices say further, "and it (the reason) clearly fails with reference to knowledge derived by the physician from observation."

Under this bill knowledge derived from observation may or may not be privileged. That will be a question for the court to determine from all the circumstances in each particular case. The knowledge obtained, whether from communication or observation, must be confidential, otherwise the rule does not apply.

The common-law rule as applied to attorneys is modified by this bill in its application to physicians:

"This act shall not apply to evidence in criminal cases where the accused is charged with causing the death of or inflicting injuries upon a human being and the disclosure shall be required in the interests of public justice."

This important modification seems to have been overlooked by the justices in considering this measure.

Communications made to his attorney by the veriest criminal are privileged. Not so under this act by communications made by the patient to his physician, where the accused is charged with causing death or inflicting injuries on a human being.

The medical profession universally ask this legislation, not in their own interests, but for the protection of the reputation, health, and lives of their patients, as well as for public justice.

We subjoin the very able communication of the president of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, which clearly expresses the views of the profession upon this question:

1545 I STREET NW.,
Washington City, D. C., February 11, 1896.

SIR: The bill (H. R. 2647) entitled "A bill relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia" has been drafted and presented to Congress by direction of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia. It is modeled after the law of the State of New York, and is substantially the same as similiar laws in force in twenty States and one Territory of this country, the first of which was enacted by the State of Oregon in 1872, and the latest in 1887 by the States of Indiana, Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho.

The following list includes the States, with the year, page, and section of the statute books in which the law is to be found:

*Civil Code.

The opposition to the enactment of this bill is set forth in the protest of six justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia now on file with the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to which I am directed by the committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia to make reply, as follows:

The medical profession of this District holds in high esteem the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, as well for their learning and judicial ability as for their personal standing and integrity, but it is surprised that they should unite in a formal protest against the enactment of this bill, which has for its object the extension to the citizen of the liberty of privileged communications, and for his protection in the enjoyment of the right of unreserved and confidential confession to his physician, now denied him by the common law in force in this District, and enforced by the said six justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. It is quite reasonable to suppose there are in either House of Congress many men who, for the time being, are discreet legislators, and fully qualified to determine the utility and wisdom of such laws, to whom the Medical Society will appeal, with the hope of securing the passage of House bill No. 2647, the opposition of the justices of said court to the contrary notwithstanding, and it will continue to prosecute its purpose with unabated zeal until success shall crown its efforts.

It is not known to the Medical Society, nor to any member thereof, that any organized opposition, either judicial or popular, has been made to the enforcement of such laws in any of the States in which such statutes exist, or that any effort has been made to repeal them, or that any conflict exists in regard to their utility and justice. It must therefore at least be inferred that the wisdom of such statute protection of physicians from enforced disclosure of the confidential communications of patients has been established, and it remains only to extend such protection to less favored communities.

The bill is intended to protect physicians from the compulsory disclosure of information acquired in a professional capacity, and which may be necessary to enable them to manage cases of sickness with intelligence and success. It frequently occurs that patients will conceal important, and sometimes absolutely necessary, information, and occasionally will deny the existence or previous occurrence of certain circumstances or conditions alleged by the physician, until admission or confession is extorted by some statement of the physician that longer concealment or denial would prove dangerous and perhaps fatal.

It is a recognized principle of law that a witness can not be forced to criminate himself. Surely information extorted by a physician, or communicated to him in the confidence of a confiding patient, should be equally inviolable as information known only to the witness himself. If a witness can not be compelled to criminate himself directly by confession in open court, is it not gross injustice to compel him to criminate himself indirectly by the compulsory disclosure of his confession or confidential communication to his physician made under duress, fright, or emotional impulse? If a man unwillingly confesses some circumstance, incident, or vice of his life to a physician to enable that physician to treat an existing ailment with intelligence, is it more than exact justice to grant him the right of refusing permission to such physician to disclose in open court such confidential communication? The bill is intended to protect the patient from such indirect and involuntary crimination of himself, and compulsory disclosure of a secret confided to his friend and physician.

The second paragraph of the protest of the six justices sets forth three averments in opposition to this bill:

(1) "New York is the only Atlantic Coast State" that has adopted such a law.

(2) "Arkansas is the sole Southern State" in which such a statute exists.

(3) "The legislation is comparatively recent, and of the States adopting it all are quite young, except those just mentioned (New York and Arkansas) and California, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin."

The third averment carries with it the emphatic contradiction of the averment of recency, because of the admission that it is inapplicable to 11 of the 29 States in which such statutes exist. If the averment of recency were true, how would such fact disprove or lessen the wisdom and justice of such laws? On the contrary, it would seem to establish the equity of such legislation, because in evidence of the progress of a higher civilization and broader conception of private rights and privileges. The progress of civilization during the past twenty-four years (the first law dates back to 1872) has not been more clearly shown than in the many recent statutory modifications of and exemptions from legal traditions—than by such legislation in the States named, which has exempted 27,000,000 (census of 1890) citizens of this country from such compulsory disclosures.

The citation of one Atlantic Coast and one Southern State is even more fallacious, and partakes of the nature of a derisive appeal to geographical, sectional, or local prejudices. New York is the largest, most populous, and wealthiest of the original thirteen States. Why, then, may not her statute of exemption be accepted as testimony in support of the justice of such legislation; all the more strongly so because as yet there has been neither judicial nor popular remonstrance against such statutory protection of physicians from the compulsory disclosure of the confidential communications of her sick citizens? And surely Arkansas is old enough and her citizens are sufficiently advanced in civilization to know how best to protect her citizens in their private rights and privileges. So far, then, these two States may be cited as exemplars worthy of the emulation of other sister States still lagging in the tradition of the common law transmitted to us from English descent.

The Medical Society of the District of Columbia, as does the medical profession at large, admits (see third paragraph of protest) the justice of the exemption of legal advisers from enforced disclosure of the secrets of their clients, but it can not be admitted that such confidential communications are more sacred than the confidences of sick people. Legal advisers and attorneys are for the most part concerned with litigants, and their confidential information relates mainly to business matters and property values. The confidences of the physician refer most especially, and in most instances exclusively, to personal conditions, character, temperament, idiosyncrasies, vices, indiscretions of life, family history, inherited predispositions and diseases, and avoidable and unavoidable afflictions, social as well as pathological; and all this in the interest of health, longevity, and life. If these two widely different classes of confidences could be measured by any common or uniform standard, those of the physician would rise far above those of the attorney on the scale of inviolability.

It is stated in the same paragraph that if the privilege was not "extended to communications between legal adviser and client no man would dare consult a professional adviser with a view to his defense or the enforcement of his rights." The predicate and postulate are both conceded, and it is equally true that "no man would dare consult" his medical adviser with a view to the treatment and cure of disease if he knew that his confidential communications and confessions would be disclosed in open court. "The privilege extended to communications between legal adviser and client at common law" is based upon public policy, but that fact can not justify the limitation of the privilege exclusively to the legal profession, nor is it believed that popular judgment, always the safest depository of power, will sustain such contention.

Under the common law the physician can not protect himself from compulsory disclosure of confidential communications, nor can the common law be amended; relief can therefore only be obtained by statute law enacted by the legislature. The patient should be protected in the unreserved and fearless statement of his ailment and its cause. Suppose, for instance, an erring man by a candid confession aided his physician in the diagnosis of syphilis contracted by illicit intercourse, and is treated to his own advantage and to the protection of his wife and unborn children. If he knew his medical attendant could be compelled to convict him of adultery, he would hesitate to make such confession to his own destruction and ruin of his family.

According to the census of 1890, 27,472,236 citizens of this country have been exempted by State legislation from such compulsory disclosures as are set forth in the bills H. R. 2647 and S. 981. These bills seek to guarantee to this community the same protection. The original bill was prepared by a distinguished attorney of the local bar, after a careful examination of the statutes in the twenty States. This simple statement of facts is a conclusive answer to the protest of the six justices and establishes the wisdom and justice of such legislation.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL C. BUSEY, M. D.,
President of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.

Hon. JOHN W. ROSS,
President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that this is a Senate bill which has not been reported by any committee of the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. The House Committee on the District of Columbia has reported an exact duplicate of this bill, which is on the Calendar. The report was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK], who will explain the bill.

Mr. HULICK. The House Committee on the District of Columbia directed me to report a similar bill to this. The original bill reported to the House is identical with the bill passed by the Senate, but the House committee have recommended an amendment to its bill. Upon last Saturday, however, the Senate passed its bill with an amendment similar to that proposed by the House committee, and I wish to call attention to the amendments that are proposed by the House and Senate, respectively. In order to make the matter clear, I will first ask to have House bill No. 2647 read with the amendment proposed.

The bill (H. R. 2647) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the courts of the District of Columbia no physician or surgeon shall be permitted, without the consent of the person afflicted, or of his legal representative, to disclose any confidential information which he shall have acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity, whether such information shall have been obtained from the patient or from his family or from the person or persons in charge of him: Provided, That this act shall not apply to evidence in criminal cases where the accused is charged with causing the death of or inflicting injuries upon a human being and the disclosure shall be required in the interest of public justice.

Mr. HULICK. It will be observed that the amendment proposed by the House committee has the word "confidential" before the word "information." The bill as amended by the Senate has after the word "information" the words "confidential in its nature." Now, it is for the House to determine whether they will accept the bill as it comes from the Senate or will adopt the amendment recommended by the House committee. Although there is not very much difference between the two, I would prefer the amendment of the House committee, and if the Senate had not already passed the bill in this amended form I should be inclined to insist upon our amendment. The expression "confidential information" is a fixed term, and the court would have to interpret it according as the facts and circumstances in each case should warrant. The language of the amendment made by the Senate, "information confidential in its nature," might be regarded as indefinite and uncertain, and I think it would be better to adopt the language recommended by the House committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the House to the fact that the Senate bill is before the House as an original bill, and the House bill is not before the House.

Mr. HULICK. The House bill has been reported and is on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is on the Calendar, but it has not been called up. The Senate bill has been called up.

Mr. HULICK. Well, in connection with the Senate bill, I will ask that the House bill be taken up, so that both may be considered together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The chairman of the committee [Mr. BABCOCK] has called up the Senate bill, and of course only one bill can be considered at a time.

Mr. BABCOCK. This bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. HULICK. That is true, but the House bill is on the Calendar, and while both bills can not be formally under consideration, yet the House may have before it at the same time the two amendments proposed, the one by the Senate and the other by the House, for the purpose of comparing them and determining which is preferable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate bill only is before the House, but an amendment to that bill would be in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that the gentleman from Ohio can attain the object he has in view by moving to amend the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that in view of the parliamentary situation the better way would be to consider the Senate bill and allow the House bill to be afterwards tabled. Otherwise the bill would have to be sent to the Senate again.

Mr. HULICK. I recognize the parliamentary situation, and in view of the fact that there is merely a shade of difference between the Senate amendment and the one recommended by the House Committee on the District of Columbia, and as the Senate has already passed the bill, I think I shall not insist upon the House amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question, then, is on concurring in the Senate bill.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, there is one matter to which I wish to call attention, in connection with my remarks. The judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia have signed a protest, or rather an argument, as will be observed in the report, against the passage of this bill. The committee, of course, have great respect for the opinions of that court and for the judges composing it. I know one of the judges personally, having practiced before him in Ohio. It is unnecessary to say that the opinion of the judges is a matter to which the committee have felt bound to give very full and careful consideration. This legislation is in derogation of the principle of the common law in regard to information or knowledge received by a physician from his patient. Hence the committee have felt that they should act deliberately in recommending the adoption of any measure not consistent with the opinion of a court of so high standing. Nevertheless the amendments which have been suggested to the original bill will, we think, overcome the objections which have been offered by the judges of that court.

In this connection, I wish to have printed in the RECORD a brief summary of the statutes adopted by the different States in regard to the matter embraced in this bill. I call attention to the fact that but one State has adopted in its statute the term "confidential" in reference to information thus obtained by a physician. I think that the point the judges had in mind was that the privilege should not be so broad as to cover every communication which might be made by a patient to his physician, or information obtained by him; they doubtless thought that the information intended to be protected by this privilege should be information confidential in its nature—such as was in fact intended by the patient to be confidential. Among the 21 States and Territories that have adopted laws of this kind only one—the State of Iowa—has inserted in its statute the term "confidential information." There are four States where this privilege applies only to civil actions. In those States in criminal investigations, where the death of a human being results, or where public justice requires the disclosure of the information, exceptions are made as we propose to make exception in this bill. I repeat that I think the suggestions made by the judges of this District in reference to this measure are met by the amendments of the committee which have been incorporated in the bill—amendments limiting this privilege to confidential information and also excepting from its application criminal cases such as I have described.

All the physicians of the District, or at any rate the most prominent ones, who have been consulted concur in indorsing this bill. They think that some measure of protection like this ought to be adopted so as to reenforce what is already the unwritten law of the profession, regarded among honorable physicians as equally obligatory with a statutory provision making information of this character privileged.

Members will remember the great case which recently created so much interest all over the world—a case which was decided only a short time ago in the English courts—the case of Dr. Playfair, who was required to pay a judgment of $40,000 for divulging (inadvertently, perhaps) information confidentially obtained which involved the character and reputation of one of his patients. This doctor, who was a physician to the royal family, was attending a sister of his wife, and in that relation obtained information relative to the disease or disability of his patient which he afterwards revealed (inadvertently, perhaps) to his wife, by whom it was communicated to other persons. The husband of the lady aggrieved brought suit against the doctor, and after a long litigation judgment was rendered against him and he was compelled to pay $40,000 for his indiscretion. In that case the doctor simply divulged the information to his wife. It has sometimes been suggested among members of the bar that the introductory words of so many legal documents, "Know all men by these presents," might be amended to read "Know one woman by these presents," because in that case everybody else would be sure to find it out. It is on that theory that a member of the medical profession is not permitted, by the rules of his profession or the unwritten law, which is as unchangeable as that of the Medes and Persians, as he will not be permitted by this statute, to communicate information thus confidentially obtained, even to his wife.

The object of this statute is to protect both the doctor and the patient; and the committee believe that the bill as framed and amended will effectually carry out that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK] asks to have printed with his remarks certain statutes. The Chair hears no objection.

The statutes referred to are as follows:

ARKANSAS.

Confidential communication to physician or surgeon.—No person authorized to practice physic or surgery shall be compelled to disclose any information which he may have acquired from his patient while attending him in his professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe as a physician or do any act for him as a surgeon. (Section 2919, page 758, revised statutes, Arkansas, 1894.)

CALIFORNIA.

A licensed physician or surgeon can not, without the consent of his patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient. (Section 1881, page 621, 4 Code C. P., California.)

COLORADO.

A physician or surgeon duly authorized to practice his profession under the laws of this State shall not, without the consent of his patient, be examined as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient. (General statutes, 1883, page 1062, section 4.)

A physician or surgeon can not, without the consent of his patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient. (Comp. Laws, 1887, section 5313, page 910.)

IDAHO.

A physician or surgeon can not, without the consent of his patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient. (Revised Statutes, Idaho, 1887, page 679, section 5057.)

INDIANA.

Witnesses who are incompetent.—The following persons shall not be competent witnesses:

1. * * *
2. * * *
3. * * *
4. Physicians, as to matters communicated to them as such by patients in the course of their professional business, or advice given in such cases.

IOWA.

No practicing physician or surgeon shall be allowed in giving testimony to disclose any confidential communication properly intrusted to him in his professional capacity, and necessary and proper to enable him to discharge the functions of his office according to the usual course of practice or discipline. (Revised Code, Iowa, 1884, page 800.)

This State, as to confidential communication, etc., is the only one with that provision in it.

KANSAS.

A physician or surgeon concerning any communication made to him by his patient with reference to any physical or supposed physical disease, or any knowledge obtained by a personal examination of any such patient. (Comp. Laws, Kansas, page 645.)

MICHIGAN.

No person authorized to practice physic or surgery shall be allowed to disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending any patient in his professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or to do any act for him as a surgeon. (General Statutes, Michigan, 1882, page 1829, section 7516.)

MINNESOTA.

A regular physician or surgeon can not, without the consent of his patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient. (Statutes, Minnesota, section 5962, page 1541.)

MISSOURI.

Persons incompetent to testify.—Fifth. A physician or surgeon concerning any information which he may have acquired from any patient while attending him in a professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or do any act for him as a surgeon.—(Revised Statutes, Missouri, 1879, page 690.)

MONTANA.

A licensed physician or surgeon can not, without the consent of his patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient. (Montana Codes, 1895, page 679, section 3163.)

NEVADA.

A licensed physician or surgeon shall not, without the consent of his patient, be examined as a witness as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient: Provided, however, In any suit or prosecution against a physician or surgeon for malpractice, if the patient or party suing or prosecuting shall require or give such consent, and any such witness shall give testimony, then such physician or surgeon defendant may call any other physicians or surgeons as witnesses on behalf of the defendant without the consent of such patient or party suing or prosecuting. (General Statutes, Nevada, 1885, page 533, section 3400.)

NEW YORK.

Confidential communication to physician or surgeon.—A person duly authorized to practice physic or surgery shall not be allowed to disclose any information which he acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity. (Section 8, page 1015, Revised Statutes, New York.)

OHIO.

SEC. 5241.—Privileged communications and acts.—The following persons shall not testify in certain respects: 1. An attorney concerning a communication made to him by his client in that relation, or his advice to his client; or a physician concerning a communication made to him by his patient in that relation, or his advice to his patient; but the attorney or physician may testify by express consent of the client or patient, and if the client or patient voluntarily testify, the attorney or physician may be compelled to testify on the same subject.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, an examination of the statutes of the several States will disclose the tendency of legislation in the direction of this bill. We have not sought to go as far in this bill from the common-law doctrine as many of the States. The majority make any and all information derived from the patient privileged, both in civil and criminal proceedings. This bill makes exception in criminal cases and confines it to confidential information. Doubtless it will be but a short time when every State will adopt statutes similar to the one under consideration.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The gentleman assents to the Senate bill as amended?

Mr. HULICK. Oh, yes; it will facilitate the passage of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULICK, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HULICK. I now ask that House bill 2647, corresponding in its provisions to the Senate bill just passed, lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. BABCOCK. I now call up the bill (S. 1659) to amend the laws of the District of Columbia as to married women, to make parents the natural guardians of their minor children, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Has a House bill substantially the same as this been reported and placed on the Calendar?

Mr. BABCOCK. The committee has made a report, but the report is not yet on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, then, the bill could not come up except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BABCOCK. I am instructed by the committee to call up the Senate bill this morning and request its passage.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the bill has been favorably reported to the House, in which case it will be in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the property, real and personal, which any woman in the District of Columbia may own at the time of her marriage, and the rents, issues, profits, or proceeds thereof, and real, personal, or mixed property which shall come to her by descent, devise, purchase, or bequest, or the gift of any person, shall be and remain her sole and separate property, notwithstanding her marriage, and shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband or liable for his debts, except that such property as shall come to her by gift of her husband shall be subject to, and be liable for, the debts of the husband existing at the time of the gift.

SEC. 2. That a married woman, while the marriage relation subsists, may bargain, sell, and convey her real and personal property, and enter into any contract in reference to the same in the same manner, to the same extent, and with like effect as a married man may in relation to his real and personal property, and she may, by a promise in writing, expressly make her separate estate liable for necessaries purchased by her or furnished at her request for the family.

SEC. 3. That any married woman may carry on any trade or business, occupation or profession by herself or jointly with others, and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account, and the earnings of any married woman from her trade, business, profession, occupation, labor, or services shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall invalidate any marriage settlement or contract.

SEC. 5. That the husband shall not be liable for the payment of the wife's antenuptial debts, but she shall be liable to all remedies for the recovery of such debts, to be enforced against her and her separate property as if she were unmarried.

SEC. 6. That the father and mother shall be the natural guardians of the person of their minor children. If either dies or is incapable of acting, the natural guardianship of the person shall devolve upon the other: Provided, however, That in case of the death of either parent from whom the said children may inherit, or take by devise or bequest, the said parent may, by deed or last will and testament, appoint a guardian of the property of the children, subject to the approval of the proper court of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That the survivor may by last will appoint a guardian of the person and property of any of the children, whether born at the time of making the will or afterwards, to continue during the minority of the child, or for a less time, subject at all times to removal for cause and appointment of another by the proper court.

SEC. 8. That dower shall hereafter be assigned to a widow entitled to the same in the equitable as well as the legal estate of her deceased husband.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question for information. It occurs to me from the reading of it that some mistake has been made in preparing the bill. You speak of the estate of married women and provide, as most of the State laws do, that she shall have power to dispose of the same; that it shall be and remain her sole and separate property, notwithstanding her marriage, and so on; but you say that a married woman may bargain or sell and convey real or personal property or make contracts "while the marriage relation subsists." Now, if, for instance, a woman be divorced on account of the fault of the husband, on statutory grounds, although she be the owner of property, under this provision it might be construed that she would have no right, the marriage relations no longer existing, to enter into contracts to sell property or to convey any kind of estate.

Mr. BABCOCK. Does the gentleman desire the information for his own use or for the benefit of the House?

Mr. FISCHER. Well, let us have it for the benefit of the House. Probably it would help them. I would like to get the information anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. BABCOCK. I will state in reference to the bill under consideration that the whole object of the bill is to frame a law which will permit the marriage of a woman who is encumbered by debt, and prevent the debt being assumed by the husband.

I would say to the gentleman from New York that unfortunately at this time there are several gentlemen who are anxiously awaiting action by the House on such a bill as this. He may appreciate, therefore, how he would feel himself under such circumstances, as he would not perhaps like to assume an indebtedness of from one hundred to two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. FISCHER. Well, I am speaking for the married women, not for myself. I wish simply to call the attention of the gentleman to the language of section 2, which provides that a married woman, while the marriage relation subsists, may do so and so. Perhaps that means while the marriage relation "exists."

Mr. DOCKERY. No; subsist is the proper word.

Mr. FISCHER. Very well; either way. But while the marriage relation subsists she may bargain, sell, and convey her real and personal property or enter into a contract, and so on. Suppose she owns property and the marriage relation does not subsist, still by a construction which could be given to this bill she would have no right to dispose of any of her property or make title to any real estate.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no; she would not be affected at all.

Mr. POWERS. She can do that at any time if she owns the property—that is, she can make a title to it if she is not married.

Mr. HULICK. Under the common law she would have that right.

Mr. FISCHER. But you are undertaking to confer certain rights now in certain contingencies——

Mr. BABCOCK. If she is an unmarried woman she can dispose of her own property.

Mr. BRUMM. Does not she become a femme sole the moment she is divorced, and then has all the rights pertaining to any woman who is not married and who owns property?

Mr. FISCHER. That would depend upon the character of the divorce. If she is divorced on statutory grounds, then the marriage relations no longer subsist; but suppose that it is a divorce from bed and board—a separation—it might be held that the marriage still subsists, and she would be prohibited from making any disposition of her own estate.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman thinks there would be a difference in her status under the bill between a divorce a vinculo matrimonii and a divorce a mensa et thoro.

Mr. FISCHER. What I want is that in the passage of such a bill she can have the right to dispose of her own estate under either kind of divorce.

Mr. BRUMM. But let me suggest to the gentleman that if she is divorced absolutely she would come under the common law.

Mr. FISCHER. But if she is divorced from bed and board the marriage relation would still subsist.

Mr. BRUMM. Divorces for adultery or on statutory grounds are always absolute.

Mr. FISCHER. Certainly; but there are other characters of divorce where the marriage relation might be held still a subsisting relation.

Mr. BRUMM. The bill covers that case, the gentleman will find, just as well as the other.

Mr. FISCHER. I am only suggesting that there is some ambiguity about the language. I am not particularly anxious one way or the other.

Mr. POWERS. Does this bill provide a remedy for the wife with reference to her separate estate? Does it enable her, in other words, to keep her estate in her own name?

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir; in relation to her own property she has that right. This bill was intended largely to meet the very suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. The bill is in the right direction.

Mr. HULICK. It agrees with the laws of the States as a rule with reference to the separate property of married women.

Mr. POWERS. Does it provide that she may sue at law, or must she go into equity?

Mr. HULICK. Section 3 provides—

That any married woman may carry on any trade or business, occupation or profession by herself, or jointly with others, and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account, and the earnings of any married woman from her trade, business, profession, occupation, labor, or services shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name.

Mr. POWERS. What will she do in the event some one undertakes to violate her right of property? Does she have the right of action? I do not notice any remedy provided in the bill for the married woman. She certainly should have the same right to sue at law and equity as if she were a femme sole. That is the legislation in most of the States with reference to the property of married women, as far as I know.

Mr. HULICK. That would seem to follow more by implication than by express provision in the statute.

Mr. POWERS. Now, that being so, I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that the only way in which a married woman can sue on general principles, in the absence of legislation, is in a court of equity; and that is on the ground that the court of equity, long before there was any legislation on the subject, worked out an equitable right for a woman to her own separate estate. It seems to me that this bill should provide that in case the property of a married woman is imperiled she shall have the same right of action at law that she would have if she were femme sole. I suggest to the gentleman that some such amendment should be offered.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a good deal of force in the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont. While this bill gives to a married woman the property, real and personal, which she owns at the time of her marriage, and the rents and profits of it, and property which may come to her by purchase, descent, or bequest, and it remains her sole and separate property, not subject to the disposal of her husband, etc., yet I do not see any express provision in regard to her right to sue and be sued in the courts of the District in relation to her property. That provision generally follows the statutes that have been enacted in that respect which take the place of the common-law provisions. This gives her the right to control all these interests, and makes them her sole and separate property, but it falls short of what it ought to attain, because there is no provision by which she can sue and be sued as if she were femme sole.

Mr. POWERS. She should have the same authority exactly, and I suggest to the gentleman that it would be well to lay this bill aside and perfect it in the way which has been suggested.

Mr. HULICK. This is a bill which comes from the Senate. It has not been submitted to our committee. I think it ought to be referred to the committee for just such an amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Vermont. I had not read the bill before until he asked the question.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill until an amendment can be perfected covering this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws the bill.

HARBOR REGULATIONS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8532) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any owner or occupant of any wharf or dock, any master or captain of any vessel, or any person or persons to cast, throw, drop, or deposit any ballast, dirt, oyster shells, or ashes in the water in any part of the Potomac River or its tributaries in the District of Columbia, or on the shores of said river below high-water mark, unless for the purpose of making a wharf, after permission has been obtained from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for that purpose, which wharf shall be sufficiently inclosed and secured so as to prevent injury to navigation.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any owner or occupant of any wharf or dock, any captain or master of any vessel, or any other person or persons to cast, throw, deposit, or drop in any dock or in the waters of the Potomac River or its tributaries in the District of Columbia any dead fish, fish offal, dead animals of any kind, condemned oysters in the shell, watermelons, cantaloupes, vegetables, fruits, shavings, hay, straw, ice, snow, filth, or trash of any kind whatsoever.

SEC. 3. That any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in the police court of the District of Columbia shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to interfere with the work of improvement in or along the said river and harbor, under the supervision of the United States Government.

SEC. 5. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SIDEWALKS, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7469) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the owner or tenant of each house or other building or lot or lots of ground in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and in such other part or parts of the District of Columbia as the Commissioners of said District shall from time to time designate, shall, within the first four hours of daylight after every fall of snow, cause the same to be removed entirely from off the paved sidewalks opposite each house, building, lot, or land under the penalty of $1 for each lot for every such neglect, to be paid by the said owner or tenant; and such owner or tenant shall, under a like penalty, within five days after a notice to do so by the Commissioners, clean off and remove, or cause to be cleaned off and removed, all dirt, sand, gravel, or other refuse matter that may fall or be washed upon any paved sidewalk, roadway, or alley inside the cities of Washington and Georgetown and in such other part or parts of the District of Columbia as the Commissioners of said District shall from time to time designate.

SEC. 2. That in case the sidewalks are covered with ice the owner or tenant of any building, lot, or lots of ground in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and in such other part or parts of the District of Columbia as the Commissioners of the said District shall from time to time designate, shall promptly cause the paved sidewalks or paved portions of the sidewalk opposite his, her, or their premises to be strewn with ashes, sand, sawdust, or some other suitable substance that will insure or contribute to the safety of pedestrians, under the penalty of $1 for each lot for every neglect, to be paid by the said owner or tenant.

SEC. 3. That in case the owner or tenant of any house, lot, building, or land shall neglect to comply with any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this act it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to cause the removal of snow and ice, or any dirt, sand, or gravel from all paved sidewalks and alleys in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and in such other part or parts of the District of Columbia as the Commissioners of said District shall from time to time designate, wherever there has been a failure on the part of the owner or tenant as aforesaid to remove the same; and the cost of such removal, by order and under the direction of the said Commissioners, shall be assessed as a tax against the property to which the sidewalks in question belong, for the purposes of this act, and the said tax so assessed shall be carried to the regular tax roll of the District aforesaid, and shall be collected in the manner provided for the collection of other taxes.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, immediately after every fall of snow on the cross walks or in the gutters, forthwith to cause the same to be removed from the said cross walks to a width of 10 feet and from out of the said gutters to a breadth of 1 foot, in the said cities, respectively, and in such other part or parts of the District of Columbia as the Commissioners of said District shall from time to time designate; and the said cross walks and gutters shall be kept clean and free from obstructions, and in case the cross walks are covered with ice it shall be their duty to cause such cross walks to be liberally sprinkled with sand or sawdust, or such other material as will insure safety to pedestrians.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Iowa) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7469) entitled "A bill for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment.

The following letter from the District Commissioners will sufficiently explain the purpose of the bill:

"OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"Washington, February 26, 1896.

"DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to recommend that 'An act for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes,' approved March 2, 1895 (U. S. Stat. L., volume 28, page 809), be amended so that the title and the first, second, third, and fourth sections shall read as follows:

[Here follow the sections as set forth in the bill above.]

"This proposed amendment would embody three modifications of the present law:

"First. To provide for the removal of dirt, sand, gravel, and other refuse from the roadways as well as from the sidewalks, etc.

"Second. To extend the scope of the law, which now applies to the city of Washington only, to such other part or parts of the District of Columbia as the Commissioners of the said District shall from time to time designate, where the conditions are such as to render it necessary.

"Third. To correct an inadvertence in the third section of the original law, by providing that the assessment therein mentioned shall be carried on the regular tax roll of the District of Columbia, instead of 'the cities,' as now mentioned in said section.

"The reason for adding the word 'roadways' is that sand, gravel, and other refuse is washed from property the grade of which is higher than that of the contiguous street upon the roadway of the street, particularly on streets where there are no sidewalks. The cost of removing these accumulations from roadways is now a charge upon the street-cleaning department. There is no good reason why such material should not be removed at the expense of the owners of the abutting property, as the accumulation is due to their failure to grade the property down, or to provide means to prevent the washing or falling of material therefrom upon the roadway.

"A draft of the amendment suggested is inclosed, with request for its introduction in the Senate.

"Very respectfully, "JOHN W. ROSS,
"President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

"Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
"Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LOTS 13 AND 14, SQUARE 959, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present for the consideration of the House the bill (H. R. 4356) to confirm title to lots 13 and 14, in square 959, in Washington, D. C.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest, whether legal or equitable, of the United States of America in and to all those lots or parcels of ground situate in the city of Washington, D. C., and known on the ground plan of city as lots numbered 13 and 14, in square numbered 959, be, and the same hereby is, released and quitclaimed to Thomas Yates, the present owner of the equitable title to said lots, and to his heirs and assigns forever.

This act shall have the effect only of a quitclaim of all the right, title, and interest of the United States therein, but shall not affect an adverse title to said land, if any, nor create any liability on the part of the United States.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I should like some explanation of this bill.

Mr. HULICK. I call for the reading of the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. During the reading,

Mr. HULICK said: Mr. Speaker, this is an adverse report upon this bill. The report was made quite full, so that there would be a record against the claimants and any other person or persons who might set up claim to this property. As the report is quite long, I suggest that it be printed in the RECORD, and that the reading of it be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. HULICK) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4356) to confirm title to lots 13 and 14 in square 959, in Washington, D. C., have given full consideration thereto, and fully concur in the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States and the United States attorney for the District of Columbia that in the division made between the original proprietors and the Commissionersthe title to said lots became vested in the United States in fee simple, and that such title is now in the United States, and that Thomas Yates has no title, legal or equitable, in the same.

As a part of this report the letter of the United States attorney for the District of Columbia of March 2 instant is referred to, together with the report of his assistant, therein mentioned, relating to the ownership of said lots. The following is the letter:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2, 1896.

"SIR: In response to your letter of February 20, 1896, transmitting to me a copy of House bill No. 4356, to confirm title to lots 13 and 14, in square 959, in Washington, D. C., and other papers received by you from the committee of the House on the District of Columbia, and instructing me to examine and report upon the condition of the title to said lots, I have the honor to state that Assistant District Attorney Taggart had, by my direction, made such examination, and his report in the premises is respectfully transmitted herewith. I have carefully considered the report of Mr. Taggart, from which it is clear that the title to said lots became vested in the United States in fee simple upon the allotments which took place originally between the proprietors of the lands upon which the city was laid out and the United States authorities. The property has never been disposed of by the United States, and title still remains in them to the property.

"Very respectfully, "A. A. BIRNEY,
"United States Attorney, District of Columbia.

"The ATTORNEY-GENERAL."

The following is the report of the assistant District attorney, which fully discloses the title of said lots:

"Notes of title, as disclosed by the public records, to lots 13 and 14, in square 959.

"Prior to the laying out of the city of Washington, all of the lands which fell within the proposed limits were conveyed by the original owners or proprietors to two trustees, viz, Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, upon certain trusts, and among them that the said lands should be laid out 'for a Federal city, with such streets, squares, parcels, and lots as the President of the United States for the time being shall approve, and that the said Thomas Beall and John M. Gantt, or the survivor of them, or the heirs of such survivor shall convey to the Commissioners for the time being appointed by virtue of an act of Congress entitled "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States," and their successors, for the use of the United States forever, all the said streets and such of the said squares, parcels, and lots as the President shall deem proper for the use of the United States, and that as to the residue of the lots into which the said lands hereby bargained and sold shall have been laid off and divided, that a fair and equal division of them shall be made between the original owner of the land and said Commissioners,' etc.

"In accordance with the trusts so declared the various squares appearing upon the plan of the city were divided between the United States and the proprietors of the land upon which they were respectively located; the division took place by lots, into which the squares were subdivided. In accomplishing divisions and partitions of squares between the public and the proprietors, and for the purposes of perpetuating the evidence of such divisions and partitions, the agreement between them was committed to writing and signed by such proprietors or their representatives and by the Commissioners appointed under the act of Congress referred to in the deeds. These papers were signed in duplicate, one being given to the proprietor and the other being retained by the Commissioners, and recorded in books of the Commissioners' office entitled 'Register of Squares.'

"In suits affecting title to lots in the squares of the city, the allotments made by these instruments are considered to be the foundation of titles beyond which it is not necessary to go in proving record titles.

"George Walker, Notley Young, and the heirs of Abraham Young were the proprietors of adjoining tracts upon a portion of each of which the square 959 was laid out, and the following is a copy, from the public records, of the instrument executed by them in making a partition or disposition of the land in this square under the provisions of the respective deeds executed by them to Beall and Gantt in trust.

"At the request of the Commissioners appointed under the act of Congress for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States, the following square in the city of Washington was recorded the 12th day of January, 1801:

"Bounded on the north by H street north, on the south by G street north, 231 feet 9 inches; on the east by Eleventh street east, on the west by Tenth street east, 280 feet 6 inches.

"As per return dated June 12, 1795.

"THOMAS FREEMAN."

"OCTOBER 20, 1799.

"R. KING.

"The Commissioners and George Walker, Notley Young, and the heirs of Abraham Young, deceased, the original proprietors of this square numbered 959 in the city of Washington, have agreed on the division thereof in manner following, to wit: Lots 1, 2, 15, and 16 are to remain to the said heirs, and lots 7, 8, 9, and 10 are to remain to the said Notley Young, and lots 3, 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, 13, and 14 are subject to be sold agreeably to the deeds of trust concerning lands in said city.

"Witness:
"WM. BRENT."

"Samuel Young, whose name is signed to the foregoing division of the square, was appointed guardian in certain proceedings between the heirs of Abraham Young, by the Maryland high court of chancery, and authorized on behalf of said heirs to represent them in divisions with the Commissioners of the city of the estate that belonged to said Abraham Young.

"Title in fee simple to said lots 13 and 14 thus became vested in the United States, and the public records fail to show that the United States has ever disposed of the same. The public authorities have always treated said lots as the property of the United States. The commissioner of public buildings, who was the successor in office of the original Commissioners under the legislation of Congress, wrote to the Secretary of the Interior, under date of June 17, 1864, in regard to the lots in the city belonging to the public. From this letter the following paragraph is abstracted:

"'I will mention two lots which stand upon the books of this office as clearly the property of the United States, viz, lots 13 and 14 in square No. 959. Mr. William B. Todd has a title to them, as he says, from Notley Young, of fifty years' standing. A large number of lots are, however, unquestionably the property of the United States. I respectfully recommend that those to which there is no claim by adverse title be advertised and sold at public auction. There is now much paving and other work necessary to be done about the city, to which, by law, the avails of the city lots is applicable, and it will be better to dispose of these lots now, when real property is in demand, than to let them lie idle to be squat upon, and the United States eventually lose them or grant them to individuals for a song, as has already been done in some instances.'

"In a report by Colonel Casey, Corps of Engineers, to General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated June 30, 1878, in regard to the public grounds of the city, he says, among other things:

"'The title of the United States to lots 13 and 14, square 959, was established, and these lots were graded and filled to the level of the sidewalk, removing a stagnant pool of water of great injury to the people living in its vicinity.'

"The filling referred to by Colonel Casey, it would seem from certain papers on file in the office of the Chief of Engineers, was done after a report had been received from Mr. Wells, then United States attorney for the District, dated April 24, 1878, declaring the titles of the lots to be in the United States.

"Through some inadvertence or error on the part of the tax officials of the former corporation of the city of Washington, these lots 13 and 14 were entered in 1824 on the tax books in the name of Nicholas Young et al., who had no title to them or interest in them. Since that time the following deeds of conveyance of the property have been recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District:

"Notley Young et al. (described as heirs at law and legatees of Nicholas Young) to William B. Todd. Deed dated November 3, 1851, and recorded June 4, 1852; Liber J. A. S., 39, folio 171. In consideration of $450 grantors convey lots 13 and 14, in square 959, together with many other lots in various squares.

"Edward W. Young et ux. to William B. Todd. Deed dated November 6, 1871; recorded November 8, 1871; Liber 666; folio 93. Confirms the above deed; grantors having been minors at the time of its execution and having since become of full age.

"Edward W. Young et ux. to William B. Todd. Deed dated November 6, 1871; recorded September 14, 1874; Liber 760, folio 271. This is a rerecord of the preceding deed.

"The heirs of Nicholas Young by three several deeds, two of them dated July 9, 1853, and the other dated November 5, 1853, and recorded, respectively, in J. A. S. 71, at folios 306, 402, and 404, convey certain real estate to George W. Young; George W. Young and wife conveyed it to John Carroll Brent, by deed dated November 8, 1856, and recorded in Liber J. A. S., 24, folio 222; Etta Brent, as only child and heir at law of John Carroll Brent, conveyed it to Mary D. Denman by a quitclaim deed dated December 1, 1877, and recorded in Liber 875, at folio 208; but these several deeds have no specific relation to said lots 13 and 14 in said square 599.

"Elizabeth G. Todd et al., widow and heirs at law of William B. Todd, to James L. H. Robinson. Deed dated May 13, 1892; recorded May 24, 1892; Liber 1690, at folio 330. In consideration of $10, grantors convey lots 13 and 14 in square 959.

"James L. H. Robinson et ux. to Frank L. Calhoun and John E. Benton. Deed of trust dated May 19, 1892; recorded May 24, 1892; Liber 1690, at folio 333. Grantors convey said lots in trust to secure William Mayse in $1,200, in four notes of $300 each, payable in six months, with interest, with power to sell in case of default in the payment of said notes.

"Under this deed of trust the property was sold and conveyed to William Mayse by a deed which is hereinafter noted. By this sale and conveyance the following deeds became inoperative:

"James L. H. Robinson et ux. to Rufus A. Morrison. Deed dated May 24, 1892; recorded May 24, 1892; Liber 1690, at folio 330. Grantors, in consideration of $10, convey said lots 13 and 14.

"Rufus A. Morrison to Agnes Robinson. Deed dated November 1, 1892; recorded January 27, 1893; Liber 1774, at folio 246. Grantor, in consideration of $10, conveys the same property.

"Agnes Robinson to Jay B. Smith and Rufus A. Morrison. Deed of trust, dated January 30, 1893; recorded January 27, 1893; Liber 1774, at folio 248. Conveys said lots 13 and 14 in trust to secure Tracy L. Jeffords $250; note payable with interest on or before one year after date, with authority to sell in case of default.

"Agnes Robinson to Susan A. Ruffin. Deed dated January 30, 1893; recorded February 9, 1893; Liber 1783, folio 115. In consideration of $11,000, conveys said lots 13 and 14.

"Susan A. Ruffin et vir. to Edward Q. Gunson. Deed dated February 7, 1893; recorded March 17, 1893; Liber 1804, folio 13. In consideration of $11,245.57, grantors convey said lots 13 and 14.

"Edward Q. Gunson et ux. to George W. Stickney and Robert R. Roberts. Deed of trust; dated February 7, 1893; recorded March 7, 1893; Liber 1804, folio 15. To secure debt of $7,493.23 to Susan A. Ruffin in five notes, one for $250, payable in one year with interest; one for $4,000, payable in two years with interest; one for $1,500, payable in two years with interest; one for $1,200, payable in two years with interest; and one for $443.23, payable in two years with interest, conveys said lots 13 and 14 in square 959. The deed provides that Gunson, his heirs or assigns, may subdivide the lots 13 and 14 into six or seven sublots, and to have this trust released and a new trust placed upon the property as subdivided, the indebtedness to be pro rata, etc.

"Frank L. Calhoun and John E. Benton, trustees, to William Mayse. Deed dated June 27, 1893; recorded July 7, 1893; Liber 1828, at folio 302. Conveys said lots 13 and 14, reciting the trust from James L. H. Robinson to grantors, dated May 19, 1892, and recorded in Liber 1690, at folio 333; that default was made in the payment of the debt mentioned in that instrument, and that the property had been sold to the grantee at public auction for $1,275.

"William Mayse et ux. to Thomas Yates. Deed dated July 27, 1893; recorded July 24, 1893; Liber 1815, at folio 434. In consideration of $1,300, grantors convey said lots 13 and 14.

"Thomas Yates et ux. to Charles F. Benjamin, trustee. Deed in trust dated May 10, 1895; recorded May 20, 1895; Liber 1997, at folio 457. Grantee is to hold the property by the terms of the deed, and to convey the same as grantor, his heirs, or assigns may direct, after grantee is paid for all expenses incurred in clearing the title from defects 'caused by their apparent conveyance to the United States at the time of the division of lots in said square,' etc.

"Thomas Yates to Frederick T. F. Johnson. Agreement dated December 14, 1894; recorded December 11, 1895; Liber 2067, at folio 421. Recites that Yates is the owner of lots 13 and 14 in square 959, subject to such title as may be outstanding in the United States, which outstanding title said Yates desires to secure and obtain, to which end he is desirous of securing and retaining the assistance and professional services of said Johnson, etc. Said Yates agrees to pay for such services and assistance a fee equal to 35 per cent of the market value of the property at the date when the title of the United States becomes vested in said Yates.

"The foregoing comprises all the information which I have been able to obtain from the public records bearing upon the title to said lots 13 and 14, in square 959. It establishes the fact conclusively that the fee-simple title to said lots is in the United States. Even if actual possession had been taken of the lots by the heirs of Nicholas Young, who was one of the sons of Notley Young, the original proprietor of the land, and that possession had been continuous on the part of every person mentioned in the chain and deriving title from said heirs, such possession could not avail against the United States, against whom the statute of limitations does not operate. The fact disclosed that the lot was filled by the public authorities in 1878 would indicate that down to that time there had certainly been no such possession.

"HUGH T. TAGGART,

"A. A. BIRNEY, Esq.,
"United States District Attorney."

This report was submitted to the Attorney-General of the United States, and on the 3d of March last he submitted his opinion thereon in the following letter:

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., March 3, 1896.

"SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a copy of House bill No. 4356, to confirm title to lots 13 and 14, in square No. 959, in Washington, D. C., which was referred to me by your directions on the 1st ultimo, and also to transmit herewith, for your information, a copy of a letter received from the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, dated the 2d instant, together with the report of his assistant (Mr. Taggart) therein mentioned, both of which relate to the ownership of said lots, and exhibit the result of investigations concerning such ownership made pursuant to instructions of this Department.

"The aforesaid report gives a full history of the title to said lots, as shown by the records of the District of Columbia; and upon consideration thereof I concur in the opinion expressed by the United States attorney in his letter, namely, that in the division made between the original proprietors and the Commissioners on the 29th of October, 1801 (which is set forth in said report), the title to said lots became vested in the United States in fee simple, and that such title is still in the United States.

"I am, sir, very respectfully,
"JUDSON HARMON,
"Attorney-General.

"Hon. JOSEPH W. BABCOCK,
"Chairman of Committee on the District of Columbia,
"House of Representatives."

Upon a full and fair consideration of the facts stated in said report, the conclusion is irresistible that the title, legal and equitable, to said lots was, on the 29th day of October, 1801, in the division made between the original proprietors and the Commissioners, vested in the United States in fee simple, and that such title is now in the United States.

The committee therefore report adversely to said bill, and recommend that it do lie upon the table.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

LOT 5, IN SQUARE 1113, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6172) authorizing the sale of the title of the United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant and convey unto Frank D. Orme, of the city of Washington, and his heirs and assigns, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain lot of land in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, known upon the plat or plan of said city as lot No. 5, in square 1113, upon the payment by the said Frank D. Orme into the Treasury of the United States of the sum of $1,000, the assessed value of the said lot.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommended the following amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the words:

"Provided, That before the said conveyance is made the said Frank D. Orme shall satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that all taxes and assessments against such lot have been paid."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report on this bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. This report is quite long, and if desired I can explain the nature of the bill. I ask that the report be printed. It fully sets forth the reasons for the passage of the bill. It is not necessary to consume the time of the House in reading it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the report on this bill be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Iowa) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6172) entitled "A bill authorizing the sale of the title of the United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with an amendment as follows:

Add after the last word in section 1:

"Provided, That before the said conveyance is made the said Frank D. Orme shall satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that all taxes and assessments against such lot have been paid."

The reasons for the passage of the bill are very clearly set forth in the Senate report on Senate bill 2083, which is a duplicate of House bill 6172, which report is adopted as the report of your committee.

[Senate Report No. 795, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The bill was sent to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and at their instance was referred to the Attorney-General, who reports that the title to the lot in question is in the United States. The report of Hon. Hugh T. Taggart, assistant United States district attorney, which is given in connection with this report, shows that the Government holds this lot not as the sovereign, but as a landowner, as any individual might own land, such ownership coming from the division of the lots in the city of Washington between the Government and private individuals. The Government attempted to sell this particular lot, with others, to private parties, but through failure of the individuals concerned in the transaction the courts ordered the lots restored to the United States. However, the property had been repeatedly assessed as belonging to individuals, and in 1841 was conveyed by the corporation of the city of Washington to James McCormick, jr., from whom the chain of title is complete to Frank D. Orme, to whom the lot was conveyed July 1, 1893. Such conveyance was confirmed by a decree of the equity court on December 11, 1894.

Mr. Taggart, in summing up, says: "Limitations, of course, do not run against the United States, but assuming that there has been such an actual adverse possession of the lot by Frank D. Orme and those under whom he claims as would bar a private individual, a court might decide, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, that it was one in which to enforce it against the Government. Under the peculiar circumstances, I am of the opinion that the case presented is a proper one to compromise by the relinquishment of the Government's title for a suitable consideration."

The assessed valuation of the lot is $1,000, but it already has cost Mr. Orme many times that amount, and the equities of the case are entirely with him. In the opinion of the committee, therefore, the Secretary of the Interior should be authorized and directed to grant and convey to him all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the said lot on the payment by him of $1,000.

The committee recommend, however, that the bill be amended by providing that Mr. Orme shall first satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that the taxes on the lot have been paid up to the time of the conveyance provided for.

The reports of the Commissioners, of the Attorney-General, and of the district attorney and assistant district attorney are given below. The report of Mr. Taggart is of decided historical value, as well as being a strong presentation of a class of questions constantly arising in Congress—the title to lots in the District of Columbia claimed by individuals, but by error retained by the Government.

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 26, 1896.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners have the honor to suggest, with reference to Senate bill 2083, authorizing the sale of the title of the United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington, which was transmitted to them at your instance for their examination and report, that inasmuch as the matters mentioned therein concern the right, title, and interest of the United States in the property involved, the subject more directly pertains to the purview of the Department of Justice. They therefore recommend that the bill be submitted to the Attorney-General of the United States with the object of obtaining a report thereon by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, who is the official upon whom the making of such investigations customarily devolves.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. ROSS,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Senator JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., April 11, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a copy of Senate bill No. 2083, authorizing sale of the title of the United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington, which was referred to me by your direction on the 29th of February last, and also to transmit herewith for your information a copy of a letter received from the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, dated the 9th instant, together with a copy of the report of his assistant (Mr. Taggart) therein mentioned, both of which relate to the ownership of said lot and exhibit the result of investigations concerning such ownership made pursuant to instructions of this Department. The report gives a history of the title to the lot as shown by the records of the District of Columbia, and from the information thus furnished I am of opinion that the United States has a good and valid title to the premises.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

JUDSON HARMON,
Attorney-General.

Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman of Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to state that, in accordance with the directions contained in your letter to me of the 3d ultimo, I have made an investigation with a view to ascertaining "the right, title, and interest" of the Government in and to lot 5, in square 1113, being the lot referred to in Senate bill No. 2083, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.

The condition of the title to the lot is shown in a report made to me by Assistant District Attorney Taggart, which is inclosed herewith. From this report it appears that the legal title to the lot passed from the Government to James Greenleaf by a certificate granted to him under date of July 10, 1794, and which was duly recorded among the land records, and that it remained outstanding in Greenleaf and his assignees until restored to the United States by a decree of court passed in the year 1831; that immediately it was listed for taxation, for the nonpayment of which it was sold and a tax deed issued.

The only title of Mr. Orme is traceable to this tax deed, and the question presented is whether in the event of a suit an adverse possession under it could, the circumstances considered, be successfully set up as a bar against the United States. I have carefully considered the views expressed by Mr. Taggart, and concur in his opinion that the conflicting claims of the Government and of Mr. Orme in the premises make the case a proper one for adjustment through compromise, and that the interest of the United States should be relinquished upon the payment of a suitable sum.

The condition of the title to this lot is substantially the same as that of the title to lot 1 in the same square, in respect of which I recently made a like recommendation.

Two papers transmitted to me with your letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

A. A. BIRNEY,
United States Attorney, District of Columbia.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Notes of title as disclosed by the public records to lot 5 in square 1113.

Through agreements with the original proprietors of the land and conveyances by them to two trustees, Thomas Beall and John M. Gantt, the United States became entitled, upon the founding of the city of Washington, to one-half of all the building lots in the squares laid out within the limits of the city.

The partition of lots in any square between the United States Commissioners, appointed under the act of July, 1790 (providing for the establishment of the permanent seat of the Government), and the original proprietors of the land upon which the square was laid out was usually accomplished by arrangement between the parties; prior to such partition the land in any square was held by the public and the individual in equally undivided parts. By the partition each took in severalty the lots assigned to them respectively. In some instances the whole square would be assigned to one or the other, and the title to a particular square or lot is traced to the United States or to an individual, as it went to the one or the other on the partition.

In the partition of square 1113 the whole of it became the property of the United States.

The following is a copy of the instrument in relation to it, which was signed by the parties and recorded:

"At the request of the Commissioners appointed under the act of Congress for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States, the following square in the city of Washington was recorded the 27th day of May, 1800:

"SQUARE NO. 1113, CITY OF WASHINGTON.

"Bounded by the south by D street south, 413 feet 4 inches; the east by Nineteenth street east, 39 feet 6 inches; the west by Eighteenth street east, 254 feet 6 inches; the northeast by Massachusetts avenue, 464 feet 7 inches.

"As per return dated November, 1793.

"JAMES R. DERMOTT."

MAY 27, 1797.

The Commissioners and heirs of William Young, deceased, original proprietors of this square, numbered 1113, in the city of Washington, have agreed the whole of the said square shall be subject to be sold agreeably to the deeds of trust concerning lands in the said city. Witness our hands this 28th day of September, 1797.

ABEL JENNER,
WILLIAM YOUNG,
Heirs of William Young.

The records of the early Commissioners of the city and those in the office of the recorder of deeds show that on September 23, 1793, said Commissioners entered into an agreement with James Greenleaf for the sale to him of 3,000 of the lots belonging to the United States, and that they also agreed with Robert Morris for the sale to him of 3,000 of said lots. These agreements were consolidated by one of December 24, 1793, making a sale to said Greenleaf and Morris, jointly, of 6,000 lots upon certain terms: 4,500 of the lots were to lie southwest of Massachusetts avenue and the remaining 1,500 to lie northeast of said avenue, etc. The lots were to be selected from those belonging to the public, and they were excluded from making selections in certain squares mentioned, square 1113 not being among them.

On July 9, 1794, the Commissioners entered into an agreement with said Greenleaf, which recited that Greenleaf was negotiating a loan in Holland of £300,000 current money of Maryland, to be secured by a mortgage on lots in the city; that the Commissioners desired to increase their funds, and had agreed to take one-third of the loan, and had given Greenleaf a certificate for 1,000 lots to make up their one-third of the security by which the legal title would be put in Greenleaf for that purpose. The agreement also recited that certificates had been given to Greenleaf for other lots, for which the Commissioners had taken the bond of said Greenleaf and John Nicholson; and the agreement provided for a redemption and reconveyance to the Commissioners of the lots to be pledged as their part of the security for the loan, etc.

By one of the certificates from the Commissioners to said Greenleaf, dated July 9, 1794, and recorded in Liber B, at folio 44, of the land records, the title to 500 lots is transferred in fee, the lots in square 1113 being among them.

Greenleaf, with a view to obtaining the loan, conveyed to Rutger Van Schimmelpfennick, Peter Godefroy, and Robert Daniel Crommelin, of Amsterdam, in the United Netherlands, by deed dated July 28, 1794, (B, folio 65), a great number of lots and squares, and among them square 1113.

The negotiation fell through and the grantees reconveyed the property to Greenleaf by deed dated June 26, 1795. (B, folio 493.)

He then apparently negotiated the loan with the house of Gilles Groenveldt, Rudolph Mees, and Peter van der Wallen van der Hoven, of Amsterdam, and conveyed to them by deed dated July 29, 1795 (B, folio 496), a great number of lots and squares, including square 1113.

By deed dated May 13, 1796 (B, folio 532), Greenleaf conveyed all the lots to which he derived title by the certificate of July 9, 1794 (B, folio 44), to Robert Morris and John Nicholson as tenants in common.

Greenleaf, Morris, and Nicholson were engaged in large speculations in property in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all became bankrupt and made assignments for the payment of debts. Their business relations with the Commissioners were the cause of great embarrassments to the latter, and it would serve no useful purpose here to detail the complex and intricate history of them.

Greenleaf, Morris, and Nicholson conveyed to Henry Pratt and others their lots in Washington, in trust to secure payment of their debts, by deed dated June 26, 1797 (C, folio 204); Notley Maddox, sheriff of Prince George County, Md., conveyed to William H. Dorsey square 1113 and other squares which he had sold under executions issued on judgments against Greenleaf, by deed dated January 31, 1799 (D, folio 298), and Dorsey conveyed the same to said Henry Pratt et al. by deed dated January 26, 1803 (I, folio 263), to hold upon the trusts in the deed to them from Greenleaf et al. of June 26, 1797, and reciting that the purchase money had been paid by said Pratt et al., and that he (said Dorsey) simply held in trust for them.

Gillis Groenveldt et al. filed in the old circuit court of the District of Columbia their bill in equity January 17, 1803, against James Greenleaf, Henry Pratt, et al., and Thomas Monroe, the superintendent of the city of Washington (who had succeeded to the powers of the Commissioners under the act of Congress), setting forth the deed to them from Greenleaf, that a large part of their debt was unpaid, and praying for a foreclosure of the mortgage.

By the decree passed in this cause March 21, 1831, the parties were directed to convey to the United States, among other property, the square 1113, and it was provided that if such conveyance was not made within the time limited, then the decree should stand as such.

In one of the books of the early Commissioners the six lots in this square are marked as "selected by Morris and Nicholson." The certificate given by the Commissioners to Greenleaf July 9, 1794 (B, folio 44), recites that the 500 lots transferred had been paid for by Greenleaf, and that he was entitled to hold them in fee simple.

Whether the title of Greenleaf was originally a perfect one to the lots in the square or not, the fee simple as against him and his grantees and the trustees under his assignment for the benefit of creditors, and as against the Groenveldt mortgage, became by the decree of 1831 vested in the United States.

The papers and books relating to city affairs, sales of lots, etc., are now in charge of Col. John M. Wilson, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and I am informed at his office that there is nothing there indicating that the United States has ever disposed of its interest in lot 5 in this square. The land records of the recorder's office contain nothing to indicate it. It may, therefore, be safely assumed that the title of the United States is a good one in fee simple to said lot 5 in square 1113, subject only to such rights as may have been acquired under deeds issued by the late corporate authorities of the city of Washington in pursuance of sales for delinquent taxes, under which arise and upon which are predicated the rights of the present claimants of the lot.

It is a general principle that the property of the sovereign is not subject to taxation or its incidents, unless authority is specifically granted for that purpose to subordinate agencies, in the matter of municipal rule. It is also clear as matter of law that in many instances where the Government steps down from the high pedestal of sovereignty and becomes a property owner after the manner of an individual, its ownership of property not necessary for the purpose of government is to be treated in the same manner as the property of an individual would be under like circumstances. The only question, therefore, in the present case is whether the facts shown make it a proper one for the application of the rule.

By the certificate from the United States commissioners of July 9, 1794 (B, folio 44), the legal title became vested of record in James Greenleaf; by his conveyance to Gilles Groenveldt et al. it became vested in them; by his deed to Morris and Nicholson his interest passed to them, and by the assignment to Henry Pratt et al. it became vested in them, at least in so far as the equity of redemption was concerned. The property was, under these circumstances, very properly, in my opinion, listed for taxation, and in the year 1803 it was listed in the name of Henry Pratt et al.; in 1819 it was listed for taxation in the name of Gillis Groenveldt et al.

Finally it was sold by the corporation of the city for delinquent taxes assessed upon it as the property of Groenveldt et al. for the years from 1827 to 1835. In pursuance of this sale it was conveyed by the corporation to James McCormick, jr., by deed dated May 12, 1841, and recorded April 21, 1841, in Liber W. B. 93, at folio 149. Tax deeds of that date are all defective by reason of informalities in complying with the law.

By a decree for the partition of James McCormick's real estate among his heirs, dated January 9, 1846, and recorded March 14, 1849, in Liber J. A. S. 3, folio 1, it was assigned to Caroline H. McCormick. The proceedings in which the decree was rendered took place in Baltimore County, Md., and of course ordinarily could not affect property in this jurisdiction. Caroline H. McCormick intermarried apparently with Earle, and by deed dated June 15, 1849, and recorded July 19, 1849, in Liber J. A. S. 5, folio 293, conveyed the lot to William B. Todd.

Todd conveyed to Lampkin by deed dated October 3, 1851. (J. A. S. 31, folio 454.)

Lampkin conveyed to Beall by deed dated August 2, 1858. (J. A. S. 159, folio 225.)

Beall conveyed to Cox by deed dated February 18, 1859. (J. A. S. 170, folio 49.)

Cox reconveyed to Beall June 9, 1859. (J. A. S. 177, folio 372.)

Beall conveyed to Lanahan February 22, 1860. (J. A. S. 190, folio 406.)

Lanahan conveyed to Snowden in trust to secure debt February 23, 1860. (J. A. S. 190, folio 406.)

Snowden sold under the trust and conveyed to Bratt January 11, 1861. (J. A. S. 207, folio 231.)

Bratt conveyed to Mitchell July 27, 1864. (N. C. T. 41, folio 285.)

Mitchell conveyed to William B. Todd July 18, 1864. (N. C. T. 42, folio 72.)

Todd died intestate in the year 1873, and Seth J. Todd, one of his children and heirs at law, died in 1874, leaving by will all his estate to his widow, Georgie D. Todd.

The widow of William B. Todd and his adult heirs, together with Georgie D. Todd, devisee of Seth J. Todd, conveyed said lot 5, square 1113, to Thomas H. G. Todd November 24, 1874 (777, folio 1).

Thomas H. G. Todd conveyed to Walker April 25, 1892 (1676, folio 326).

Walker conveyed to William Mayse July 23, 1892. (1696, folio 456).

William Mayse and wife conveyed to Calhoun and Benton in trust, to secure Frank D. Orme in an indebtedness of $3,500, July 1, 1893 (1832, folio 246).

Frank D. Orme, on September 29, 1894, filed his bill in equity against Calhoun and Benton, the trustees, and Mayse, the grantor in and the debtor under the deed of trust. The bill alleges the insolvency of Mayse, his failure to keep property insured and to pay taxes, etc., and prays for a foreclosure of the trust. On December 11, 1894, the decree was passed by the court providing, among other things, for a sale of the property and appointing Edwards and Hood trustees to make such sale. They reported sale to Frank D. Orme, which was duly ratified and confirmed.

The trustees, Edwards and Hood, conveyed to Frank D. Orme by deed dated August 28, 1895 (2089, folio 425).

Limitations, of course, do not run against the United States, but assuming that there has been such an actual adverse possession of the lot by Frank D. Orme, and those under whom he claims, as would bar a private individual, a court might decide, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, that it was one in which to enforce it against the Government.

Under the peculiar circumstances, I am of the opinion that the case presented is a proper one to compromise by the relinquishment of the Government's title for a suitable consideration.

HUGH T. TAGGART,
Assistant United States Attorney.

A. A. BIRNEY, Esq.,
United States Attorney, District of Columbia.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 167) authorizing foreign exhibitors at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition, to be held in Nashville, Tenn., in 1897, to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits, and allowing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition to be imported free of duty under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 6349) "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes."

Mr. BABCOCK. Does the gentleman desire action on this bill now?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do, Mr. Speaker. It is not a final report, however. We ask for a further conference. This report does not reach a conclusion so far as such matters as sectarian schools and the Old Settlers' claims or some other matters about which I think there might be some controversy are concerned. I think there is nothing in this report that would create any difference of opinion upon the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask the gentleman, if it should provoke such controversy, would he withdraw its consideration?

Mr. SHERMAN. In that event I have no objection to allowing it to be printed and let it come up to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make that request in order that we may go on with our business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am entirely satisfied for it to take that course.

Mr. CANNON. Is there much in it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not for the gentleman from Illinois. For him I think there is nothing "in it." [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Let us hear it read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that it be read, and if any gentleman insists on its being printed, I shall not insist on action now.

Mr. HERMANN. Before that is done I would like to ask the gentleman a question, whether he can refer to an item in the bill with reference to the appointment or the creation of a commission for the purpose of settling a boundary dispute with reference to the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon?

Mr. SHERMAN. On the question of that commission my recollection is we have not agreed in conference. We propose generally in such matters not to have a commission, but to leave the questions to be settled by the Indian inspectors through the Secretary.

Mr. HERMANN. I understand, however, that in the report which is now submitted this is among those items not agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is so. There are fifteen or twenty items that we did not agree to, and upon which we ask a further conference, and this is one of them.

Mr. CANNON. This is not a final report, then?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not a final report.

Mr. HERMANN. I made this inquiry to find out whether it was a final report. And I desire to say that the delegation wish to submit to the conferees certain facts in regard to this matter, provided it is not a final report.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not a final report, and we will be glad to have any facts submitted to the committee.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 6, 7, 11, 21, 22, 29, 30, 34, 35, 43, 62, and 90.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 32, 36, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 50, 53, 54, 55, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 65, 72, 73, 74, 75, 79, 80, 81, 82, 88, and 89, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 19, page 29 of the bill, the word "Kickapoos," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Kickapoos in Kansas," and in lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"KICKAPOOS IN OKLAHOMA.

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to assist the Kickapoo Indians of Oklahoma Territory who have not accepted their allotments to make improvements upon said allotments as fast as accepted and to purchase seed grain and subsistence for said Indians, $5,000, to be immediately available. The sum of money now in the Treasury of the United States belonging to said Indians shall be retained as a permanent fund, upon which the Treasurer shall pay to said Indians annually interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1895."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And sections 669, 670, 671, of chapter 27, of Mansfield's Digest of the Laws of Arkansas covering deeds, mortgages, liens, and instruments of writing pertaining to real estate, are hereby extended over and put in force in said Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory. That the allottees of said land within the limits of said Quapaw Agency are authorized to lease the same for a term not exceeding three years for farming purposes, or five years for mining or business purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "Santee," and add at the end of said amendment the following: "and North and South Dakota"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "and charged against any funds belonging to said Lower Brule Indians now in the Treasury of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 12, page 39, of the bill the word "divided" and insert in lieu thereof the word "expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"And not exceeding $1,500 for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of such persons.

"For completing the work of the Puyallup Indian Commission appointed under the act of March 3, 1893, to select and appraise such portions of the allotted lands within the Puyallup Indian Reservation, Wash., as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees; and also that part of the agency tract, exclusive of the burying ground, not needed for school purposes, and for the purpose of defraying the expenses of said Commission, $4,000, to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the agency tract and allotted lands, as provided in said act, to be immediately available; and said Commission shall conclude its work and terminate on or before the 1st day of December, 1896."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate through the Indian inspectors of his Department with the Indians residing on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, and with the Indians residing upon the Uintah Reservation, in the State of Utah, for the surrender of any portion of their respective reservations, or for such modification of existing treaties as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, any agreement thus negotiated being subject to subsequent ratification by Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 3 of said amendment, the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and strike out, in line 42 of said amendment, the words "sufficient proof" and insert in lieu thereof the word "conviction"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: ", and said sum shall be in full payment and satisfaction of all claims of the said Campbell or his representatives for said money and lands and interest therein, and the receipt of said Campbell for said sum shall so specify"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and add at the end of said paragraph the following:

"Provided, however, That any person who in good faith prior to the passage of this act had discovered and opened or located a mine of coal or other mineral shall have a preference right of purchase for ninety days from and after the official filing in the local land office of the approved plat of survey provided for by this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and add at the end of said paragraph the following:

"Provided, however, That any person who in good faith prior to the passage of this act had discovered and opened or located a mine of coal or other mineral shall have a preference right of purchase for ninety days from and after the official filing in the local land office of the approved plat of survey provided for by this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and in line 12 of said paragraph, after the word "opened," insert the words "or located"; and strike out, in the last line of said paragraph, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 33, 37, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 56, 64, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 76, 77, 78, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, and 94 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
GEORGE C. PENDLETON,
Managers on the part of the House.

R. F. PETTIGREW,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BABCOCK (during the reading of the report). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the conference report be dispensed with.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, this is too important a matter to have the reading dispensed with.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not understand that the gentleman in charge of the report desires to dispose of it at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. We desire to dispose of it if we can.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to dispensing with the further reading of the conference report?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the report.

The statement of the conferees on the part of the House was read, as follows:

STATEMENT TO ACCOMPANY CONFERENCE REPORT ON HOUSE BILL 6294.

The following Senate amendments, to which the House conferees have agreed, are purely formal, consisting of changes in phraseology, correction of errors, and the like: Nos. 1, 2, 5, 12, 15, 18, 19, 26, 28, 30, 40, 41, 44, 47, 48, 72, 82, 83, 84, 85, 88, and 89.

The Senate recedes from its amendments, leaving the bill in those particulars as it left the House, as follows: Nos. 3, 4, 6, 7, 11, 21, 22, 29, 30, 34, 35, 43, 62, and 90.

The House recedes from amendments 8 and 9. These amendments relate to the pay of Indian inspectors. The House fixed the salaries at $3,000 each per annum. The Senate replaced them to the figures in the last bill, $2,500.

No. 10 limited the time within which inspectors remaining in Washington under orders from the Secretary of the Interior have their expenses paid to twenty days. There was no time limit as the bill passed the House.

No. 13 strikes out the appropriation for the second payment of the Cherokee Outlet, the Secretary of the Treasury having decided that he was authorized to make the payment with the appropriation and having already made said payment.

No. 14 reads as follows: "To enable the Secretary of the Interior to assist the Kickapoo Indians of Oklahoma Territory who have not accepted their allotments to make improvements upon said allotments as fast as accepted, and to purchase seed grain and subsistence for said Indians, $5,000, to be immediately available. The sum of money now in the Treasury of the United States belonging to said Indians shall be retained as a permanent fund, upon which the Treasurer shall pay to said Indians interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1895."

No. 16 provides "that all deeds and instruments of writing pertaining to real estate within the Quapaw Agency and the town of Miami, in the Indian Territory, shall be recorded at the said town of Miami by the clerk of the United States court in and for the northern district of the Indian Territory, or his duly appointed deputy, in a book or books kept for the purpose; and sections 669, 670, and 671 of chapter 27 of Mansfield's Digest of the Laws of Arkansas, covering deeds, mortgages, liens, and instruments of writing pertaining to real estate, are hereby extended over and put in force in said Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory.

No. 17 authorizes a transfer on the books of the Treasury of a part of the funds of the Sac and Fox tribes in Mississippi to the same tribe in Iowa.

No. 20 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to pay in money instead of kind to the Santee Sioux under treaty.

No. 23 extends to certain Indians not on allotments the same benefits under treaty as though they were.

No. 24 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to pay in money instead of kind to the Sioux and Poncas under treaty.

No. 25 gives the option to Lower Brule Indians to choose new allotments.

No. 27 carries out the provisions of the act of February, 1895, on the subject.

No. 31 provides for the distribution of the amount to the Poncas after paying employees authorized by law.

No. 32 adds the members of the said tribe in South Dakota.

No. 33 provides for setting up and operating machines already owned and on the ground.

No. 39 provides for surveying certain ceded lands in Idaho.

No. 42 provides "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain and determine the amounts due various merchants of Cloquet and Fond du Lac, Minn., from certain Fond du Lac Indians, not exceeding in the aggregate $6,600, for supplies furnished to said Indians, at the request of the Indian farmer, during the years 1888 and 1889, or upon orders approved by the Indian farmer drawn upon and accepted by certain contractors for the purchase of pine timber on lands allotted to or selected by said Indians or claimed by them, and to pay said merchants the amount found due them, or each of them, their proportion of said sum out of any money on hand paid the United States by said contractors, or any of them, in settlement or satisfaction for pine timber cut upon such lands."

No. 45 authorizes the temporary employment of persons of practical experience in irrigation work.

No. 50 provides "That the homestead settlers on all ceded Indian reservations be, and they are hereby, granted an extension of one year in which to make payments as now provided by law."

No. 51 is agreed to with an amendment which strikes out the appropriation and requires that the work be done by the Indian agents.

Nos. 53, 54, and 55 together increase the amount of the appropriation $16,000 and more specifically name the work to be done.

No. 57 provides for the continuance of the survey of the Indian Territory and provides penalties for interference with the work. It is agreed to ask that the appropriation be reduced from $300,000 to $200,000.

No. 58 reads as follows: "In payment, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to certain Chippewa Indian allottees of the Isabella Reservation in Michigan, as their interests may appear, being the sums recovered by the United States as judgments against certain parties for timber depredations committed within said reservation upon lands which have been allotted and patented to individual Indians, and covered into the Treasury of the United States, $1,121.62."

No. 59 provides: "That any adult Peoria or Ottawa Indian, an allottee under any act of Congress, may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, sell and convey to the Miami Town Company, a company chartered under the laws of Kansas, 40 acres of ground near Miami, Ind. T., to be used exclusively for cemetery purposes and no other: Provided, That 40 acres shall not exceed half of his or her allotment.

No. 60 reads as follows: "To reimburse N. J. Cramer, of Yankton, S. Dak., amount paid by him to the United States as stumpage for 400 cords of wood furnished to the Government at Fort Bennett, S. Dak., in 1878, $300."

No. 61 reads as follows: "To pay Josephine Lofland, an Indian woman, formerly assistant matron at the Seneca, Shawnee, and Wyandotte school, her heirs and representatives, such sum as the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain will compensate her for loss sustained by reason of the burning of the school building in which she was employed, not exceeding the sum of $200."

No. 63 provides: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain and pay to Louis Mazawakinyena, Louis De Coteau, and James W. Lynd, of South Dakota, such sum as he shall find justly due them for property lost and destroyed by the Sioux Indians on the Sioux Reservation during the outbreak in 1890. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum of money sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act, not exceeding $550."

No. 65 provides for locating the absentee Wyandotte Indians in accordance with treaty.

No. 67 is agreed to with an amendment to prevent any further claim. A treaty seems to compel this payment.

No. 73 provides for the erection and completion of suitable buildings, including furniture of all kinds for the same, for an industrial boarding school at or near the reservation of the Sac and Fox Indians in Tama County, Iowa, and for the purchase of a suitable site for the same, $35,000.

No. 74 increases the appropriation for the Carlisle School, Carlisle, Pa.

Nos. 79, 80, and 81 increase the appropriation for the Genoa School.

Nos. 91, 92, and 93 are ratifications of treaties.

On amendments 33, 37, 39, 46, 49, 52, 56, 64, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 76, 77, 78, 86, 87, and 94 the conferees did not agree and the House conferees ask a further conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be adopted, and that the conference be continued as to the amendments which have not been agreed upon.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] would state briefly what matters are left unsettled, as well as the most important matters that are settled by this report. He can no doubt state them in much shorter time than would be required for members to ascertain by an examination of the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. As to the matters left unsettled, in the first place the question of sectarian schools is one, and the question of appropriations generally for Indian schools is another. The specific appropriations for particular schools, like that at Carlisle, for instance, have been acted upon, but the question of appropriations for schools generally is left for further conference. The question of the payment of the Cherokee Outlet money is left for further conference, as well as the Old Settlers attorneys' claims, the continuance of the Dawes Commission, and several other matters which are not of general interest. There are some cases where appropriations have been increased, for specific schools, for instance, or for other purposes, which are still left in conference, but I think the question of sectarian schools and the question of the old Cherokee claims and the other matters I have specified are the main matters of general interest that are left unsettled, and in regard to them we ask that the conference be continued.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to move to amend so as to except from the motion of the gentleman from New York to concur the Senate amendments numbered 47 and 48, because I desire to bring the matters involved in those amendments again before the conferees. I do not believe the chairman of the committee will object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are those matters?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The amendments are in relation to negotiations for the purchase of the lands of the Yakima Indians. One of the conferees assured me that the matter had been arranged to the satisfaction of the people interested in the subject.

Mr. DOCKERY. Of course the gentleman understands that a conference report can not be amended. The only thing to be done with such a report is to either approve it or reject it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The House can do it, I suppose, and I desire another opportunity to appear before the conferees in relation to this matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is only one way for the gentleman to attain his object, and that is to have the conference report rejected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suppose the House has the power to reject some part of it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the parliamentary status, a conference report must be accepted or rejected as a whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that there has been an agreement in part as to certain amendments and a disagreement as to others.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the conference report should be agreed to, all the amendments that have been agreed to in conference would, of course, be removed from further consideration, and so far as the conferees have agreed those amendments can not now be amended.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, this places me in a very peculiar position and I feel there is some injustice in it, because one of the conferees informed me that the agreements were in accordance with the terms of the House bill; but now when the report comes in I find that such is not the case.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the same except as to the appropriation, which is stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the only way in which amendments that have been agreed to in conference can be reached again is by a rejection of the conference report.

The question being taken, the conference report was adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted, and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a further conference was ordered.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the House passed the bill H. R. 8495.

Mr. HILL. Was not a motion to reconsider made and laid on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to reconsider has been entered by the gentleman from Kentucky. If the motion to reconsider was made and laid on the table after the passage of the bill, of course another motion to reconsider would not be in order. The Chair will have the Journal examined as to that.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bills H. R. 6713, H. R. 8010, and H. R. 4149.

The motion was agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

EXTENSION OF NORTH CAPITOL STREET, WASHINGTON.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bills indicated by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6713) to extend North Capitol street to the Soldiers' Home.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to open and grade North Capitol street from T street to the Soldiers' Home, and are hereby authorized and directed to condemn, according to chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia for opening highways, such of the lands of the Prospect Hill Cemetery and of Annie E. Barbour as may be necessary for the extension of said street; and the amount of money necessary to pay the judgment of condemnation and the cost of grading is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, but the cost of grading shall not exceed $10,000: Provided, That one-half of said sum shall be charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That this appropriation shall be immediately available.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Iowa) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia have considered the bill (H. R. 6713) to extend North Capitol street to the Soldiers' Home, and report same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Commissioners of the District have not favored the passage of this bill because, as they say, its passage may imperil the passage of a general highway act. They advanced this reason in the Fifty-third Congress, but the committees of the Senate and House did not agree with them, and recommended the passage of the measure, and Congress passed the bill. The committee are of opinion that the opening of this highway will be of great public benefit.

North Capitol is one of the main avenues of the city, leading directly north from the Capitol to the Soldiers' Home, a distance of about 3 miles, and width 130 feet. Beyond the city limits the land was donated in 1889 for a distance of nearly 2,000 feet, and from the Soldiers' Home southward for 2,200 feet, there remaining an intervening space of about 2,000 feet, occupied by the Prospect Hill Cemetery and the Barbour estate, the latter being in litigation; the land through these two properties it is impossible to obtain except by condemnation.

In December, 1893, Congress passed the act hereinbefore mentioned, appropriating the money for this purpose, to be condemned according to laws for highways prior to March 2, 1893 (the date of the general highway act), the intent being to condemn the land under chapter 11 of the United States Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, but the proceedings were had under the Printing Office site law. The jury returned a verdict that was considered excessive by the Commissioners, and they secured legislation in the District of Columbia appropriation bill August 7, 1894, ordering the verdict set aside and new proceedings of condemnation under chapter 11, Revised Statutes. The owners took an appeal and the court of appeals enjoined the Commissioners from proceeding under chapter 11, and also refused a mandamus to compel the District to pay the award under the Printing Office site law; so by reason of the operations of the courts and the District Commissioners the law stands a dead letter to-day, and there is no way to open the street except under the operations of a new law.

The opening of this street will be followed by railroad facilities and result in the rapid improvement of this section, which is now blocked for want of street railroads and other facilities of growth, and will be of general public good. The certain opening of this street is hurtful to the interests of the cemetery, and condemnation proceedings should be no longer delayed; therefore your committee urge the prompt passage of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Since this report was submitted the committee have agreed upon two amendments, which I will read for information and then send to the Clerk's desk. The first amendment is as follows:

Strike out in lines 6, 7, and 8 the words "Chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia for opening highways" and insert "the act approved March 2, 1893, entitled 'An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities.'"

The second amendment is to add, at the end of the first section, the following:

Provided further, That in lieu of condemnation proceedings the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to acquire by purchase the lands of said cemetery and Annie E. Barbour, or either of them, paying therefor out of the appropriation herein authorized the sum of $25,000 to the said cemetery and the sum of $20,000 to Annie E. Barbour.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of this measure to the fact that it is proposed by this special bill to bring North Capitol street within the provisions of the act of March 2, 1893, known as the highway-extension act; and it is also proposed that the cost of condemnation and grading shall be paid one-half out of the District revenues and one-half out of the Treasury of the United States. All the appropriations heretofore made by Congress under the highway act have been made, so far as I remember, entirely from the revenues of the District. Now, then, without regard to the question of the propriety of extending this street, a matter upon which I defer to the superior judgment of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I submit that the amount necessary to meet the cost of the condemnation proceedings and the cost of grading (whether it shall finally come out of the joint revenues or out of the revenues of the District) should be appropriated in the future, as has been the custom in the past, in the regular bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does this bill provide for an appropriation?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir; an indefinite appropriation at that, except that the maximum for grading is fixed at $10,000.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Has there not been inserted either in the House or the Senate an item to pay these parties—Mrs. Barbour and others—for their land beyond the point where it was donated?

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not examined the amendments made by the Senate. But I will say that if the suggestion I have submitted be agreeable to the committee I will not further antagonize the bill. My proposition is that the bill be so amended as to provide that this expense shall hereafter be met in such manner as Congress may prescribe. Thus the amount to be paid will be left open for the consideration of Congress at its next session; and the question whether or not this expenditure should be paid out of the joint revenues or solely out of the District revenues will also be left open.

A MEMBER. What is your amendment?

Mr. DOCKERY. The substance of the amendment is that the liability incurred by the passage of this bill shall be met by appropriations which Congress in its judgment may make from time to time.

Mr. HULICK. Would not that really annul the provisions of this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why?

Mr. HULICK. The bill in the last clause of the first section has this proviso:

Provided further, That this appropriation shall be immediately available.

Now, if the appropriation which is to meet this expenditure be deferred for future action of Congress it seems to me it will virtually destroy the effect of this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the condemnation proceedings must proceed——

Mr. HULICK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Not necessarily under the amendment which has been proposed.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is an appropriation carried in the District of Columbia appropriation bill—$2,000 was the amount as I remember when it left the House—to provide the necessary court expenses in condemnation proceedings.

Mr. HULICK. But the gentleman will observe that the amendment now proposed goes further, and provides that if the Commissioners can make a contract with the cemetery trustees and with Mrs. Barbour they are authorized to pay to the cemetery $25,000 and to Mrs. Barbour $20,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not see any such provision.

Mr. HULICK. That is an amendment just offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CURTIS]. I suggest that if this amendment is to be adopted the suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri will not avail. As will be remembered, there were condemnation proceedings had in regard to this very property about a year ago, and the damages were assessed at over $51,000 in favor of the trustees of the cemetery and quite a large sum in favor of Mrs. Barbour. These proceedings were taken into the court, and it was considered by the Commissioners that the awards or assessments were exorbitant. These parties are now in court, I understand, trying to enforce the collection of the assessment.

Now, the object of this amendment is to settle this matter. It is a good amendment and ought to be carried out. If the Commissioners can effect a compromise with Mrs. Barbour and the trustees of the cemetery, then the whole matter will be closed up, and the suggestion made would avail nothing, because money would have to be appropriated by virtue of the bill to carry out the arrangement that is in contemplation as suggested in the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in further explanation of the amendment and what I propose to accomplish by its operation.

This is not new legislation. I call the attention of gentlemen on the floor to the fact, as shown in the report of the committee, that it is expressly stated that—

In December, 1893, Congress passed the act hereinbefore mentioned, appropriating the money for this purpose, to be condemned according to laws for highways prior to March 2, 1893 (the date of the general highway act), the intent being to condemn the land under chapter 11 of the United States Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, but the proceedings were had under the Printing Office site law. The jury returned a verdict that was considered excessive by the Commissioners, and they secured legislation in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, August 7, 1894, ordering the verdict set aside and new proceedings of condemnation under chapter 11, Revised Statutes. The owners took an appeal and the court of appeals enjoined the Commissioners from proceeding under chapter 11, and also refused a mandamus to compel the District to pay the award under the Printing Office site law; so by reason of the operations of the court and the District Commissioners the law stands a dead letter to-day, and there is no way to open the street except under the operations of a new law.

The Commissioners at that time proposed to the cemetery association and to the estate of Annie E. Barbour that there should be paid to the cemetery association and to the estate of Annie E. Barbour the amount of money specified in the amendment now proposed, which the parties declined to accept. Therefore, at the suggestion of the parties in interest, it was thought advisable to add the proviso giving the parties the liberty to accept the amount then offered, or to accept the consequences of condemnation proceedings. In the opinion of the committee the amendment adds considerable strength to the bill. At least it removes some of the objections.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And provides a limitation.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. This bill, I might say, was reported to the House in a former Congress by my colleague on the District Committee from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who is much more familiar with its provisions than I am.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I thought my recollection was accurate with reference to this question; and I appeal now to the gentleman from Tennessee to substantiate it. I have not before me the act of March 2, 1893, known as the highways act, although I have sent for it, but it seems impossible to get a copy. It provides, however, that all of the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of the highway act are to be paid solely from the revenues of the District of Columbia; and I appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee to say if that is not correct.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Outside of the city.

Mr. HULICK. That is the language of the general highway act.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is a special bill to extend the provisions of the highway act, and proposes that one-half of the expenses of the extension shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half by the people of the United States.

I do not propose to enter into the general question as to the propriety of the original act. That act provided, however, that the expenditures should be paid from the revenues of the District entirely. That question, therefore, is settled by the enactment of a law of Congress. Now, then, this bill is in the nature of special legislation, to extend the provisions of the highway act, pending, perhaps, the amendment of the general act, and if passed at all, then the entire expenditure should be made as provided in the original act.

Mr. HULICK. Does the gentleman desire to include not only damages awarded to the owners of property, but the cost of the property itself?

Mr. DOCKERY. I propose to include every cent of liability incurred under the operations of this bill. I contend that it should be paid in harmony with the provisions of the act of March 2, 1893, which required these expenditures to be paid solely from the District revenues.

Mr. HULICK. Do I understand the gentleman to offer an amendment to that effect?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do.

Mr. HULICK. I think it is right, and I shall vote with him on that proposition.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to be understood, however, about this matter. The question as to the propriety of imposing all of the expense on the District has been settled. Congress enacted the law of March 2, 1893. I understand, however, that there has been some decision of the supreme court of the District which for a time has hampered and delayed the execution of that general statute. This is a special permit or grant of authority to extend this particular street. Mr. Chairman, if Congress is going to pass this bill, an amendment should be agreed to bringing the extension within the provisions of the act of March 2, 1893.

Mr. HULICK. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Missouri to say that the terms of this law providing for the opening of this street are different from the conditions provided in the general law for opening streets?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. DINGLEY. Why is not that street to be opened under the general law, as all streets have been previously opened?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because this law has been hung up in the courts.

Mr. DOCKERY. Some of the provisions of the act of March 2, 1893, are awaiting the construction of the courts.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And pending that, this bill has been introduced.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems that the committee in their wisdom—and I am not criticising the action of the committee—thought it was not wise to await the action of the court, and so they propose this special bill extending North Capitol street, but provide that the expenditure shall be paid jointly out of the revenues of the people of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does that change the statute?

Mr. DOCKERY. That changes the statute.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That has always been the law until this act of March 3, 1893, was passed, and there has been no opening under that act as I understand it. This bill proposes——

Mr. DINGLEY. Do you propose by a special act to override the statute of 1893?

Mr. RICHARDSON. This would be a law just as much as that law.

Mr. DINGLEY. Ought not this to be done under a general law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The integrity of that law was attacked, and the lower court decided that it was unconstitutional, but it was appealed to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and that court, in a recent decision, has sustained the act in part. This bill was introduced early in the session, and it provides that the expense shall be divided equally between the revenues of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia. The District Committee thought that was right and proper, pending the decision of the court upon the general law.

Mr. DINGLEY. Would it not be better to assume that the general law is constitutional and proper until it is overthrown?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman will understand that the particular point to which this amendment goes is not pending; that is, so much as divides the expense between the revenues of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia is not, as I understand it, questioned. The question of constitutionality relates wholly to matters other than that provision, such as the assessment against citizens for benefits to adjacent property where streets are opened, making adjacent property owners contribute something. So that the issue referred to by the gentleman is not involved in this particular amendment. Now, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the committee are of the opinion that the District revenues ought to contribute the whole amount, why, then, it would be very easy to strike out the words "one-half of," and let it all be chargeable against the revenues of the District. For one I do not think that is right. While this extension is technically outside of the city of Washington, it is just beyond the boundary, and on one of the main streets of the city, leading to the Soldiers' Home. I do not see and never have seen any reason or any equity in the original provision in the act of March 3, 1893, which taxes the entire expense upon the revenues of the District of Columbia exclusively.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will probably remember that that bill passed on the last day of the session, and was a compromise. The gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. Hemphill, who was then chairman of the committee, accepted that, and recommended that the House agree to the conference report which had been pending for some time, hung up upon that very question. The House finally yielded and did agree that all the expense of opening highways should be taxed exclusively against the revenues of the District. I voted against it; I am against it now; but then, if the House sees fit to put it all upon the District revenues, it can be done by amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. What occurs to me is that, if there is a general law on this subject which provides a certain method for the opening of these streets, that law should be followed as long as it is upon the statute books. If the law is wrong, it should be repealed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When this bill was introduced and the report made, my impression is that the decision of the supreme court of the District, reversing the decision of the lower court in respect to the constitutionality of this act, had not been rendered, and therefore it was supposed that possibly the entire highway act of March 3, 1893, would be set aside and declared void. Since then, however, it has been held to be constitutional in many respects, and unconstitutional—in so far as I understand the decision, I do not pretend to quote it accurately, for I have not read it carefully—only in so far as it taxes benefits to adjacent property for the opening of these highways.

Mr. HULICK. I think there is an improper impression in regard to the law under which this former condemnation was had. I do not understand that that was had under the general highway act of 1893.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe the gentleman is correct.

Mr. HULICK. I think the impression has been created here that this condemnation was made under the general highway act which is now in controversy in the court and attacked by various parties as being unconstitutional. There was no question as to the regularity of the proceedings whereby this property was condemned heretofore, being under chapter 11, Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia. The only exception was that the amount of damages awarded was too high. Over $51,800 was returned for the property of the cemetery alone and over $20,000 for Mrs. Barbour. The Commissioners objected to the payment of the award because it was too high, and possibly they had some other reasons for avoiding the payment. Proceedings are now being had by the attorneys of those parties, seeking to enforce the payment of the money under those condemnation proceedings.

Mr. KIEFER. And the court of appeals of this District sustained the claim of the property owners.

Mr. HULICK. Yes; but the Commissioners objected to the amount of the award. Now, the object of this bill is to authorize another condemnation of this property, with the view of having it condemned and damages assessed which, according to the judgment of the Commissioners, will be reasonable and within bounds of reason, and the amendment offered by the committee is not only to authorize proceedings of condemnation, but to authorize the Commissioners of the District to compromise, or to buy this property at private sale from the cemetery trustees and from Mrs. Barbour, the first at $25,000 and the second at $20,000.

Mr. BLUE. Is it a fact that this bill is special in its nature and applies only to this property?

Mr. HULICK. That is correct. This bill is intended to carry out and enforce what has been considered to be a public benefit; in fact, a public necessity.

Mr. BLUE. Another question. This bill is, in its nature, an amendment to the general law for street extensions?

Mr. HULICK. Not at all.

Mr. BLUE. But if that general law applies to all parts of the city, while this bill is special and local in its application, then it must affect the general law to the extent of either repealing it or sustaining it.

Mr. HULICK. If that general law were to be held constitutional and were to be enforced by the courts, of course this act would affect it to the extent specified in the bill, but it would not affect any of the general provisions of the law; it would not affect the general law at all except as to its application to the extension of this street through the property of this cemetery and of Mrs. Barbour.

Mr. BLUE. Then why are you anxious to pass this bill and make it applicable to that particular locality at this time?

Mr. HULICK. The gentleman has propounded a question which brings up a point which this House should consider, namely, that this bill is in the public interest and for the public benefit.

This cemetery property stands right in the way of the extension of this street—an extension which must be made at some time, and the sooner the better, and therefore I say this bill is in the public interest. There is no protest against the opening up of this street. No one objects to it; no one doubts that the street ought to be opened. All the citizens in that locality favor it. There has been no protest by anybody against it, and in order to have the interest of the public conserved this bill has been introduced so that the enterprise may not have to be postponed for the final decision of the court upon the general highway act.

Mr. BLUE. In that connection I wish to ask the gentleman another question. Will there be any great loss or injury to anyone if this street extension shall be deferred until the next session of Congress, giving us an opportunity in the meantime to hear from the courts?

Mr. HULICK. This bill is intended to meet a public necessity and a demand on the part of the good people in that locality for the improvement.

Mr. BLUE. That might be said of any other locality for which a special bill might be introduced as well as for this.

Mr. HULICK. Well, this is urgent, and the only reason the street was not opened before was because of the exhorbitant amount of the damages assessed.

Mr. MILNES. Have not the courts decided that the general law is constitutional?

Mr. HULICK. That question has not been fully determined, as I understand, by the court.

Mr. MILNES. I understand that there is no suit pending. The case went to the court of appeals and the court has decided that the law is constitutional, with the one exception that benefits can not be assessed upon the adjacent property.

Mr. HULICK. That doubtless is correct.

Mr. MILNES. That is the only thing in the law that has been knocked out by the court. Now, here is the law of 1893, which is in force, and which provides that when streets are extended the money to pay the expense shall be taken altogether from the treasury of the District of Columbia, and not at all from the Treasury of the United States, whereas this bill provides that half the cost of this extension shall come from the Treasury of the United States. Therefore this bill is a repeal of the law of 1893 so far as it applies to this particular part of the general street extension. Now, the only thing in controversy here is whether the United States shall pay half the expense of this street opening, or whether the District of Columbia shall, as the law of 1893 provides, pay the whole of that expense.

Mr. HULICK. All I have to say is that I think that amendment would be quite a proper one if the gentleman should offer it. But the main reason that should be impressed upon the House for the passage of this bill is that the public interest demands that condemnation proceedings shall be had under this bill, so that results can be obtained as they were sought to be obtained under the previous condemnation proceedings.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the attention of the committee for two or three minutes. The act of March 2, 1893, known as the highway act, provided for the extension of the streets of Washington, and provided further that—

> No expense for the improvement of any street, circle, reservation, or avenue, laid out under the provisions of this act outside the cities of Washington and Georgetown, shall be chargeable to the Treasury of the United States, but such expense shall be paid solely out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

That was the act authorizing the general extension of the streets of this beautiful city.

Now, then, pursuant to that act, Congress has from year to year appropriated a certain amount of money to prepare the plans for the extension of streets into the outlying districts. We have been so particular in respect to these extensions—so desirous of having symmetrical and harmonious plans—that Congress has authorized the District Commissioners to employ a famous landscape engineer, Mr. Olmsted, of Massachusetts, and he is now in the employ of the District preparing the plans for the extension of streets pursuant to the act of March 2, 1893. There is a provision in the District of Columbia bill for continuing the work of preparing plans for this extension of streets. The idea, as I have said, was to extend these streets out into the District in a symmetrical, harmonious manner, so that the streets in the outlying districts may present as beautiful and attractive an appearance as those within the city. This is what has heretofore been done under the act to which reference has been made.

Now, then, comes the Committee on the District of Columbia and proposes to except North Capitol street from the provisions of this general extension because in their judgment there is an exigent necessity for the immediate extension of this street. I do not believe such a measure ought to be adopted. I know that this proposition "bobbed up" in former Congresses. I know that it was pressed with just as much vigor upon the attention of Congress four years ago as it is pressed to day. I do not assail the judgment of the committee and insist that the extension is not necessary. I think it very likely that it is; but I suggest to the honorable gentlemen comprising this committee whether this extension ought not to wait the operations of the general plan.

If, however, you are going to extend these streets; if there is such pressure for this particular extension as there was three or four years ago—and I think the pressure has been continuous from that day until this—let us not override the provisions of the act of March 2, 1893, which in exact terms, after exhaustive and elaborate discussion, imposed this cost on the revenues of the District of Columbia. I do not believe the extension ought to be made now, because it may operate to mar that beautiful plan which is now being prepared under the direction of Mr. Olmsted. But if the House intends to authorize the extension and incur the danger to which I have adverted, let it be made under the provisions of the general law and impose all the cost upon the treasury of the District.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has said in regard to this bill, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not simply a separate and special effort for the opening and grading of a particular street, but this is an appropriation bill. It is not only an appropriation bill, which should properly go to the Appropriations Committee for consideration, but it provides that the appropriation shall be immediately available. This business is somewhat new to me; but it does seem to me that along the line of what is good business for this House, it is necessary that an appropriation of this kind should go where it properly belongs and where it may receive the consideration which it deserves—where it may form a part of the general plan of appropriations which are made for the country.

If this measure is to succeed, others of a similar character and under similar pressure may follow, and in this way street after street may be opened as a separate entity without referring the appropriations to that committee whose business it is to consider such matters, permitting the District Committee to arrogate to itself not only the right to provide for establishing and opening these highways, but to proceed to occupy territory that does not rightfully belong to it, and to appropriate the necessary money and to direct that it be made immediately available. It seems to me that this is exceedingly bad business and that this bill ought to be defeated. There is not, so far as I have been able to gather, any pressing necessity for this measure. It is put forward now for no good reason which I can see, and is to be made an exception, and this committee, outside of the rule, is to arrogate to itself the right to appropriate money for carrying out the provisions of the bill. The measure ought to be defeated.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what has been said in connection with this bill, I find that in itself it does not provide for any assessment of the damages of this condemnation upon the property abutting the street and benefited by it. In this way it is essentially different and distinct from the act providing general highways for the District of Columbia. If this bill should pass in its present form, whether the whole or one-half of the expenditure be made payable out of the District of Columbia revenues, the property owners themselves will go absolutely free in connection with the cost of extending this particular street. Before I can vote for such a bill I should like to have some explanation as to why this street is to be exempted from the requirements of the statute which is applied to all other streets.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I desire to say a few words only upon the bill, and then yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I still hold the floor, and have only yielded to the gentleman for an explanation.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Very well; I call the gentleman's attention to the report of the committee. The street referred to was by special act of Congress opened in 1893. There was donated for the purpose of the street extension nearly all of the ground north of the tract now proposed to be condemned, 4,200 feet. Property has been bought and sold on this proposed street extension, with the distinct understanding that the street would be opened, and the proposed legislation now before us is only the reenactment of law.

Now, if this class of legislation can not properly come before the Committee on the District of Columbia I fail to realize where it can go, as I believe that the District Committee has heretofore had jurisdiction over this class of bills. This bill was reported from that committee in a former Congress and enacted into a law—or a bill practically the same as this—and no question as to the jurisdiction of the committee was raised. With respect to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, and to which he confined his remarks, as I understand it, I am not prepared to say whether he is right or wrong, If he believes that the amendment should prevail let him offer it and let us have a vote upon it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I do not find that the explanation of the gentleman from Iowa explains. The most that can be said or the most that can be claimed for what he said is that certain parties had donated sufficient land for the extension of this street along their respective ownerships, and that when it reached to the point where land was not donated there was no further extension; and this bill provides for the extension.

Now, the two principal points of objection raised against the bill are not concerning the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia or the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee, but the objection, the main objection, is confined to two questions—one whether the entire expenditure shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia or one-half of it from the general revenues of the Government, and the other is whether there shall be any assessment upon the adjoining property owners according to the terms of the act of March 2, 1893; and upon that point was where I had yielded to the gentleman for an explanation or for information in regard to the property and got none.

Now, if any member of the committee or any member of this general committee can explain why this property should be exempt when all other property outlying the boundaries of the city shall be taxed, I will yield for that information.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman from New Hampshire I have but a word or two to say. I will take the objections in their order, commencing with the last one first, that made by the gentleman from New Hampshire. He objects because there is no assessment, as he says, of any amount against the adjacent property holders for improvement in the value of their property caused by the extension of this street. Now, the gentleman is altogether mistaken in that.

This section of this bill provides:

> The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are directed to open and grade North Capitol street to the Soldiers' Home, and are hereby authorized and directed to condemn, according to the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act providing for a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the city," etc.

Now, that act expressly provides that there shall be assessments made against the owners of adjacent property for benefits accruing to them by reason of the opening of streets. That, therefore, answers the gentleman's objection so far as that point goes.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I see nothing about such condemnation proceedings in the bill before me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman has not a copy of the bill that was sent up. The bill as reported from the committee differs from that which the gentleman holds in his hand. I am not surprised the gentleman did not know of the existence of this provision, for it is not in the bill as originally printed; but the words to which I have referred are made a part of the bill as reported by the committee at this time. The condemnation is to be under the provisions of the act of 1893, the act of March 2, and that provides for proper assessment of the benefits, if any accrue, upon the adjacent property.

Mr. HULICK. If the gentleman will allow me in that connection to emphasize that point and answer the criticism of the gentleman from New Hampshire at the same time, I will state that this property was condemned under this same provision of law before.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. HULICK. And the only objection that existed was as to the amount of the condemnation awards.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is correct.

Mr. HULICK. Now, this proposes to review those condemnation proceedings, and directs the Commissioners to commence anew proceedings to condemn the property; in other words, to have a repetition of the same proceedings that we have had heretofore.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me, he read from the bill that these condemnation proceedings should be in accordance with the provisions of the previous act. What is that act? And how are the assessments made under it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The assessment is by a jury appointed by the court. They go out on the ground, and on the sworn testimony as to the improvements make the report to the court, and the assessment is made by the court.

Mr. HOPKINS. Can the assessment spread out beyond the abutting property?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I so understand it. But, as a matter of fact, proceedings have been pending before the supreme court of the District upon that point and other questions involved in this controversy, and there may be some change. There may be some limits, in other words, upon the question as to the extent to which these assessments may go beyond property abutting immediately on the street.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What per cent is prescribed by the law as to the benefits that can be assessed on abutting property? Is there a percentage fixed, or is it in the discretion of the Commissioners?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is in the discretion of the jury appointed by the court; and they, under oath, make this assessment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Could they make an assessment of all of the cost of the highway against the abutting property?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The courts of the District have decided that they can only assess a proportion, as I understand.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And that proportion is one-half?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is what it was intended to be under this act of 1893.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it not a fact that the District Commissioners antagonize this proposition and refuse to give their assent to it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Undoubtedly. The report states that. They objected to it in the beginning, when they submitted their report on the bill, some time in January, because they wanted it opened under some new highway act which they were recommending to Congress.

Now, that act has been delayed, or hung up in the supreme court, and the necessity for the opening of this street being immediate and urgent, as the committee believe, they decided that it was not proper to wait one, two, three, or four years until that litigation shall be ended. Now, the District Commissioners have a very proper idea about the general question of opening streets. They are opposed to any opening in detail, because they want the streets extended under some general highway act, carrying them out into the country and into the outlying portions of the District.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does my colleague not think it would be well to take their view of it and delay this until there can be a general scheme?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it is right to take their view of it as to the general system of opening streets, but they can not offer any objection to the opening of this street or make any suggestion that will improve it.

Right here I will answer the second objection, the one made by my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. Mr. Chairman, it is so apparent that that objection amounts to nothing, that I think everyone will agree with me, upon the mere statement of the case, that it ought not to be urged.

What is it? He says you may interfere with the harmony of the beautiful plan that the Commissioners, under their landscape gardener, may propose for the extension of these streets. I agree with my colleague as to the general extension, and I agree with the gentleman from Missouri that as to the general extension it ought to be done in a harmonious way. But, Mr. Chairman, the simple opening of North Capitol street need not be delayed, need not wait for any report from the landscape gardener or from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Why? It is only 6,000 feet from the boundary, the outside line of the city of Washington, at T street, where North Capitol street crosses the boundary—it is only 6,000 feet from that point to the Soldiers' Home. North Capitol street extended runs right up to the Soldiers' Home. It can not go any farther because of the Soldiers' Home property. Now, it must be straight. It is one of the streets of the city. It is concreted, I believe, to Florida avenue, or to the boundary at T street. It is graded for 2,000 feet beyond the boundary. It is 6,000 feet from the boundary to the Soldiers' Home.

For 2,000 feet it is already opened and graded, but it runs up against an immense embankment, 15 or 20 feet high, and there North Capitol street stops.

Now, Mr. Chairman, for the next 2,000 feet, going north toward the Soldiers' Home, you go through the property of Mrs. Barbour and this little cemetery, Prospect Hill, if I recollect the name correctly. It is 2,000 feet through those two pieces of property. Then you are within 2,000 or 2,200 feet of the Soldiers' Home. That farther part is all graded for 2,200 feet, the street opened in perfect alignment with the street from the Capitol here to the point I have already described, the beginning of Mrs. Barbour's property. It is an air line.

Now, 2,000 feet will take it through Mrs. Barbour's property and through the little Prospect Hill Cemetery. At the other side you again begin on a straight line, and the property holders at the other end have dedicated and donated the property necessary, and have graded the street down to its proper grade. That runs all the way for the next 2,200 feet to the Soldiers' Home. There North Capitol street must stop. Now, this bill simply provides for the opening of the middle space of 2,000 feet, through Mrs. Barbour's property and through Prospect Hill Cemetery.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask my friend right there whether persons interested in that German cemetery have not resisted the opening of this road because it would require the taking up of the bones of their dead?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all.

Mr. KIEFER. Have they acquiesced in that amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is as I have understood it. They have agreed to it, and are perfectly satisfied to have it. They did object to it in a former Congress, but that objection is withdrawn; and then as to that bill, Mr. Chairman, instead of it being vigorously fought in the last Congress, as the gentleman from Missouri stated, as I recollect it the bill passed almost unanimously. The only objection that has arisen has been the effort to get the condemnation proceedings through court. The jury placed the condemnation and valuation too high, the Commissioners objected, and it was set aside. The time has expired, and now they come back with a proposition to open it through the same property, and a limit is put upon it. Mrs. Barbour is to receive $20,000, and Prospect Hill Cemetery, I do not remember the amount, but I think $25,000. There is an urgent demand for the opening of the street there, and it has been pressed upon the committee ever since I have been a member, for four or five years.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question for information. I know something of the character of this proposition, and I think it is a work very proper to be done. As I understand it, under the direction of Congress there is a landscape architect who is engaged in making a general plan touching the improvements of the District, and has not yet completed his report. Am I correct?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. That relates to the grounds and with respect to certain streets.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That did not relate to a street like this. This is simply the extension of a street in its middle part. It is already extended beyond the property proposed to be opened now, and also on this side.

Mr. CANNON. What I want to say is, I will vote—of course, at the expense of the District—for the opening of this street. I believe it ought to be done, but——

Mr. BABCOCK. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say that it is alleged that there is a plan now in process of preparation by Mr. Olmstead, under law, that covers this and other improvements. Now, what I want to understand is this: Is that so?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not touch this street. This is a perfectly straight street. It would be just the same as if you take the case of Pennsylvania avenue and deflect it in its middle course. The other end is open, and this end is open. You can not change it through the middle. It must run in a straight line, and therefore no landscape architect would undertake to change the line running through this cemetery or through this Barbour property. It must be a perfectly straight line.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman is correct in that information, then I have no objection to this bill, provided it is amended in conformity to the highway act as to the payment for these improvements.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe there is no objection to that.

Mr. CANNON. But if there is any reasonable doubt as to whether when that is ordered and the work is done it will conflict with the general plan in preparation, I think we ought to wait.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This deals with matters within the city, and does not conflict, I can assure the gentleman, with that plan.

Mr. BABCOCK. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Commissioners have assumed the position here during the past year that they would not recommend the opening of any street or any parts of a street unless it be done under the general highway act, taking in a whole subdivision; that they have opposed everything in the shape of improvements. Now, this is almost inside. It is within part of the highway plan, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] states it. This is simply 2,000 feet right in North Capitol street, between the Capitol and Soldiers' Home.

Mr. CANNON. I know where it is.

Mr. BABCOCK. And in the new plan for the improvements here the Baltimore and Ohio, in North Capitol street, will be required to tunnel through. One of the street-car roads, which has a charter, has been stopped going into this street on account of being unable to go through this German cemetery.

Mr. CANNON. It would not interfere with the plan under the law?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; it would not.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, who seems to be familiar with this matter, a question, to see if I understand the situation. By the highway act of 1893, as I understand it, as to all new streets outside of the city limits, to which that refers of course, the expense of opening them—the condemnation and grading—is borne one-half by the abutters and one-half by the District. Am I right in that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is correct.

Mr. DINGLEY. What I desire to know is why there is an appropriation made in this bill from the Treasury. Is it designed to be simply an appropriation of District revenues and nothing more?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It could not be anything else, as I understand it.

Mr. DINGLEY. But is your bill distinct enough on that point?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It would be with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me that if this bill is to pass it should be distinctly stated in it that one-half the expense growing out of these condemnation proceedings should be paid under the act of 1893, by the abutters, and the other half from the revenues of the District.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would not object to that. I think it already means that, because it says this shall be done under the act of 1893. Certainly the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri would cover that point.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the amendment has not been adopted, and I will say to my friend from Maine that he is eminently correct in his suggestion. As this bill is drawn and presented to the House it will charge the Government of the United States with one-half of this expense, and to that extent it will break down the law of 1893, which proposes to put upon the District of Columbia and the adjacent property owners the entire expense of the extension of these streets. The gentleman from Maine is clearly right, because this bill as reported by the committee breaks down the law of 1893. This bill provides that one-half of the expense shall be paid by the District and one-half by the Government of the United States. Hence, those who vote for this measure ought to understand that if the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is not adopted the Government will assume that which it expressly declined to assume under the law of 1893.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe there is no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that the Commissioners object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They did object on the general idea that this work should await the general plan, the execution of which may be one, two, three, four, or five years—nobody knows how long.

Mr. DINGLEY. That objection would have a good foundation if this is a part of a general plan, but if it is entirely distinct from the general plan and if this street must be constructed as proposed in this bill whatever may be the general plan, that makes a difference.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman will understand that for 2,000 feet from the city limits this street is now graded by the Commissioners. For 2,200 feet beyond that point it is already graded under the direction of the Commissioners. The property holders contributed to meet the expense, but, as I understand, the money was expended under the direction of the Commissioners. Therefore both ends of the street are opened and there is only a little space of 2,000 feet between the two that is to be opened under this bill. The Commissioners have approved the street, as I understand, beyond this point, and in opening this part of it it would be impossible to get out of the straight line.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have simply to say that if this bill is amended so as to make it perfectly clear that one-half of the whole cost, including the condemnation and grading, is to be borne by the abutters, and that the other half is to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia, I have no objection to the bill, unless it interferes with a plan which ought to be one symmetrical whole.

Mr. BABCOCK. It does not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest that the proviso on page 2 of the bill that "one-half of said sum shall be charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia" can be amended by striking out the words "one-half of," leaving it to read "that said sum shall be charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. DOCKERY. I have an amendment to suggest for consideration. It is to strike out, on page 1, lines 12 and 13, the words "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert "the revenues of the District of Columbia"; so that it will read:

And the amount of money necessary to pay the judgment of condemnation and the cost of grading is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to carry out the provisions of this act, but the cost of grading shall not exceed $10,000.

Then, in line 15, strike out the words "one-half of" and insert "the"; so that it will read:

Provided, That the said sum shall be charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to propose an amendment, which I will read for the information of the committee.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I think there is some misapprehension as to the force of the statute referred to here on the part of gentlemen who are proposing amendments. The question was asked what the statute provided under which the Commissioners are directed to proceed. There is, I think, a misapprehension upon that point, and I would like to call the attention of gentlemen to what that chapter of the Revised Statutes does provide and then to offer an amendment which I think will meet all the criticisms.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I will simply state what I propose to offer if the gentleman's amendment does not cover the point, and then will yield him the floor.

I propose to offer this amendment to come in at the end of the bill:

Provided further, That all damages and benefits under this act shall be assessed and collected in the manner provided by the highway act of the District of Columbia approved March 2, 1893.

This provision, without using the words "abutting property owners," will answer the purpose, I think.

Mr. HULICK. I wish now to state the amendment which I propose to offer and to support it by reference to the statute under which this proceeding is intended to be conducted. My amendment is to strike out all of the bill after the word "street," in the tenth line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there are two amendments now pending.

Mr. HULICK. I am only endeavoring to see whether I can not satisfy gentlemen who have already offered amendments that this amendment of mine will meet the criticisms they have suggested. If my amendment be adopted the effect of the bill will be to direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to open and grade North Capitol street from T street to the Soldiers' Home and to condemn, according to chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia for opening highways, such of the lands of Prospect Hill Cemetery and of Annie E. Barbour as may be necessary for the extension of said street.

As will be seen, two purposes will then be accomplished by the bill. In the first place, the Commissioners will be directed to proceed under the statutes to open the street through the lands of Prospect Hill Cemetery and those of Mrs. Barbour. Now, what is the provision of chapter 11 of the statutes of the District of Columbia here referred to?

All public roads within said District outside the limits of Washington and Georgetown which have been duly laid out or declared and recorded as such are public highways.

That is the first provision. Then follow provisions for the execution of that law, for the condemnation of property——

Mr. MILNES. Is that the act of 1893?

Mr. HULICK. No, sir; this is the prior act, but an act which is now in force. It provides for public highways to be surveyed; for the fixing of boundaries and width of street; for the giving of notice to property holders affected by the proceedings of condemnation. This act, following the provision I have read, goes on and provides for public highways to be surveyed and recorded; for boundaries to be permanently marked; for width and location of streets; for the laying out, widening, or changing of roads; for notices to property holders and the hearing of objections; for proceedings when a route is objected to and others proposed; for the method of proceeding when no objection is made; for the method of proceeding when owners of land object and claim damages. It provides also that the marshal shall summon a jury and administer oaths; it provides what the jury shall consider; it also provides for proceedings upon the rendering of the verdict. It makes provision, too, that a second jury may be summoned, and it provides also the method of paying the costs.

Now, I want to call the attention of this Committee of the Whole to the fact that all the expenses of these proceedings up to the demanding of the second jury are to be paid by the District of Columbia. That meets the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. I trust he will give me his attention for a moment. I have been referring to the statute under which the proceedings to condemn this property will be prosecuted if this bill be passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The proceedings will not be conducted under the statute which the gentleman has been reading.

Mr. HULICK. Why, sir, it is required that they shall be, under the very provisions of this bill.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. That provision is stricken out and it is provided that proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the act of March 2, 1893.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK] should be acceded to, and all of the bill after the word "street," in line 10, be struck out, and if the proposed amendments be also excluded——

Mr. HULICK. I propose to strike out also the amendments that have been offered.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the bill be amended in that way I see nothing objectionable in it.

Mr. HULICK. That is exactly the form in which I propose that we leave the bill. The District Commissioners will then proceed under the law I have read without reference to the act of 1893. It is under the latter act that all the embarrassment comes in. The constitutionality of that act has been questioned in the courts. I propose to provide a means by which condemnation proceedings can be carried out effectually without reference to the act of 1893. If my amendment prevails all the costs up to the second jury will be paid by the District of Columbia under the act I have just read. Now, let me explain the meaning of that second jury. If the party whose property is condemned is not satisfied with the amount of damages awarded by the first jury, then he may demand a second jury, and if the verdict of the second jury is not in excess of the verdict of the first, then the party asking for the second jury must pay the expense out of his own pocket, but up to the second jury all the expenses are paid by the District of Columbia.

If my amendment be adopted, the purport of the bill will simply be to direct the Commissioners to proceed to condemn this special property by virtue of chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, pertaining to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILNES. Let me ask the gentleman one question. Under the act of 1893 half of the expense is chargeable to the abutting property and half to the treasury of the District of Columbia. Now, this bill does not provide for that, does it?

Mr. HULICK. This provides—and I am very glad the gentleman called my attention to it—it provides in section 262 of the act in question as follows:

The jury, having been upon the premises and assessed the damages, shall make out a written verdict to be signed by them, or a majority of them, and attested by the marshal, which the marshal shall transmit to the proper authorities at their next meeting, and which shall be recorded.

And I call your especial attention to this provision found in section 261:

In making their decision the jury shall take into consideration the benefit such road may be to each owner by enhancing the value of his land, or otherwise, and shall give their verdict accordingly.

That is equitable, just, and meets the criticisms which have been made upon this bill. That is where the embarrassment is in those condemnation proceedings which has been questioned in the courts under the law of 1893. It was thought advisable, therefore, in the introduction of this bill, that we proceed under this act rather than under the act of 1893.

Now, if the committee accept that amendment——

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand you propose to strike out all after the word "street," in line 10?

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am quite willing to accept that if it meets the wishes of the members of the committee.

Mr. HULICK. And the proceedings will be identical with the proceedings under chapter 11, where the verdict rendered was in excess of what the Commissioners of the District of Columbia thought right and just. And if the trustees of the cemetery property and the owner of the other property find that condemnation proceedings are to be prosecuted under that statute, if they should be required to go to a jury under the law in which they obtained judgment before, they will, I am quite sure, take the amount offered by the Commissioners rather than go through that proceeding again. And in fact, in the opinion of the committee, the offer of $25,000 was a very liberal offer; in fact, it might well be considered extravagant, and I do not mean to reflect upon anybody in making that assertion, and that the verdict of the jury was extorted—and I do not wish to be understood as being offensive in any sense of the word in that expression, either—but what I mean is that it was an unreasonable verdict. It was for damages in favor of the cemetery of over $51,800, and over twenty thousand for that condemned of Mrs. Barbour. The Commissioners have been very liberal to these people, in the judgment of the committee, and yet they defy public interest, they defy the wants of everybody, they defy the Commissioners; and now, if it is provided by this act that the Commissioners shall proceed under the old statute, they will call a jury, assess the damages, the property will be condemned, and the parties will have to take what the verdict of the jury may give them.

I therefore offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending now.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I think there is much confusion in the minds of many of us as to just what the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is. I would like to have it stated again.

Mr. HULICK. I will cheerfully do so. My suggestion is to strike out all of the original bill, including the amendments offered, after the word "street," in the tenth line of the first page.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. You mean to strike out the committee amendments also?

Mr. HULICK. Everything; because the object is to direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to proceed under this act, and that will give full jurisdiction and control to call a jury, assess the damages, and bring the parties into court if necessary. Let the verdict of the jury be returned, and that will be a judgment against the District of Columbia, and the cost of it to be paid from the District of Columbia revenues; unless, as I said before, the parties agree to call a second jury and have proceedings under that. If the verdict of the second jury is not greater than the verdict of the first, then the parties complaining or calling the second jury must pay the cost of the second jury proceedings themselves. Otherwise, if no second jury is called, then the District will have to pay the amount of the verdict.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. You propose to strike out all after "street" and insert nothing in its stead, as I understand?

Mr. HULICK. Yes; strike out everything from that word and insert nothing in its stead. Just leave the first part of the bill stand, down to the word "street." It strikes out all of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa authorizing the Commissioners to go and buy the property at private sale. That, I think, is inconsistent with the original act.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am quite willing to accept that suggestion, so far as I am concerned; but I do not care about making any sort of agreement by which this bill will go to the Senate, be amended, and get into conference, and then, under pressure of a conference report, the very things carried in the bill to which we are objecting now.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the committee desire a vote upon this bill, and as far as I have had an opportunity to consult the members of the committee they seem willing to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask to withdraw the amendment offered by the committee?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The last amendment only.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on the first amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the general debate closed?

Mr. DOCKERY. Not yet.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to one further fact. I have just run over the Revised Statutes; and in view of the amendment which the gentleman has suggested, I want to call his attention to the fact that chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes contemplates a very different condition of things from what the highway act of 1893 does. It seems to me that if this act is passed, and these proceedings are remanded entirely to chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, then you will have condemnation proceedings.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that those words have been stricken out, or it is proposed to strike them out, and insert in lieu of the same "the act approved March 2, 1893."

Mr. DINGLEY. I was taking the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio that we strike out all after the word "street," in line 10.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But that was after these words were inserted in that place.

Mr. DINGLEY. That may be. Let us hear those words; because I see that chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes and the highway act of 1893 contemplate entirely distinct and different proceedings. Not only that, but they employ a different method of paying the damages. In that case the District pays the entire cost, but under the act of 1893 the District pays half and the owners of the property pay half.

Mr. HULICK. It was the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] that the expense be all charged up to the District.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The act will read as follows:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to open and grade North Capitol street from T street to the Soldiers' Home, and are hereby authorized and directed to condemn, according to the act approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," such of the lands of the Prospect Hill Cemetery and of Annie E. Barbour as may be necessary for the extension of said street.

Mr. HULICK. Now, Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman understand, and is it not so understood by every lawyer and by every member of the House who has given any attention whatever to the matter, that the act of 1893 can not be enforced in condemnation proceedings such as are proposed by this bill? They can not do it under that act, because it is so embarrassed by exceptions and by attacks that have been made upon it by the courts in the District, that it can not be enforced. I see the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] winks his eye and nods his head in assent to my proposition. He does not want this act carried out, and he will vote for that amendment. If you insert that amendment you can not enforce the condemnation of this property, because the general highway act can not be enforced in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope it will take time enough so that the general plan can be prepared, and then we shall move along harmoniously.

Mr. HULICK. I want to say that if you go into that and adopt the general highway act, you go into it with your eyes open, and you will never get the property condemned until there is further legislation or a further decision by the courts.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think you had better withdraw the bill and let it go over.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I call for a vote.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to ask if there is not litigation pending in regard to some of this property which you are trying to go through, and if there has not been an injunction in regard to some of it?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. There is no litigation pending, as I understand.

Mr. TERRY. I understand there has been an injunction in regard to going through some of this property.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. This bill is satisfactory to the property holders.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] if there has not been an injunction issued to restrain them from going through some of this property?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There was, but that was under the act passed by the last Congress, growing out of an effort to condemn this property under an act passed by the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. TERRY. And now you are trying to get around that act?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The provisions contained in this bill are satisfactory to the parties who brought that litigation, and this will end that litigation and be satisfactory to them, as I understand it.

Mr. TERRY. I have been advised the other way.

Mr. HULICK. I want to answer further the inquiry of the gentleman in regard to that litigation. That is litigation growing out of the amount of damages. These parties, the cemetery people and Mrs. Barbour, want the amount assessed to be paid, and the litigation grows out of the fact that they are trying to enforce the payment of that verdict and get that judgment enforced against the District. The District Commissioners are opposing that. That is the litigation referred to, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. BLUE. I hope that amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill about a matter that I have been informed of since this discussion commenced, and that is, whether or not there has been a permanent injunction granted against this very proceeding of opening a street through that cemetery? I understand that those people have spent $4,000 or $5,000 to prevent going through their cemetery, and I ask if there has been a perpetual injunction granted? Now, is that a fact?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not so understand it. I have just answered that question. The gentleman from Arkansas asked me the same question and I answered him.

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not hear that inquiry, or I would not have duplicated it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. He asked me the same question.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have been informed that such is the fact. I know that when this was up before in Congress there was a great resistance to the bill, but what form that resistance took in the court I did not attempt to follow; but I am informed that that is the situation, and I was inquiring to know whether my information was correct?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can only state again, that there was an injunction suit brought, because they objected to the method of the condemnation that was undertaken.

Mr. McMILLIN. Did not they object to the going through the cemetery in toto?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They may have included that too, but there was no objection to this bill by those parties provided the amount mentioned in this bill is paid to them. They undertook to get an injunction, and possibly did get an injunction against the proceedings under the act of the Fifty-third Congress, but it was not because of the amount, as I understand, or an objection to going through, but in respect to the assessment of damages in some way upon the abutting property. It was the practice under that act to assess benefits as against damages. Then I understand the injunction was made perpetual, possibly upon all the grounds you have mentioned; but the representatives of the cemetery, and the representatives of Mrs. Barbour, appeared before our Committee on the District of Columbia, and, as I understand it—and I state it here in the presence of other members of the committee—they agree or did agree that if the amount mentioned here, $20,000 to Mrs. Barbour and $25,000 to the cemetery, was paid that there is no objection, as I understand it, on the part of either.

Mr. HULICK. I will state to the gentleman that I have never heard of that. I asked about that and was advised by a member of the committee that no agreement had been reached.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no agreement; but I understand they consent to accept these figures if an amendment is inserted, and that amendment has been suggested; and if the bill is passed I understand that they will take the amount we have offered.

Mr. KIEFER. I want to ask you a question for information. I wish to state to the gentleman in charge of the bill that on March 3, this year, a committee consisting of members of the corporation termed the Prospect Hill Cemetery Association asked me to introduce a claim for $51,686, which was the amount that had been found by the committee who had the condemnation proceedings in their hands. They claim that they have yet before the courts an injunction forbidding a right of way through their cemetery. Now, if these gentlemen have agreed to take $25,000, of which I am not aware, I am willing to vote for the bill; but otherwise I can not vote for it, because I have no information from the gentleman who asked me to introduce this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. But there does not seem to be any distinct and definite understanding. The gentleman from Tennessee himself is not sure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They have not agreed to accept that amount.

Mr. TERRY. There being so much misunderstanding, the gentleman ought to let this matter be laid aside until this committee can understand it properly.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of some gentlemen of the House that the committee understood the Barbour estate had agreed to accept the amount proposed, $20,000, the amount offered by the Commissioners, in lieu of damages under the former act. It is expected—I do not know that anybody has definite information as to that—but it is expected that the cemetery association will accept the amount which was offered to them at the same time also, although under the provisions of this proposed amendment the cemetery association are at liberty to accept this amount in lieu of condemnation proceedings or to proceed under the highway act to condemn.

Mr. McMILLIN. As I understand, there is no definite information that the cemetery association has agreed to accept this amount; but if they do not, you propose to go on with the condemnation proceeding, notwithstanding the injunction?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The cemetery association have been objecting to the condemnation proceedings or to the acceptance of the amount proposed in the former act in lieu of condemnation proceedings, but as provided by the amendment offered by my colleague from Ohio, this amendment is stricken out, and everything in the bill following the word "street," in the tenth line. I call the gentleman's attention to this, especially when the second amendment proposed by the committee should be reached, and it is proposed now, if satisfactory to the gentlemen who have raised some objections to this bill, that we accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio and have a vote.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope my friend from Iowa will withdraw this bill, as questions of an injunction and figures have been brought up here for the first time.

Mr. HULICK. You withdraw your amendment?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Yes; if it is desired. I desire to reach a vote upon the bill, and harmonize all differences if possible, in order that the bill may go through. It is a measure that ought to pass.

Mr. HULICK. The gentleman from Iowa desires to withdraw the amendment that he offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Iowa withdraws the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. He withdraws both amendments.

Mr. HULICK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment suggested previously, which is that all afte the word "street," in line 10 of this bill, be stricken out.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

Line 10, after the word "street," strike out the following:
"And the amount of money necessary to pay the judgment of condemnation and the cost of grading is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, but the cost of grading shall not exceed $10,000: Provided, That one-half of said sum shall be charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That this appropriation shall be immediately available."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, if that amendment is correctly reported it refers merely to the form of the condemnation. Does it include also the matter of paying damages and expenses? I do not so understand it.

Mr. KIEFER. It refers to a former act which does provide for that.

Mr. BLUE. Only as to the methods of condemnation.

Mr. KIEFER. And as to the mode of paying.

Mr. HULICK. And as to the cost of condemnation. It executes itself fully.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that the amendment strikes out all of the bill after the word "street," in line 10. If that amendment were adopted, I ask the gentleman from Maine, who would pay these expenses?

Mr. DINGLEY. I think that is left very uncertain. It is the condemnation proceedings that chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes provides for. This bill provides that the costs, etc., shall be paid according to that statute.

Mr. HULICK. That everything up to the demand for the second jury shall be paid out of the revenues of the District.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think it would be better to have that distinctly settled.

Mr. DOCKERY. It might be amended so as to read: "Provided, That all expenses involved under this bill shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. BLUE. Expenses and damages.

Mr. DINGLEY. I notice that chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes provides for the methods of condemnation and provides for a jury to estimate the damages. It also says that in estimating the damages they shall deduct the benefits that may be supposed to accrue to the owners of the abutting property, and then it provides that all the expense shall be paid by the District of Columbia.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to withdraw this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask a further question, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER]. The language in chapter 11 applies simply to costs. Now, it seems to me that damages are entirely distinct.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will submit this idea to the gentleman from Maine. Chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes was enacted before the act of 1893, and under that act whatever expense was incurred by the District of Columbia was to be paid one-half by the District and one-half by the Government. Therefore, if we proceed under that statute, the Government of the United States will have to pay part of this expense.

Mr. HULICK. It is not so provided in the statute.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, this debate is all out of order.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6713, and that the same had been withdrawn from the consideration of the committee.

LAWS AFFECTING MARRIED WOMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 1659, which was laid aside a few moments ago for the preparation of an amendment, the bill to amend the law of the District of Columbia as to married women, and to make parents the natural guardians of their minor children, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to amend the laws of the District of Columbia as to married women, to make parents the natural guardians of their minor children, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the property, real and personal, which any woman in the District of Columbia may own at the time of her marriage, and the rents, issues, profits, or proceeds thereof, and real, personal, or mixed property which shall come to her by descent, devise, purchase, or bequest, or or the gift of any person, shall be and remain her sole and separate property, notwithstanding her marriage, and shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband or liable for his debts, except that such property as shall come to her by gift of her husband shall be subject to, and be liable for, the debts of the husband existing at the time of the gift.

SEC. 2. That a married woman, while the marriage relation subsists, may bargain, sell, and convey her real and personal property, and enter into any contract in reference to the same in the same manner, to the same extent, and with like effect as a married man may in relation to his real and personal property, and she may, by a promise in writing, expressly make her separate estate liable for necessaries purchased by her or furnished at her request for the family.

SEC. 3. That any married woman may carry on any trade or business, occupation, or profession by herself, or jointly with others, and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account, and the earnings of any maried woman from her trade, business, profession, occupation, labor, or services shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall invalidate any marriage settlement or contract.

SEC. 5. That the husband shall not be liable for the payment of the wife's antenuptial debts, but she shall be liable to all remedies for the recovery of such debts, to be enforced against her and her separate property as if she were unmarried.

SEC. 6. That the father and mother shall be the natural guardians of the person of their minor children. If either dies or is incapable of acting, the natural guardianship of the person shall devolve upon the other: Provided, however, That in case of the death of either parent from whom the said children may inherit, or take by devise or bequest, the said parent may, by deed or last will and testament, appoint a guardian of the property of the children, subject to the approval of the proper court of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That the survivor may by last will appoint a guardian of the person and property of any of the children, whether born at the time of making the will or afterwards, to continue during the minority of the child, or for a less time, subject at all times to removal for cause and appointment of another by the proper court.

SEC. 8. That dower shall hereafter be assigned to a widow entitled to the same in the equitable as well as the legal estate of her deceased husband.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, the bill S. 1659 is now up for consideration. When it was called up before in its order there were suggestions made by the gentleman from Vermont in regard to the rights of married women, their right to bring actions, to sue and be sued in the courts of the District relative to their own contracts and their own property, and it was suggested that we should prepare an amendment or amendments to the bill. It was referred to me, and in the short time I have had I have prepared a hasty amendment, one not quite satisfactory to my own mind, nevertheless an amendment which can be offered and which will require the bill to go back to the Senate and possibly to a conference, for I have observed that the laws of the District of Columbia have been amended in that way before, without proper consideration by the Judiciary Committee, and we have found much embarrassment when we have come to compare them with existing statutes. I propose, therefore, to offer these amendments with the prefatory statement that the matter has not been considered by the committee as fully as it should be. In fact, the committee has not given any consideration to it whatever.

Under the laws now prevailing in the District of Columbia with reference to the issue of executions by the courts and other matters connected with the collection of debts, such matters are controlled by an old English law passed in the year 1265, during the reign of Henry III. And the execution of property in the hands of the marshal or sheriff is regulated by a law passed one hundred and sixty-four years ago.

We are now called upon, in connection with a bill coming from the Senate that has not been referred to our committee, to offer amendments in regard to the rights of married women in property that may have come to them by descent, purchase, or otherwise. This bill, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Vermont, falls far short of executing itself. I will read the amendments which I propose to offer. They are to be numbered as sections 4 and 5:

SEC. 4. A married woman may sue and be sued as if she were unmarried; and her husband shall be joined with her when the cause of action is in favor of or against both her and her husband.

SEC. 5. When a married woman sues or is sued, like proceedings shall be had and judgment rendered and enforced as if she were unmarried; and her property and estate shall be liable for judgments against her; but she shall be entitled to all the benefits of all exemptions to the heads of families or householders.

Under the statutes now in force there are exemptions to heads of families and householders. We want to give to a married woman the benefit of such exemptions, so that if her husband fails to demand his rights in that respect she may demand them for herself. It too frequently happens that a married woman has a husband with no property—perhaps without capacity or ability to make a living for her and their family. She has her own property. Under the provision I have read if such a woman is defendant in a suit involving that property, and a judgment should be rendered against her, instead of her homestead or other private property being taken from her so that she and her family might be turned out of doors, she would be entitled to the exemptions provided in section 13 of the compiled statutes of the District. Those exemptions cover such things as wearing apparel, beds and bedding, fuel for three months, mechanics' tools, library and implements of a professional man or artist, etc. Under this provision the wife would be protected in her ownership of such property.

Under the first provision of these amendments a married woman may sue and be sued as if she were unmarried. Of course that provision is in derogation of the common law as now enforced in the District of Columbia. What other statutes may have been enacted relative to the rights of married women we have not had time to consider, and I am frank to say that I do not know whether the amendments I have offered are consistent or inconsistent with other statutes of the District of Columbia. But if the amendments I propose should be adopted, and the bill goes back to the Senate, it will then probably go to a conference, when more time will be given to the subcommittee of the District, which will be enabled to give some consideration to the bill.

I now submit these amendments with this further remark, that if they be adopted a renumbering of the following sections will of course be necessary.

Mr. BRUMM. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. His amendment, as I understand, makes a married woman liable for her personal debts, whether she is declared a feme sole trader or not.

Mr. HULICK. As bearing upon her own separate estate only.

Mr. BRUMM. Of course.

Mr. HULICK. It would not affect her husband's property.

Mr. BRUMM. But by your amendment, as I understand, you put her in such a position that under the coercion of her husband she may be compelled to part with her entire property. You hold her liable to the extent of her own estate for all her debts, whether she be a feme sole trader or not.

Mr. HULICK. I do not understand the gentleman's remark as to "the coercion of her husband." The presumption of the old common law is that the wife is under the coercion of her husband.

Mr. BRUMM. Under your amendment she can sign a promissory note, make a bond, etc.

Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir; she can do as she pleases concerning her own property.

Mr. BRUMM. Do you mean to tell me she may not be forced to do such acts under the coercion of her husband?

Mr. HULICK. No more than the husband could be forced to do so under the coercion of his wife.

Mr. BRUMM. I fail to see where she is protected; and I for one shall oppose any amendment of that kind.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, with the amendment pending, in view of the lateness of the hour, as well as because of the fact that other matters are to be considered by the committee this afternoon, on consultation with the chairman of the committee, I withdraw this bill, and will let it go over to a later date.

Mr. BRUMM. I would suggest that in the meantime the gentleman have the bill and the amendment printed, and have it perfected when next laid before the House.

The SPEAKER. No action has been taken by the House on the bill?

Mr. HULICK. None whatever.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to withdraw it.

Mr. HULICK. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this bill is withdrawn, what becomes of it?

The SPEAKER. It is returned to the same status that it occupied before it was called up by the chairman of the committee to-day.

Mr. BABCOCK. It goes to the committee, I suppose?

The SPEAKER. It goes back to its original place, subject to any further action on the part of the commiteee.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME AND BELT RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up now the bill (S. 2928) to extend the routes of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and the Belt Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. It has been before the committee for three months, and I think it is thoroughly understood by the House.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

On page 2, line 8, strike out the words "two years" and insert in place thereof "eighteen months."

Strike out all of section 2.

In section 4, page 4, strike out all of lines 17 to 25, inclusive.

Add to section 4 the following:

"Provided, That if there is not sufficient room for two tracks on Water street without encroaching on tracks already there, that the said Belt Line Railway Company shall purchase at its own cost sufficient ground to open Water street from the terminus of its line as now located along said projected route to P street."

In section 5, line 6, strike out the word "all" and insert the word "the" in place thereof.

In section 5, line 7, strike out the words "two years" and insert the words "one year" in place thereof.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I offer the following additional amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before that, Mr. Speaker, I have several amendments to offer which precede that of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I do not wish to lose the right to offer them by consenting that his amendment, which, as I understand it, comes into a later part of the bill, shall be first considered.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I ask for the reading of the bill by sections.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill had better be read by sections.

Mr. BABCOCK. This amendment, I will state, Mr. Speaker, is practically a committee amendment, and the only difference is that it was not prepared at the time the bill was reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman assents to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa that he may have permission to recur to other parts of the bill and offer amendments.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly; I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 12. That the Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to extend the lines of its underground electric railroad from the intersection of Connecticut and Florida avenues northward along Columbia Road to a point on the west line of Eighteenth street extended: Provided, That the said extension be completed before January 1, 1897, and the said company is hereby authorized and empowered to increase its capital stock for the purpose of making and equipping the extension of its route authorized by this act and for the completion of its present construction, but the amount of the capital stock so to be issued as aforesaid shall be subject to the approval of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and shall not exceed, together with the bonded indebtedness of said company, the cost of the making and equipment of the extension herein provided for and the completion of its present construction."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I ask that this bill be read by sections for amendments, beginning at the beginning.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, no; it is too late.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Insert in line 14, section 1, after the word "power," the following:

"And provided further, That within thirty days after the passage of this act cars shall be regularly run over the existing tracks beginning at the intersection of G street and New Jersey avenue, thence across New Jersey avenue to and along G street to North Capitol street, thence north on North Capitol street to T street according to a schedule satisfactory to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I now call for the reading of the bill by sections.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the consideration of this bill can not be completed to-night, and at the suggestion of gentlemen connected with the committee, who are willing that that be done, I shall move that the House adjourn after the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] has presented a report on a contested-election case.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, can we not have a vote on this pending amendment? It is an amendment which ought to be adopted, and there should be no objection to it.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—FELTON VS. MADDOX, SEVENTH DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Elections No. 1 to present a report in the case of Felton vs. Maddox, from the Seventh Congressional district of the State of Georgia. It is a unanimous report, signed by all the members of the committee except Mr. LINNEY, who is out of the city. I ask that the report be printed.

The SPEAKER. What action does the gentleman from New York desire on the resolutions?

Mr. DANIELS. To have the resolutions read and adopted.

Mr. DINGLEY. Why not let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. DANIELS. I think it will not occasion any discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That William H. Felton was not elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress at the election for Representative for the Seventh Congressional district in the State of Georgia on the 6th day of November, 1894.

Resolved, That John W. Maddox was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress at the election for Representative for the Seventh Congressional district in the State of Georgia on the 6th day of November, 1894.

Mr. DANIELS. I ask for the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry in relation to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. I do not understand that there was any vote taken upon that amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is pending.

The SPEAKER. That amendment is pending.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6) constituting Syracuse, N. Y., a port of delivery;

A bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 1743) for the relief of the widow of Thomas L. Young;

A bill (H. R. 8820) making provision for the deportation of refugee Canadian Cree Indians from the State of Montana and their delivery to the Canadian authorities;

A bill (S. 137) granting an increase of pension to William W. French; and

A bill (S. 1365) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and joint resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 2962) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf Reservoir site, in Colorado, and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Joint resolution (S. R. 91) providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the State of Tennessee against the United States—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1659) to amend the laws of the District of Columbia as to married women, to make parents the natural guardians of their minor children, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CONFEREES ON THE INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the Indian appropriation bill Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON.

HOUSE BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following bills; which were, by unanimous consent, ordered to lie on the table, similar Senate bills having passed the House:

A bill (H. R. 4146) relative to the First National Bank of Sprague, Wash.;

A bill (H. R. 608) for the relief of E. R. Shipley;

A bill (H. R. 1030) for the relief of John J. Shipman;

A bill (H. R. 3637) to provide for the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River;

A bill (H. R. 5549) amending the general pension laws; and

A bill (H. R. 7138) granting a right of way to the Denison and Northern Railroad Company through the Indian Territory.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted

To Mr. JOY, for this day, on account of important business.

To Mr. ANDERSON, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WILLIAMS, for five days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. DINGLEY (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ELLIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4058) to set apart certain lands now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve as a public park, to be known as the Washington National Park, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1699); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HILBORN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the following sundry bills, reported the same, accompanied by reports; which said bills and reports were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as follows, to wit:

WITH AMENDMENTS.

The bill (H. R. 6895) empowering and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish 2 pieces of condemned cannon, 2 caissons,

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. DANIEL on the 1st instant, providing for the payment to physicians for the vaccination of poor persons during the smallpox epidemic of 1894, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it with amendments, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

HENRY T. BAKER.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 180) for the relief of Ex-Naval Cadet Henry T. Baker, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. It is very short.

The joint resolution was read; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to reappoint Henry T. Baker as a naval cadet to fill the vacancy in the engineers' division of his class caused by his resignation of March 7, 1896, with the same standing, rights, and privileges in all respects as if such resignation had not been tendered. But he shall not receive pay while out of the service.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPORTATIONS OF ORIENTAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report a resolution for which I ask present consideration. I think there will be no objection to it.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance, under the provisions of the Senate resolution of March 3, 1891, is hereby directed to inquire whether American labor and industries are suffering from or threatened with injurious competition through importations of oriental products, and if so, to investigate the causes which have made such competition possible.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed, and the resolution will go over under the rule.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3124) granting an increase of pension to Isabella H. Silvey, widow of Lieut. Col. William Silvey, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 3125) to refer to the Court of Claims for adjudication certain claims of the white adopted citizens of the Cherokee Nation, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3126) granting a pension to Cornelia L. Brownell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3127) to provide for the medical inspection of immigrants at the port of debarkation; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 3128) granting a pension to Phebe A. Thurber, of Providence, R. I., dependent daughter of Samuel Short, a Revolutionary soldier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3129) to authorize the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion as to Jasper L. Dodge, late of Company F, First Rhode Island Volunteer Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 3130) granting a pension to Catherine M. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ESSEX M. BOSTFORD.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That the papers in connection with Senate bill 2748 in the Fifty-second Congress, granting a pension to Essex M. Bostford, be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn from the files of the Senate for reference to the Committee on Pensions, there being no adverse report thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

Mr. PEFFER. I move that the resolution providing for the investigation generally of all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896 be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

COINAGE OF SILVER BULLION—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I submit a resolution and ask for its adoption.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed in document form, for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies of the message of the President of March 29, 1894, returning without his approval House bill No. 4956, entitled "An act directing the coinage of the silver bullion held in the Treasury, and for other purposes," and the bill as vetoed by the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. The document never has been printed and there are a great many calls for it. It will cost a very small sum of money.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

THOMAS J. ROBERTSON.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Ex-Senator Thomas J. Robertson, of South Carolina, the salary due him from March 4, 1867, to July 22, 1868, said sum to be paid out of the contingent fund, and at the rate of salary paid to United States Senators at that time (1867 and 1868).

WILLARD WARNER.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Hon. Willard Warner, late a Senator from Alabama, the amount due from the beginning of his term on the 4th of March, 1867, until he was paid, said payment to be made from the contingent fund of the Senate.

TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. BATE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas the citizens of Tennessee propose to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Tennessee into the Federal Union on June 1, 1896, at Nashville, Tenn.; and

Whereas an invitation has been extended to the Senate of the United States to be present and participate in the ceremonies on that patriotic occasion: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the invitation extended to the Senate of the United States by the Tennessee Centennial Exposition Company, under whose auspices are to be held the ceremonies at Nashville, Tenn., on the 1st day of June, 1896, commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Tennessee into the Federal Union, be accepted and entered upon the Journal of the Senate, and that the President of the Senate is hereby authorized to appoint a committee of five to attend said celebration at the city of Nashville on the 1st day of June next.

ALASKA TRANSPORTATION AND TRADE COMPANY.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the bill (S. 2522) creating a corporation known as the Alaska Transportation and Trading Company, and granting right of way for the construction and operation by that corporation of a turnpike and post road from Taiya Inlet to Lake Bennett, in the Territory of Alaska, be committed to the Committee on Public Lands, with instructions to report to the Senate on Monday next.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill numbered 33, 37, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 56, 64, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 76, 77, 78, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, and 94; asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 2032) to grant the right of way over the public domain for pipe lines in the States of Colorado and Wyoming; and

A bill (S. 2642) to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6172) authorizing the sale of the title of the United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington;

A bill (H. R. 7469) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7578) granting the Flagstaff and Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve in northern Arizona;

A bill (H. R. 8167) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North;

A bill (H. R. 8324) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate 4 pieces of condemned cannon and 4 pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the Grant County Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Wisconsin;

A bill (H. R. 8495) granting to John Hill Post, No. 86, of Boonton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls;

A bill (H. R. 8532) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 8590) granting to the Denver, Cripple Creek and Southwestern Railroad Company a right of way for a railroad through the South Platte and Plum Creek forest reserves, in the State of Colorado.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 137) granting an increase of pension to William W. French;

A bill (S. 1365) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut;

A bill (H. R. 6) constituting Syracuse, N. Y., a port of delivery;

A bill (H. R. 1743) for the relief of Thomas L. Young; and

A bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill, which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that without the report being formally read it be printed in the RECORD, so that we can see it in the morning.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 6, 7, 11, 21, 22, 29, 30, 34, 35, 43, 62, and 90.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 32, 36, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 50, 53, 54, 55, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 65, 72, 73, 74, 75, 79, 80, 81, 82, 88, and 89; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 19, page 20, of the bill, the word "Kickapoos" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Kickapoos in Kansas"; and in lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"KICKAPOOS IN OKLAHOMA.

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to assist the Kickapoo Indians of Oklahoma Territory who have not accepted their allotments to make improvements upon said allotments as fast as accepted, and to purchase seed, grain, and subsistence for said Indians, $5,000, to be immediately available. The sum of money now in the Treasury of the United States belonging to said Indians shall be retained as a permanent fund, upon which the Treasurer shall pay to said Indians annually interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1895."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And sections 669, 670, and 671, of chapter 27 of Mansfield's Digest of the laws of Arkansas covering deeds, mortgages, liens, and instruments of writing pertaining to real estate are hereby extended over and put in force in said Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory. That the allottees of land within the limits of said Quapaw Agency are authorized to lease the same for a term not exceeding three years for farming purposes or five years for mining or business purposes"; and the Senate agreed to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "Santee," and add at the end of said amendment the following: "And North and South Dakota"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And charge against any funds belonging to said Lower Brule Indians now in the Treasury of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 12, page 39 of the bill, the word "divided" and insert in lieu thereof the word "expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"And not exceeding $1,500 for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of such persons.

"For completing the work of the Puyallup Indian Commission appointed under the act of March 3, 1893, to select and appraise such portions of the allotted lands within the Puyallup Indian Reservation, Wash., as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees, and also that part of the agency tract exclusive of the burying ground not needed for school purposes, and for the purpose of defraying the expenses of said Commission, $4,000, to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the agency tract and allotted lands as provided in said act, to be immediately available; and said Commission shall conclude its work and terminate on or before the 1st day of December, 1896."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate through the Indian inspectors of his Department with the Indians residing on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in the State of Idaho, and with the Indians residing upon the Uintah Reservation, in the State of Utah, for the surrender of any portion of their respective reservations, or for such modification of existing treaties as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, any agreement thus negotiated being subject to subsequent ratification by Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 3 of said amendment, the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and strike out, in line 42 of said amendment, the words "sufficient proof" and insert in lieu thereof the word "conviction"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And said sum shall be in full payment and satisfaction of all claims of the said Campbell or his representatives for said money and lands and interest therein, and the receipt of said Campbell for said sum shall so specify"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and add at the end of said paragraph the following:

"Provided, however, That any person who in good faith prior to the passage of this act has discovered or opened or located a mine of coal or other mineral shall have a preference right of purchase for ninety days from and after the official filing in the local land office of the approved plat of survey provided for by this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and add at the end of said paragraph the following:

"Provided, however, That any person who in good faith prior to the passage of this act had discovered and opened or located a mine of coal or other mineral shall have a preference right of purchase for ninety days from and after the official filing in the local land office of the approved plat of survey provided for by this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and in line 12 of said paragraph, after the word "opened," insert the words "or located"; and strike out, in the last line of said paragraph, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 33, 37, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 56, 64, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 76, 77, 78, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, and 94 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the agreement made yesterday, the Chair lays the river and harbor bill before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WHITE to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. I come, Mr. President, in my speech to what is always a tedious task to me, citations of testimony; but the duty, while a disagreeable one, is rendered necessary in justice to the committee whose report I sustain and to the Senators who act in this matter with it.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] inquired yesterday whether there was any plan for a breakwater at Santa Monica, and if yes, whether it had been referred to the War Department and what the War Department had to say in reference to it. There was a plan, as a matter of course. It was referred to the War Department, although that was entirely unnecessary. The committee in their report have broken away in this matter from the boards of army engineers. They have adopted the opinions of the civil engineers, and in adopting those opinions they have adopted the plan of the civil engineers, and so whether the War Department approved was a matter of little or no consequence to the committee. But the War Department did approve. It was referred, and I have here before me the return of the Chief of Engineers, all of which I will print, and only a little part of which I will read:

The subject of the construction of a harbor of refuge in that vicinity has been fully considered and reported upon; but inasmuch as the letter of January 16 intimates that the committee have already before them the reports previously rendered and desire information only as to specific points, this communication will not repeat the statements of those reports, but will comment briefly upon the points brought up in the letter of January 16.

Q. 1. As to Mr. Hood's location of the breakwater.

A. The location for a breakwater suggested by Mr. Hood appears to be as good as can be selected in the vicinity of the wharf of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Santa Monica.

Let me remark parenthetically it is the exact location made by the board of 1892.

As to the plan of the breakwater.

There is no objection to the plan of the breakwater for the object it is intended to subserve, but the form and area of the vertical sections are not considered the best for that location.

I will remark here that the sections are exactly those of the board of 1892, made for San Pedro. The breakwater for San Pedro was in a much more exposed condition than the breakwater at Santa Monica. And so on. As I say, I will print this document without reading further.

The paper referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of letters of January 8 and 16 from Hon. W. P. FRYE, chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, relative to plan of Mr. William Hood, chief engineer, Southern Pacific Railroad, for the improvement of the harbor of Port Los Angeles (Santa Monica Bay), California, presented by Mr. C. P. Huntington.

In reply to the reference of these papers to this office for report I have the honor to submit the following:

The subject of the construction of a harbor of refuge in that vicinity has been fully considered and reported upon; but inasmuch as the letter of January 16 intimates that the committee have already before them the reports previously rendered and desire information only as to specific points, this communication will not repeat the statements of those reports, but will comment briefly upon the points brought up in the letter of January 16.

Q. 1. As to Mr. Hood's location of the breakwater.

A. The location for a breakwater suggested by Mr. Hood appears to be as good as can be selected in the vicinity of the wharf of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Santa Monica.

Q. 2. As to the plan of the breakwater.

A. There is no objection to the plan of the breakwater for the object it is intended to subserve, but the form and area of the vertical sections are not considered the best for that location.

Q. 3. As to the stone proposed to be used, whether it is good for the purpose.

A. Considering the samples of stone presented, it would appear that the granite from the Declez quarry, 70 miles from Santa Monica, and the stone from Catalina Island are good for the purposes of breakwater construction. The use of the sandstone, while possibly permissible, would not seem to be judicious so long as the other stone is available.

Q. 4. As to the plan of trestle and the method of building the work.

A. It is understood the question refers to the project proposed by Mr. Hood of constructing the breakwater by dumping stone into the sea directly from cars running over the existing wharf of the railroad company and over supplementary trestle work to connect the wharf with the extreme limits of the breakwater.

This is a practical method of construction in case the stone is brought from the interior by rail, but it is quite probable the use of stone from quarries which will not require transportation by rail and which can be dumped from barges over and along the line of the breakwater would be more advantageous and economical.

Q. 5. Estimate of cost according to the plan.

A. The details upon which Mr. Hood's estimates are based are not given, but I have no doubt the totals presented by him are ample for the construction proposed if supply of material, transportation, and method of execution be open to competition.

Suggestions are requested "touching the merits of the matter and the propriety of the passage of a bill relative thereto." The general question of a harbor on the southern California coast has been considered in reports which are before the Committee on Commerce. A further expression of opinion at the present time as to the merits of the proposed work would seem to be prohibited by section 13 of the river and harbor act of August 17, 1894, except to refer in general terms to one or two points. The fundamental one is whether such a breakwater is needed by the commerce of the locality. That is a question of opinion founded on statistics. If Congress should decide to build a breakwater at Santa Monica, it should be so arranged as to be available for general use and should be built by contract after due advertisement and competition.

Very respectfully, yours, your obedient servant,

W. P. CRAIGHILL,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I think it well, if the Senator has no objection, to state where the figures found in the bill, $3,098,000, are obtained, whether from a recommendation of any officer of the United States whatever.

Mr. FRYE. The officers say that it can be built for the figures which are mentioned, $2,848,000.

Mr. WHITE. But my question was directed to the proposition, Where were those figures obtained?

Mr. FRYE. They were obtained from Mr. Hood, and while the Engineer Department say they did not have the details, they were mistaken, because I sent to the Engineer Department these details and they are all carried out away down to the lowest figures. But it would encumber the RECORD to put them in. The Senator from California can examine them at his leisure. This was sent to the War Department.

Mr. VEST. If it does not disturb the line of argument of the Senator from Maine, I should like to call his attention to one matter that came up in yesterday's debate about which I have received some information that comes to me for the first time. The Senator from Maine will remember that I stated the impression was made upon the committee, at least upon my mind, during the examination of this question that about 3 miles from the bar at San Pedro there were 300 fathoms of water, and the Senator from Maine corroborated that by saying that this was the report of the Geodetic Survey. That was my recollection. Am I correct?

Mr. FRYE. Hardly. I did not say from the bar of San Pedro, of the inner harbor.

Mr. VEST. Well, from what point?

Mr. FRYE. From the breakwater.

Mr. VEST. Very good; from the breakwater. Since the adjournment of the Senate—in fact, just before the adjournment—I was shown a map which I saw for the first time, made by the Geodetic Survey, and by the measurements that statement is not corroborated as I understand that map. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] had the map and made the measurement in my presence, and upon the scale adopted with regard to that map the statement is not correct. I recollect the statement made by Mr. Corthell to be about 2½ miles, possibly it was 3 miles, but that is not material. The important point is, What does the map of the Geodetic Survey show in regard to the depth of water between 2½ and 3 miles from the breakwater at San Pedro?—because with me that is an important inquiry in this case.

Mr. FRYE. Well, it will be necessary to have those maps in order to see. There is not any chance for any dispute in reference to it—not the slightest under the sun.

Mr. VEST (exhibiting). Here is the map.

Mr. FRYE (examining). On the larger one you can see the figures more plainly.

Mr. WHITE. The map to which the Senator from Missouri has directed attention is the one that I have before me here [exhibiting] and which has been corrected up to April 23, 1896—that is to say, the stamp of the Geodetic Survey is as follows: "Aids to navigation. Corrected from information received to April 23, 1896." It only refers to San Pedro Harbor, and is a pretty elaborate affair. However, I referred to it before. It is the same map I had here during the discussion on a former day.

Mr. CULLOM. What does it show? I inquire of the Senator from California what the map shows as to the depth 3 miles away?

Mr. WHITE. The map shows that in the direction which I may say is the Catalina Island direction, over 7 miles from Point Firmin, the water is 15 and 16 fathoms. Southerly as far as the survey proceeds, about 4 miles, the depth is 14, 8, 19 fathoms, and so on. Due westerly at 3 miles, according to my estimate, it is 75 fathoms, and thence it goes on in a westerly direction until it reaches three hundred and odd fathoms. But the depth differs in different directions. As I say, there is Catalina Island on southerly [indicating]. It is over 7 miles from the point. It is only 15 fathoms. It is not possible to build the breakwater at the exact point where the harbor is, but some distance farther inward toward San Pedro.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I can see how very easily confusion is brought into this matter by this map, and I am very glad my attention was called to it by the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from California measures away off in the first place to the southeast. Then he measures away off to the west up here [indicating]. He is very careful not to measure to the southwest, from which the wave line comes. If he will put his compasses on this map and take the wave line, which is southwest, he will find that it gets into deep water very shortly. I should like to have the other maps that were here. [The maps were brought into the Chamber.]

Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator will find that I have not gone into the deep water southwest from that point.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know what the scale is here. Measuring from the southwest you get 240 and 242 and 288 fathoms, but I can not tell how many miles it is from this map.

Mr. WHITE. It is about 3¼ miles. That is not southwest. It is westerly.

Mr. FRYE (indicating). No; that is the coast. That is southwest. That is the trend of the wave line [indicating]. You follow the trend of the wave line and when you get 3¼ miles you are in nearly 300 fathoms of water. You are precisely where that picture which was here yesterday of the red line and the blue line shows you to be. There is no chance for mistake about it. There is no purpose in measuring in any direction whatever except in the southwest direction, because that is the wave line. It makes no difference about the other line—the westerly line, or the southerly line, or the easterly line; it is the wave line that is to be examined into.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Maine tell me, in view of the fact that the breakwater keeps out the waves and it is admitted by his own engineer that the section provided by the Government engineer is sufficient, what difference it makes with reference to where the waves come from as long as they are excluded from the harbor?

Mr. FRYE. It makes a wonderful difference. When the same board recommends the attachment on top of the breakwater of a railroad track and to the breakwater of wharves it simply shows that they were mistaken about the southwest wave line, because it is utterly impracticable.

Mr. WHITE. I fail to see the connection. But I want to attract the Senator from Maine to another statement he made yesterday which seems to me to belong to the poetical side of this controversy. He referred to waves 40 and 50 feet high. If his information——

Mr. FRYE. I did not refer to waves 40 and 50 feet high. I am as familiar with waves as the Senator from California, but I have seen, as I presume he has seen, waves breaking on a rock running more than 40 feet high.

Mr. WHITE. Of course; they might break on a rock 200 feet high.

Mr. FRYE. I am sorry to be interrupted in this way.

Mr. WHITE. Excuse me.

Mr. FRYE. It is out of the entire line of my remarks.

Mr. WHITE. Excuse me.

Mr. FRYE. I said when these great waves from the Pacific Ocean struck that barricade made by the engineers 10 feet out of water the wave would break over it 40 or 50 feet high. I never said there was a wave 40 or 50 feet high. I think no one who ever saw a wave coming on to the shore will dispute my statement.

I wish now to call attention to the testimony given before the committee by Mr. Huntington, the "individual" referred to by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], the "man of greed" referred to by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. He is not bulling the stock markets nor bearing them. He is not cornering wheat nor flour. He is engaged in enormous enterprises, the results of which are building up the commerce of this Republic, and in all his enterprises he is successful. So if he be greedy the reasons which induced him to change from San Pedro to Santa Monica are worthy of the consideration of the Senate. He says on page 31:

A little railroad was built from Los Angeles down to this little lagoon. Later the Southern Pacific followed the same line that had been followed by those who preceded it and bought a small road that was built from Los Angeles to San Pedro. The company made the large improvements there and purchased San Pedro Point. I myself paid but little attention to this until they commenced building a pier outside of the little inside lagoon (or inside harbor) out into the open sea. The Government engineers, looking out for a harbor in that region of California, naturally drifted into the line followed by the small traders whom I have before mentioned. When I went to look at the location of the pier that was pointing out into the open sea, I decided at once that it was a place where a pier could not be sustained. I procured the Government Coast Survey maps and charts and made the best examination I could of San Pedro, and was confirmed in my opinion; and I believe the Government engineers would never have thought of locating a deep-sea harbor at that point excepting for the money that had already been invested there in local building up and improvements, and the interest that the people of Los Angeles had because of the old associations and traditions connected with that place.

I went to Santa Monica and made as thorough an examination as I could there. I asked Colonel Crocker to go over and examine the two locations, and he was in perfect accord with me in thinking that San Pedro was about as bad as it could be and that Santa Monica was probably the best anywhere for probably a couple of hundred miles of seacoast. I asked Mr. Hood, our chief engineer, to make a thorough investigation, which he did, and he also reported that Santa Monica was very much the better location for a deep-sea harbor; that a larger area of protected harborage could be acquired there than at San Pedro, while the holding ground was much better, and the harbor, in short, would be very much safer. For my part, I do not believe that any harbor can be constructed on the plans proposed that will protect San Pedro from the terrible southern storms that blow up against Point Firmin.

When such winds strike vessels lying there if they should drag their anchors they would certainly be destroyed on the rocky bluffs at Point Firmin. At Santa Monica we have a fine seabeach with perfect holding ground, and since we located at Santa Monica I have often examined the headlands and my judgment has been strengthened and confirmed that we had selected the best, in fact the only place for a safe harbor in the neighborhood of Los Angeles.

At any rate, my belief in Santa Monica was so strong that we left something over $1,000,000 of investment in San Pedro and went to Santa Monica, where we had no property excepting a small road used mostly for excursions, and invested there something like $1,000,000 in building a pier and other improvements necessary to accommodate the commerce there. During the three or more years that we have been there shipping has been coming to the pier almost every day, and there has not been one day when ships could not put on and take off cargo at our pier. The steamer San Benito, drawing 27 feet of water, and many other vessels drawing 25 feet, have been going to that pier regularly for years. What we want is the very best harbor to accommodate the commerce that is sure to come there, as the port for Los Angeles must be used for a very large area of country, to include the Pacific Coast, the commerce as far east as El Paso, which includes nearly all of New Mexico, all of Arizona, southwestern Utah, much of southern Nevada, and all of that beautiful though not large area of country lying south of the Sierra Nevadas and west of the San Jacinto, probably one of the most beautiful spots upon the earth's surface. The growing city of Los Angeles, now containing about 100,000 people, I have no doubt will in time be a city extending to the northwest, which will cover its own present limits and also Santa Monica. I believe that in twenty-five years a continuous, well built-up city will extend from the present city of Los Angeles to the shores of the sea at Santa Monica. Such a city ought to have a harbor of its own.

There is a nice little village at San Pedro at present; considerable improvements have been made there; and I should hope the Government would keep accommodations there for the small water craft they now have; but I do not see why they should have anything more than that to accommodate the traffic that would go there. The great deep-sea harbor for southern California I believe will be, as I know it ought to be, at Port Los Angeles.

Much has been said about the accommodations of other roads there; but I must say that I believe those who say that know better. At least, those who have been there must know better, and those who have not are, at least, mistaken; for, as I have said, I will agree to put ten other tracks along under the bluff where the tracks of the Southern Pacific are now built, on the same level as those, at $10,000 a mile for each track. Other roads which want to use our tracks can use them on the same conditions that we do; that is, paying interest on a portion of the track according as their business compares with that of the Southern Pacific Company. If they wish to use the pier of the Southern Pacific Company it can be used in the same way; and when I say ten tracks it means that there would be twelve tracks there, and that is more than will be wanted in the next fifty years, for there is hardly a limit to the tonnage which can be taken over twelve tracks.

I do not bother myself a great deal about what the people of Los Angeles think or say. I said before that I did not care what they thought or said. The ships of Maine have more interests in this great harbor of refuge than the ships of Los Angeles to-day, and no one can tell what the people of Los Angeles do think. We have had some of them before our committee. One day they think one way and the next day they think the other way. A year ago they held a Congressional convention and put the candidate on a plank for the expenditure at San Pedro, and a week ago they held a convention in the same district for Los Angeles, and they put the same candidate on a plank for Santa Monica. So it is not of much consequence.

Mr. BERRY. The platform did not name Santa Monica.

Mr. FRYE. It named the appropriations that are to be made by Congress, which are for Santa Monica and San Pedro.

Mr. BERRY. I read it last night in a Los Angeles paper, and it said in favor of all harbors.

Mr. FRYE. Ah! What did that mean?

Mr. BERRY. It did not name Santa Monica.

Mr. FRYE. What does the Senator think that means?

Mr. BERRY. I stated it correctly——

Mr. FRYE. As a matter of course it means just what I said, for the two harbors named in the pending bill, which meant putting in a plank for the expenditure of $3,392,000 at Santa Monica and San Pedro, and it could not have meant anything else, and he understands that it so meant.

While I do not propose to go over any of the testimony, I wish to give a few words that were said before the committee by Mr. Cole, who was formerly a United States Senator from California. He is known personally to a good many of the Senators present, and by reputation to all of them. Senator Cole said:

I have been in California forty-seven years and upward, and I have looked at this matter a good deal in relation to this harbor proposition. I have studied it on information derived from numerous masters of vessels, from shipmasters who have sailed on that coast from the time of Dana's Two Years Before the Mast. I think he mentioned in that book that the southeast winds are the dangerous winds along that coast and that this very harbor of San Pedro is absolutely and necessarily exposed to the southeast winds, whether a breakwater is there or not. A breakwater can not be built so as to break the effect of southeast winds. They are the dangerous winds, as is proved by numerous wrecks of vessels at this very point of San Pedro—wrecks caused by these very southeast winds. We build the roofs of our houses to guard against danger for a few days in the year. We build breakwaters against dangers which may last only a few days in the year. But there is the point of danger. If a vessel were anchored out there [indicating San Pedro on the map] on this rocky foundation, or even supposing there was the best kind of holding ground, and if one of those southeast winds rises, how is that vessel to get out?

The CHAIRMAN. She will get out of the water and go ashore.

Mr. COLE. Inevitably she will. You may build a breakwater to cost $4,000,000, or four times four millions, but when the vessel is caught inside there (in San Pedro Harbor) she is inevitably driven ashore, as many vessels have been at that point and in that way.

Now I propose to cite to a limited extent from Mr. Corthell, the engineer. I do not know that I will, however. I have marked with red the citations I intended to make, and I will state that in every respect he sustains the harbor at Santa Monica, the breakwater, and attacks the harbor at San Pedro. With the permission of the Senate, I will print without reading—for I confess I detest reading anything—the passages that I have marked, commencing on page 4 of the hearing before the Senate committee June 19, 1894, running through to page 9, and then a summing up, commencing on page 11 and closing on page 14. If there is no objection I will print those extracts as a part of my remarks without reading them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

The winds through the summer months are light, and the sea within the area bounded by these islands is quite smooth; the weather is usually calm. From November to April there are occasionally heavy seas from on-shore winds; those from the northeast and the northwest are usually sudden and strong, but those harbors lying under points of land are protected and the sea is not seriously disturbed. It came under my observation, fortunately, while making these examinations, to witness the effect of a violent wind from north-northwest, which prevailed for several days while I was at Port Los Angeles (Santa Monica). At the pier of the Southern Pacific Company, which extends nearly a mile into the ocean, the coal steamer from Puget Sound continued at work during the storm, discharging from hatchways into cars without any inconvenience. During the same gale a three-masted schooner of 365 tons was blown ashore at Redondo, which, with a north-northwest wind, is on the lee shore of this indentation of the coast. At this writing the schooner is still high and dry on the beach. A photograph showing her position accompanies this statement. The steamer of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company was unable to land at Redondo wharf, but had no trouble in transferring its freight and passengers at Port Los Angeles. I mention this as it was asserted publicly that the steamer could not land at Port Los Angeles.

The direction of the winds during the heavy winter storms is from the southeast, blowing straight up the coast into San Pedro Bay, but is cut off from Santa Monica Bay by the high points of land extending into the ocean at Point Firmin and Point Vincente. Redondo is also protected from this wind. The storms then usually swing around so as to come from the south and southwest, when all the harbors are exposed except so far as the outlying islands modify the swell.

One advantage of Santa Monica Bay is in the depth of the indentation of the coast line. A straight line drawn between Point Dume and Point Vincente is 12 miles out at sea from the shore line at Santa Monica, while at San Pedro the depth between protection points is about 6 miles, and the mouth of the little river at Wilmington is about 1½ miles from this line of exposure.

In considering the question of area to be protected by a breakwater of a given length, a peculiar nautical condition should be considered. It is evident from the testimony of those well informed that the heavy ocean swells and no doubt the strong storm winds at sea start from and come from the southwest, but the wind, being more easily changed than the ground swell of the deep ocean, is deflected on approaching the land by the high mountains of the coast range and comes up the coast from a southeast direction. As a general rule the ocean swell is parallel to the general coast line when it reaches the coast, its direction being modified somewhat by the curves of the local formations and indentations.

The first board of engineers appreciated this important fact and considered it wise to disturb the regimen of the ocean currents as little as possible, and they therefore designed a detached breakwater at San Pedro, so as to allow these northwardly currents to still do their work of transporting the sands out of the harbor. I can but concur with them in this plan as absolutely essential, and I would be willing to predict that a curved breakwater at San Pedro joined to the shore, without an opening, would cause more or less rapidly the deterioration of the protected harbor by shoaling; no doubt also the deposit in the harbor of sedimentary matter and refuse from the bay and from streams and sewers of the town of Wilmington and of San Pedro would lead to a still more rapid shoaling.

Unfortunately at San Pedro the breakwater had to be either connected with the shore or built with an opening about 1,500 feet wide to accommodate vessels and the shore currents. If the latter plan were adopted, the southwest swells—and they are the principal ones to protect against—would enter freely and with marked and annoying disturbance into the harbor, striking at an angle against the wharves if built out to deep water. Under such conditions the harbor could not be considered protected in any sense of the word. The area actually protected beyond the 4½-fathom line would be very restricted and of but little value to commerce. An examination of the small chart of this harbor accompanying House Executive Document No. 41, with the direction of the swell shown on it, will convince anyone of the correctness of the above statement.

The board of 1892 recognized the serious dilemma in which they were placed, and considering it best, no doubt, to take the hazardous risk of the harbor filling up by the action of a closed breakwater, recommended it in order to escape the other serious alternative.

At Santa Monica, or Port Los Angeles, the conditions are favorable to easily meet both of the above conditions of ocean swells and currents. There will be ample area between the 4½-fathom low-water curve and the breakwater. This area is nearly a mile wide, sufficient for handling vessels in and out of the wharves and at the same time admit of the anchoring and maneuvering in the harbor, if required, of a large number of vessels.

The protected area between the 4½-fathom curve and a breakwater built on the 9-fathom curve and 8,250 feet long, as designed by the board of 1891, is over 750 acres, which would accommodate from 250 to 300 vessels at one time, in addition to those lying at wharves extending to the 4½-fathom curve. It is of interest to know the distance from, say, the 3-fathom curve to the 4½-fathom curve, as this gives the measure of usefulness of the harbor for wharf purposes for all craft, large and small. This distance averages about 1,400 feet, and is quite uniform. The wharves might be extended, without unduly interfering with the harbor area, to the 5½-fathom curve, if thought best, which would give an average length of wharf room between this curve and the 3-fathom curve of about 2,800 feet, offering over a mile of wharf room on each wharf. The easy uniform slope seaward is one of the advantages of this harbor. Westward of the end of the breakwater there is a free open space three-fourths of a mile wide for navigation and the unobstructed movement of the ocean currents.

At San Pedro the conditions are not as advantageous; the shore line is not parallel to the breakwater and the mouth of the river, and the jetties required to maintain a channel of about 16 feet into an inner harbor of restricted dimensions occupy much of the useful area and a considerable part of the shore line.

* * * * * * *

At Port Los Angeles the distance from the shore to, say, the 4½-fathom curve is uniformly about one-half a mile and over ground suitable for building wharves the entire length behind the breakwater. At San Pedro it is one-half to five-eighths of a mile at the westerly end of the harbor, but about 1¼ miles along the easterly portion, furnishing a convenient distance for wharf construction at only one point where the Southern Pacific has built its wharf.

That the conditions for building out the wharves at Port Los Angeles are much more favorable than at San Pedro is shown by the two wharves already built at each place by the Southern Pacific Company. At San Pedro the piles had to be placed in openings blasted into the rocky bottom by dynamite; at Port Los Angeles the material is good for driving piles.

They were driven from 10 to 20 feet into the sea bottom, and into sufficiently hard material to sustain any load required. There is no rock bottom and no hidden dangers. The borings, also, out to 50 feet of water show good holding ground for anchors, the material being clay, gravel in patches near the shore, mud, and sand. The material brought up on the piles, whenever for any reason they had to be withdrawn, was stiff mud and sand and clay, as shown by the reports of the pile driving and by statements of the contractors who drove them.

The borings for a deep-water wharf at San Pedro showed generally about the same kind of material, after getting out beyond the rocky bottom of the shoal areas near the shore. There are, however, areas of rocky bottom in deep water, the material lying in ridges, which is dangerous holding ground, as has been shown at various times by the breaking of ground tackle and by the unusual strength and weight of that used by vessels doing business at San Pedro.

It will be seen by an examination of Executive Document No. 41, report of the board of 1892, that the breakwater proposed at San Pedro is and necessarily must be located entirely outside of the protection of Point Firmin, and that in fact the entire deep-water harbor is in the ocean outside of that point.

* * * * * * *

The location at Santa Monica was the result of a long and careful examination, with soundings, borings, and observation, and study of wind and wave conditions. The result of these studies, the accessibility of approaches to deep water, and the short rail haul to Los Angeles were the principal reasons for establishing an ocean terminal at this point. The wharf is one of the most substantial and convenient in the United States. The approaches to this harbor are convenient, not only for the Southern Pacific, but for any other road. There is ample width of foreshore above high water under the bluff for several tracks. The owners of this property along the shore were not willing that any one road should have the entire ownership, and, therefore, they sold only a 50-foot strip to the Southern Pacific Company. The right-of-way maps and the photographs of the vicinity show plenty of room for several more tracks the entire distance. This feature is discussed further on, more in detail, in the review of the report of the boards.

The wharf has been built since the second board of engineers made its examination. In order to satisfy myself of its substantial character, I obtained from the chief engineer of the road the plans and some details, and have also procured some photographs of it. The completion of this wharf to deep water and its commercial use are new and important features in determining the question of the location of the breakwater. The business is already being done there, and has been for nearly a year, to the great advantage of the commerce of this part of the country. The cost of transportation in large vessels from New York to Los Angeles by way of this port is now 75 cents a ton less than by any of the other ports, where the freight has to be lightered.

In my opinion, the building of a breakwater at San Pedro will not accomplish what the Government desires; vessels would no doubt still be lightered there and the business would still go to Port Los Angeles, and a breakwater would ultimately have to be built there.

* * * * * * *

Whichever point is selected for a protected harbor, a breakwater is required. A wharf into deep water would be an unsafe berth for vessels in a southwester, and at other times, under unusually severe conditions of the sea, it would be inconvenient to handle cargoes or to hold vessels alongside of the wharf. The fact that there has been no necessity for vessels to get away from the wharf at Port Los Angeles during the last year is to its advantage, but it can not be proven from this that the necessity will not exist in the future.

After a comparison of conditions and a careful examination and a close study of the reports of the two boards, and taking into consideration the important fact of the existence of an ocean terminal pier, with large and convenient facilities at Port Los Angeles, and of the existence of none at any other point, I am of the opinion that the breakwater to form a fully protected harbor should be built there in preference to any other point.

* * * * * * *

There is no question in my mind about the stability of a properly designed and constructed breakwater at Port Los Angeles.

From the high professional character of the engineers composing the two boards, for whom I have great respect either from personal or professional acquaintance, I am of the opinion that they based their conclusions on a misapprehension of the conditions as they then existed, or formed their judgment without the advantage of those facts of more recent date which came under my observation.

Referring to the facts as I have given them, and supplementing them where necessary by some of less importance, I desire now, with the probability of some repetition, to briefly review some of the features of the reports of the boards.

First. The board of 1892 ignored the current and drift conditions along the shore, as above fully stated, or rather they did not believe the silting of the harbor to any great extent would result from a continuous breakwater connected with the shore.

They differed with the board of 1891 in this, and I think they were in error.

Second. The board of 1892 confused the direction of the wind with that of the swell, and calculated protected or unprotected areas in the two localities according to wind directions rather than swell directions, and to the prejudice of both points, particularly Santa Monica. In this also they differed from the board of 1891, and again I think erroneously.

It requires detailed reference to understand this. In House Executive Document No. 41, page 18, of the report of the board of 1892 they compared exposures by using direction of wind rather than swells, although they copied statements from the report of the board of 1891 and from the statement of Prof. George Davidson, both of which statements are emphatic in the opposite direction (see Executive Document No. 41, page 7, lines 13 to 20, and page 104, where Professor Davidson states, "In our southeasters the swell of the Pacific comes from the southwest.")

Experience at the new wharf at Port Los Angeles since the report of the board of 1892 was made confirms the above statement. The very heavy swells come from a southwesterly direction, moving toward the coast about north 30° east (magnetic course), while the direction of the ordinary swell is about north 54° east (magnetic). These directions are from careful observations at Port Los Angeles wharf.

In designating a breakwater the location should take into consideration both of these directions and be placed so that it would offer the largest amount of protection.

By using wind, not swell direction, from the southeast to determine the protected area behind a breakwater at Santa Monica the board of 1892 erred greatly to the prejudice of this harbor, making the area 221 acres, while from the careful survey of Port Los Angeles made in 1893, and basing the calculations on the length of the breakwater designed for Santa Monica by the board of 1891, and placing it in 9 fathoms, I find a protected area of 750 acres between the 4½-fathom curve and the breakwater.

Third. While it may possibly be a matter of no great importance, as suggested by the board of 1892, to build in the most economical location, yet, as the largest estimate given by the board of 1892 for Santa Monica might be used to the prejudice of that location and has been so used, it is necessary to refer to estimates.

The board of 1891 made a difference in favor of San Pedro of about $700,000—$4,843,440 at Santa Monica and $4,126,106 at San Pedro—which seemed to be a matter of importance to the Chief of Engineers (see Executive Document No. 39, page 2). Mr. Hood, in his statement before the board of 1892 (see Executive Document No. 41, page 108), showed that this difference was due to the fact that the former board had not discovered the best and most economical position for a breakwater in Santa Monica Bay, and that had they done so there was no doubt of the estimates having been in favor of Port Los Angeles. The board of 1892 admits the fact of the lesser volume of work at Port Los Angeles, but the estimate turns out to be in favor of San Pedro, caused by changing the position of the breakwater at San Pedro, bringing a considerable part of it into lesser depths than proposed by the former board, and the adoption, unwisely, I think, of a section of breakwater only about 75 per cent of that of the former board. Even assuming this new section and new location to be correct, the estimate ought not to be used in comparing it with the cost of one at Santa Monica, which was in deeper water and had a much larger section.

Fourth. The board of 1892 have made their breakwater the weakest where it ought to be the strongest, and that is at the extreme low-water line on the sea side. From that point to extreme high water, about 8 feet, and above that to the top of the work, about 10 feet—18 feet in all—they have designed a slope practically 1 on 1—45°. A slope of rubblestone breakwater of this steepness could not possibly stand, even while building the breakwater. The return waves of the swells would continually drag the stones down until they had formed a stable slope of not less than 2 on 1, probably 2½ on 1, as designed by the board of 1891. If this slope which the 1891 board applied to Santa Monica had been applied by the 1892 board to San Pedro it would have considerably exceeded in volume the Port Los Angeles breakwater and consequently cost more.

* * * * * * *

Fifth. It will not be practicable to use the inner face of the breakwater for tracks and wharves, as proposed by the board of 1892. The waves will very often break with violence over the top of the work.

Sixth. In Executive Document No. 41, page 11, second paragraph, the board of 1892 state that the wharf at Santa Monica belonging to the Southern Pacific Company was removed in 1880, "partly on account of its exposure to the western swell." I have inquired into this matter, and find that it was removed because it was old, worm-eaten, and dangerous.

Seventh. The board of 1892 objects to the opening designed by the board of 1891 at San Pedro, on the ground that it would be dangerous to vessels, and refers to the fact of an increase in wrecks at Tynemouth by the building of jetties there. As the United States Government, since the construction of the South Pass jetties, has been, and is now, building them at several points, it is safe to assume that the dangers to navigation by their construction are not excessive. The opening at the mouth of the Mississippi jetties is only one-half that designed by the board of 1891 for San Pedro, and wrecks are almost unknown at the South Pass, even though the commerce is very large.

The statement made by the board in regard to Tynemouth was based on misinformation. The engineer who has been in charge of the work from its inception stated a year after the board of 1892 made its report that:

"A comparison of the casualties that have occurred during the last thirty years to the present time to vessels actually entering, endeavoring to enter, or leaving the Tyne shows the result of the successful effect of the Tyne piers and entrance works, which I believe to be unprecedented or unsurpassed in any other harbor improvement works in the Kingdom or elsewhere."

Eighth. The detailed discussion of the board of 1892 in Executive Document No. 41, page 21, about the cost of royalty and hauling stone, where, they say, "the contractors and the Government are at the mercy of the railway," may be at once disposed of by reference to the statement already made as to the royalty from the land quarries not exceeding 12½ cents per cubic yard, which is guaranteed by Mr. Huntington, president of the Southern Pacific Company, and by the guaranty also given by him that the rate shall not exceed one-half a cent per ton per mile from either quarry—that is, 25 cents per ton from the Chatsworth sandstone quarry and 37½ cents from the Declez granite quarry, the distance of the latter being 75 miles.

Ninth. I must decidedly dissent from the board of 1892 in the condemnation of the trestle method of building the work. I am very confident of its entire success. I have no doubt that the Southern Pacific Company would allow the use of the tracks on its wharf for this purpose and the extension of it straight out to the breakwater in the shape of a substantial double-track trestle. On reaching the breakwater location it could be made to conform by a curve to the line of the work, and both ends of the breakwater could be under construction at the same time. The extremities of the wharf would be quite well protected as soon as the breakwater was well under way, and that portion of it on the line of the work would be strengthened by dumping the stone around the piles to form the base of the breakwater. The sea bottom is excellent for holding ground for piles, and if the trestle is properly built and well braced laterally it is not likely to be disturbed.

The board has alluded (see Executive Document No. 41, page 21) to the great breakwater at Boulogne as being built from barges. The base may have been put in from barges, but the work above water was built from a railroad track from shore to the extreme end in the sea. I know this to be the fact from a personal inspection of the work with the engineer, and from having walked or ridden on a rubble car its entire length. At Ymuiden, Amsterdam, the railroad was employed, also at the mouth of the Maas, at least for all the top work.

I am confident from experience, examination, and study of wave conditions that the trestle plan is better by far.

Tenth. In Executive Document No. 41, page 21, the board of 1892 states that the Catalina route has "unlimited capacity" and the railroad route limited capacity; and on page 32 they do not consider it necessary to investigate in detail the trestle method by which the work is to be connected with the shore, "because it is based upon an assumption which must be regarded as inadmissible, that the structure is to be completed in nine hundred working days," requiring "a quarry output of 3,000 cubic yards per working day."

I have already stated that from the two quarries available 5,000 tons per day, about 3,700 cubic yards, can be easily quarried, loaded, hauled, and unloaded. I have no doubt of it whatever, and I am satisfied that the railroad company would agree to do this, or even more, if it had the contract with this requirement.

Eleventh. In order to settle some of the important questions discussed unfavorably for Santa Monica, or Port Los Angeles, by the board of 1892, and to form my own judgment by appeal to the highest authority in the matter,

I called on Mr. Huntington, president of the Southern Pacific Company, in San Francisco, and asked him to give you, through me, a definite guaranty in regard to—

(1) The royalty on the stone from the land quarries controlled by his company.

(2) The rate on stone haul.

(3) His willingness to permit other railroad companies to reach the harbor at Port Los Angeles, where interference with his tracks or right of way might be necessary.

* * * * * * *

I can now assure you on all these points.

Mr. FRYE. I will also, immediately following that, print a résumé by Mr. Corthell.

SANTA MONICA OR SAN PEDRO?

First. Santa Monica (Port Los Angeles) is a deep indentation of the coast line 12 miles inland from the headlands. San Pedro is a headland itself and the dike must necessarily be in the open ocean beyond it.

Second. The sea slope at Santa Monica is gentle; that at San Pedro is steep. The storm waves are modified by the Santa Monica slope, but are not by the San Pedro slope.

Third. The country back of Santa Monica Canyon (Port Los Angeles) is high, deadening the winds for some distance seaward as they approach the shore; it also protects the harbor from violent northerly winds. The headland on the southeast of Santa Monica furnishes some protection against the southeast winter storm winds. At San Pedro none of these three conditions exist, and the winter winds would blow directly into the harbor, even if a breakwater were built.

Fourth. The drift of sand along the shore by the ocean currents would soon shoal a protected harbor formed by a dike connected with the shore at San Pedro, and should an opening to avoid this be left in the dike it would let in the great ocean swell, to the damage of shipping. At Santa Monica the dike is parallel to these shore currents and would cause no deposit, nor would wharves built on piles, as has been proven by experience at the great pier there.

Fifth. The holding ground at Santa Monica is clay, sand, and gravel; at San Pedro there are large rocky areas.

Sixth. There is no space for a suitable railroad track under the wave-washed bluff at San Pedro. At Santa Monica there is ample room for a dozen.

Seventh. At San Pedro one railroad company owns nearly the entire approach to the protected harbor, and also nearly all the land adjoining it. At Santa Monica the same railroad owns only a 50-foot right of way, and there remains from 100 feet to 150 feet above high water for other railroads. This company, however, has offered to allow other roads to use its facilities on a reasonable rental.

Eighth. There is now a pier at Santa Monica costing, with its approaches, $1,000,000, where the largest vessels transact their business. At San Pedro there is nothing whatever in the way of harbor facilities.

Ninth. Experience has proven that the favorable conditions at Santa Monica make it entirely practicable to load and unload vessels in almost any weather without inconvenience or delay.

Tenth. Most of the ocean business is between Los Angeles and San Francisco and other northerly points. Santa Monica is 35 miles nearer these points than San Pedro.

Eleventh. Successful experience in transacting commercial business at the great pier at Port Los Angeles makes it evident that even if a breakwater should be built at San Pedro and not at Santa Monica the principal commercial business of southern California would still be done at Santa Monica.

Twelfth. There is no doubt that the opposition to Santa Monica is fomented by local interests at San Pedro—real-estate reasons and the opposition of the Los Angeles Terminal Railway, a small railroad on the east side of Wilmington Harbor, which, however, can not reach a protected harbor at San Pedro without crossing the only navigable channel there by a draw bridge.

Thirteenth. The cost of a breakwater at Santa Monica, as now located, will be less than one on a similar cross section at San Pedro, the latter being $2,885,324, the former $2,848,000.

I am now obliged to read some. The engineer of the Southern Pacific, as was stated yesterday, is Mr. Hood, and the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] and no one else attacks his skill as an engineer. I propose to read this because it is a communication made to Mr. Huntington after the second board of engineers made their report. It is a communication which Mr. Hood never supposed would be brought to the attention of a committee of Congress. He never supposed it would be read in the United States Senate. He never supposed it would be seen by anybody but his employer, Mr. Huntington, and therefore his statements will be taken as conclusive of his opinions. It is dated February 6, 1893.

C. P. HUNTINGTON, Esq., President.

DEAR SIR: I have carefully read Executive Document No. 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session, December 6, 1892, containing the report of the board of engineer officers of the United States Army as to the proposed deep-water harbor at San Pedro or Santa Monica bays.

It is quite natural that the desire of this board of engineers should be to succeed in substantially agreeing with the report of the former board of engineers, published in Executive Document No. 30, Fifty-second Congress, first session, December 19, 1891, that the San Pedro site near Point Firmin, is the proper one.

As is well known to those residing in California who have taken any interest in the matter, the examinations by the last board of engineers, reporting in Executive Document No. 41, were chiefly confined to the taking of verbal and written testimony presented by various parties, most of whom are interested in the several proposed harbor sites, and to a study of the existing Coast Survey charts, and principally to a study of report of the former engineer board, contained in Executive Document No. 30, together with some trifling excursions to various points in San Pedro and Santa Monica bays.

So far as I can learn, but one source of rock supply was examined (Cold Water Canyon), and in fact practically almost no independent work was done by the board in obtaining knowledge of physical facts.

It must be remembered that this is written to Mr. Huntington; not to be read in the United States Senate.

This is somewhat disappointing, as the $10,000 appropriated for their use, together with the time allowed, from July 27 to November 1, 1892, had suggested the expectation that some new and useful information would be obtained by the board of engineers and made public through the regular channels.

There are some points in Executive Document No. 41, and also as compared with Executive Document No. 30, that seem worthy of notice. Quoting Executive Document No. 41, page 5, "The location of such a harbor should be determined principally with reference to the convenient and ample accommodation of deep-draft vessels engaged in foreign trade and the requirements of ships of war, the needs of coastwise navigation and the cost of construction being considered matters of secondary importance."

It is difficult to see why a harbor that would best accommodate the needs of coastwise navigation would not also equally well accommodate deep-draft ships engaged in foreign trade and ships of war. The latter class of ships could shape their course to equally well reach any one of several points on the coast situated within 20 or 30 miles of each other, while the situation of a harbor in reference to the commercial metropolis (Los Angeles) and the coastwise trading vessels would materially affect their interests. Hence the best accommodation of the coastwise navigation would seem to be the proper controlling feature in locating a harbor; and all parties are obliged to admit that Santa Monica best accommodated the coastwise navigation.

As to cost of construction being a matter of secondary importance, the proposition is certainly a novel one, and does not seem to be concurred in by the Chief of Engineers, Brig. Gen. Thomas Lincoln Casey, in Executive Document No. 30, page 2, where special weight is given to the estimated difference of cost for the same arcs of protection in favor of San Pedro of $700,000. As shown in Executive Document No. 41, page 108, this difference of cost in favor of San Pedro as reported by the former board was due to their not having discovered the cheapest and best position for a breakwater in Santa Monica Bay, and had they discovered it their report would, no doubt, have been in favor of Santa Monica Bay, as regards cost of construction. This is practically admitted in Executive Document No. 41, page 23, lines 6 and 7.

The report of cost of breakwater at San Pedro in Executive Document No. 41 has been made to be less than that of any site heretofore considered, including the proposed breakwater in San Monica Bay, near Santa Monica Canyon, by the following methods:

The plan of the position of the San Pedro breakwater has been changed from that recommended by the former board in Executive Document No. 30 in such a way as to bring a considerable part of the breakwater into much less depths than before proposed. This involves the closing of the formerly proposed western entrance and also introduces some uncertainties as to whether the harbor will be shoaled or not, from the effects of the obstructed westward shore current.

In addition the new board have adopted a breakwater cross section much smaller than that adopted by the former board in Executive Document No. 30, and which is related to it at a depth from top of breakwater to bed of the ocean at a depth of 60 feet as 5,232.45 is to 6,825, or but about 76 per cent. Although this new cross section may be a proper one, it certainly accounts, in connection with the new proposed position of breakwater, for the low estimate of quantity of rock and cost of breakwater as given in Executive Document No. 41, page 26, but this estimate should not be used in determining relative cost in comparison with the breakwater sites at Santa Monica Bay, which are computed on the basis of the cross section proposed by the former board in Executive Document No. 30.

Referring to Executive Document No. 41, page 17, advantages for arrival and departure, as regards coasting trade, the only article considered is lumber from northern ports, and the report says: "This difference (of 25 miles in favor of Santa Monica) in distance is, however, not sufficient to affect the coast transportation, and a few hours difference of time is not a matter of importance for this class of freight."

The other classes of coastwise freight and the steamer passenger travel are not mentioned, and for them the Santa Monica site presents great advantages, and the opinion of the board that "there is no essential difference as regards advantages for arrival and departure" would seem to be unfounded.

Executive Document No. 41, page 17, advantages for shelter and handling freight, the comparison of anchorages sheltered at the several breakwater sites is curious in that it gives the San Pedro site the greater sheltered anchorage area by taking into the comparison of the sites all areas to 6 feet of water as "anchorage."

Certainly all anchorage between 27 or 30 feet of water and 6 feet depth should hardly be considered as anchorage in a deep-water harbor proposition.

And he goes entirely through with the report with these criticisms and suggestions. I will print the remainder of the communication without reading further:

The useful anchorage with 30 feet or more of water, called deep-water anchorage by the board, shows in Executive Document No. 41 as 339 acres as against 479 acres at the Santa Monica Canyon breakwater site.

The remark on pages 18 and 19 of Executive Document No. 41, "In Santa Monica Harbor the inner anchorage will be very much diminished by the wharves, which must extend completely across it to reach deep water. This is not the case to the same extent in the San Pedro Harbor," is interesting, first, because it is difficult to see the objection to diminishing or obstructing altogether the shoal-water anchorage, and second, because such anchorage will be obstructed in San Pedro Harbor as much as in Santa Monica Harbor if any individuals or corporations can be found with money enough to build the very long wharves required to reach the 5-fathom curve at San Pedro breakwater, which very long wharves are required to utilize the protected area at all points except at the extreme western part of the protected area, where there is room for one wharf to be built out with about the same length from shore to deep water as is required at the Santa Monica breakwater site.

Executive Document No. 41, page 18: "To compare exposures, it is assumed that so much of the anchorage area as lies to the north of the southeast and northwest lines drawn through the ends of the breakwater is not fully covered from the heavy swells."

This proposition entirely ignores the statement copied from the report of the former board, Executive Document No. 41, page 7, lines 13, 20; also the testimony of Prof. George Davidson, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Executive Document No. 41, page 104, in which he states, "In our southeasters the swell of the Pacific comes from the southwest," which testimony is referred to in Executive Document No. 41, page 7, and which our experience in two heavy storms from the southeast this winter, while building the wharf near Santa Monica Canyon, confirms the very heavy swells which would make a ship liable to break from her moorings, having come squarely from the southwest.

The breakwater site at Santa Monica Canyon is a complete protection from this swell, as is shown by a glance at the chart in Executive Document No. 41, and the statement on page 18 that it had but 221 acres protected is misleading. It has, in fact, 994 acres protected from this swell, of which 479 acres is deep-water anchorage, which seems the only part of the anchorage worth considering at any of the proposed harbor sites.

Regarding the third paragraph on page 18, Executive Document No. 41, comparing the two Santa Monica Bay harbor sites—the statement as to narrow land approach for wharves at the Santa Monica Canyon breakwater site, and that access to it could not be had except at great expense to parties engaged in land transportation—I can only account for such a statement from their imperfect examination by the board, as there is well known to be room for convenient access.

The Santa Monica Canyon site has the important advantage of being protected from the occasional severe northwest winds by the Cahuenga Mountains, which are so efficient a protection that no perceptible increase of ordinary waves can be noticed during such a wind at the Santa Monica Canyon site, while at the site between Santa Monica and Bellona the waves from such a wind are perceptibly heavier and the interior of the breakwater is entirely exposed to them, and farther down the coast at Redondo the wharf was badly wrecked by the effects of such a northwest wind during the fall of 1892, while there was nothing at the Santa Monica Canyon site the same day to prevent the construction of the new wharf there from going on as usual.

The remarks in fifth paragraph of page 18, Executive Document No. 41, as to the landing facilities in Santa Monica harbor sites being entirely within the exposed area, are based on the same misunderstanding as to the facts of the case by the last board of engineers, as above referred to, as to the direction of heavy swell during southeasters.

The former board, reporting in Executive Document No. 39, understood this matter better and anticipated no such imaginary difficulties.

Regarding the use of trestles for breakwater construction which the new board criticise on page 22, Executive Document No. 41, it is hardly to be decided in so offhand a manner, and the opinion of the former board is in favor of a trestle method of construction, per page 9, Executive Document No. 39.

So far as the possibility of constructing a breakwater in nine hundred working days is concerned, the new board seems to consider it impossible to do this, because it involves handling and delivery of 140 loaded cars of rock daily, or, as they express it, "a length of at least 1 mile of loaded cars."

It must be that the members of the board are not experienced in transportation by rail, as there would be no possible difficulty in handling this number of cars daily, as any railroad man knows. It may very possibly be that the construction of the breakwater would require a longer time than nine hundred working days if appropriations for the work were made in the usual manner.

I agree entirely with the last paragraph in page 22, Executive Document No. 41, "that there is no increased cost of large stone over small stones with proper appliances, excepting in the fact that the large stone above the water level has to be carefully placed, at increased cost over the dumping of the rock to be used below the water level."

There is an item of quarrying the large stone, however, that makes it cost more than quarrying the smaller stone, viz, at the time the large stone is required for the facing of the upper portion of the breakwater there would be no available use for the smaller stone; and as any ordinary quarry will develop a large percentage of small rock along with the large rock required, there would require to be many more cubic yards of rock quarried than would be obtained in large pieces and the smaller rock would have to be removed to keep the quarry clear, thus making the cost of quarrying the large rock more expensive than that of quarrying rock for the portion of the breakwater under water, which could be built of large and small rock as it happened to come in the quarrying, within certain limitations of size.

The remark at top of page 23, Executive Document No. 41, is not exact as a comparison of breakwater areas as along their axes, and should be supplemented by the statement that the length of the proposed San Pedro curved proposed breakwater is 8,200 feet, as against 8,390 feet at the Santa Monica Canyon breakwater, and the length of the 5-fathom line protected from the southwest swells by the San Pedro breakwater is about 2,900 feet, as against the same at the Santa Monica Canyon breakwater of about 2,200 feet.

As to the capacity for defense, page 23, Executive Document No. 41, it would be very interesting to know the reasons in detail for this conclusion.

In regard to the proposition to use the breakwater at San Pedro for a railway constructed along it from the shore and wharves projected along it from the inner face of the breakwater, Executive Document No. 41, page 18, paragraph 4—the maintenance of a railway on a rock embankment in about 9 fathoms of water, with the embankment but 10 feet above high water, will certainly be a novelty, and an interesting one during the prevalence of southwest swells accompanying a southeasterly gale.

The construction of wharves along this inner face of the breakwater will be excessively expensive, the water being from 56 to 62 feet deep at high tide along the most useful part of this inner face.

The problem of getting a railway to the shore end of the San Pedro breakwater would be a serious one, the entire shore from the breakwater to Firmin Point at San Pedro inner harbor being an essentially rocky bluff from 50 to 60 feet high, washed by a depth of several feet of water at high tide, which bluff makes the building of any wharves into the sheltered harbor from the table-land above an expensive matter for construction, maintenance, and operation.

The difficulties are serious enough to raise the question as to whether the proposed harbor if built at San Pedro would ever be used for unloading direct from vessels to wharves at all in the near future, but rather find its only usefulness as a harbor of refuge and safe anchor for deep-sea vessels, their cargoes being lightered into the inner harbor and unloaded at present wharves in the same manner as at present, at great expense.

This feature of a rocky bluff shore throughout the protected anchorage at San Pedro breakwater site, with no dry land whatever between the foot of the bluff and the ocean at high tide, coupled with the great distance between the 5-fathom line and the shore throughout most of the protected area (ranging from about three-eighths of a mile at the extreme west end of the breakwater to 1¼ miles from Firmin Point to the 5-fathom line opposite the easterly end of the breakwater) would raise the question whether the practicability of building wharves at San Pedro from the shore to and beyond the 5-fathom line in the proposed protected area had been considered at all by the various boards of engineers who have reported upon the breakwater sites.

Regarding Prof. George Davidson's memorandum, Executive Document No. 41, page 105, Santa Monica Bay, his experience on the "West Beach" was evidently west of Santa Monica Canyon, a short distance beyond which point to the westward the bluffs reach to ordinary high water, and the beach is often impracticable for wagons in ordinary high tides without storms.

There is no record of any such wave action as he speaks of at the Santa Monica Canyon breakwater site and from there toward Santa Monica.

Regarding the petitions submitted to the board and appended to Executive Document No. 41, the only one signed by a large number of merchants of large capital is evidently the one in favor of Santa Monica, on pages 112, 113.

Yours, respectfully,

WILLIAM HOOD, Chief Engineer.

Mr. President, Santa Monica is an old story. In the river and harbor act of 1882 we provided for a commission to make an examination of Santa Monica Harbor, and Colonel Mendell was assigned to the duty of making the examination. I have his report, page 2209. It is dated "United States Engineer Office, San Francisco, Cal., November 22, 1882," and I want Senators to hear what he says, because he was chairman of the first board, the report of which has been cited here as in favor of San Pedro. Colonel Mendell says:

Los Angeles is the principal town in southern California. It now enjoys great prosperity and is growing rapidly. It is supposed to have a population numbering more than 15,000 and less than 20,000.

It is 100,000 to-day. That was in 1882.

It is 18 miles distant in an easterly direction from Santa Monica, and is connected by a railroad. Santa Monica is the point of the coast nearest to Los Angeles. It is a village of a few hundred inhabitants, pleasantly situated, facing the sea, on a table-land 60 or 70 feet above the sea level.

A detailed hydrographic survey of the bay was completed in 1876 by a party under the command of Lieut. Commander H. C. Taylor, United States Navy, assistant, United States Coast Survey. This survey includes the hydrography of the whole bay, giving not only a chart of the landing but of the approaches. The fullness of this survey dispenses with the necessity of repeating it at present.

This chart shows a depth of 3 fathoms at a quarter of a mile from shore, which deepens evenly to 10 fathoms at 1½ miles. To a depth of 30 fathoms the slope of the bed of the sea is about 40 feet to the mile.

This is Colonel Mendell. Again:

It appears from this description that Santa Monica is exposed to the waves which approach the coast from the west and southwest. If the access of these waves were cut off the bay would become a harbor which might have any desired capacity. As an engineering proposition, a project of this kind appears to be entirely feasible. A breakwater judiciously located would secure the result.

An anchorage ground over which, for a width of about seven eighths of a mile, the water would be between 3 and 8 fathoms could be protected by a breakwater in 8 fathoms of water. A greater width would result from the location of the breakwater in deeper water. The length of the structure would be determined by the extent of the area which it is desired to protect. While the project is entirely feasible, it must necessarily be costly.

Then he says:

Santa Monica at present has no commerce.

Consequently he does not recommend an appropriation, but in the strongest terms he commits himself to the making of a perfect harbor at Santa Monica by a breakwater.

He alludes to the careful survey made by Captain Taylor. I am aware that the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], with the shrewdness of a skillful lawyer, put Captain Taylor's statement into his speech. He thought to entomb it in the bowels of that speech, where no resurrection could happen to it; but I prefer, when Captain Taylor's investigation for its thoroughness has been indorsed by Colonel Mendell, to put his statement into the case here. He says:

A creek makes into the land at Wilmington and San Pedro, affording a shelter to small vessels, and expensive improvements have been carried on for several years by the army engineers, which have slightly benefited it, but, at the best that can be hoped, it can never have the accommodations of a great harbor. A breakwater to include sufficient area of shelter could be built, but it would include some shoals and rocks inside of it, and would also receive whatever discharge of sediment there would be from the creek. This creek was used in the beginning by schooners and small craft which were sufficient for the trade of the then unsettled country. The circumstances of its location, favorable for such craft, are unfavorable for the formation of a great seaport such as the commerce of southern California now demands.

We come now to that locality which appears specially to be favored by nature, Santa Monica.

The Bay of Santa Monica is, in its combination of natural features, unique on the Pacific coast. Here the depth of water increases from the beach outward with an easy and gradual slope for several miles.

Did the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] hear that? Captain Taylor says that "the depth of water increases from the beach outward with an easy and gradual slope for several miles"; and Colonel Mendell says that Captain Taylor made an exhaustive examination of this harbor.

Here a breakwater can be established to inclose and shelter a capacious harbor, without being in water so deep as to make its construction impracticable or even difficult.

The marked feature of the Pacific coast is the steep slope of the bottom as we move from shore to seaward. This rule has few exceptions, and it results that along the entire coast a breakwater to inclose a sufficient sheltered area would have to be placed in such deep water as to be impossible of construction.

Among the few exceptions is the Bay of Santa Monica. It is a remarkable coincidence that the coast line in a deep curve here approaches nearer than at any other point to Los Angeles and to the fertile region of which it is the depot.

The Bay of Santa Monica has along most of its shore line this quality of gradual deepening of the water, the bay of itself being occupied by a submarine plateau unique upon the Pacific coast. But certain portions of the shore line of the bay have other advantages in addition. The town of Santa Monica is situated at a point on the shore near a neighboring range of mountains, against or toward which blow the only winds of violence. The force of the wind blowing against a great barrier is deadened for some distance to windward of such barrier, and this probably accounts for the well-known fact that the winds at Santa Monica do not blow with violence. The swell which rolls in at this anchorage is much modified, even in the worst weather, by the effect of the large islands to seaward, and by the deep recessed position of this portion of the bay shore.

I have had considerable experience in this bay while conducting the surveys carried on there, and have lain at anchor through all seasons of the year at and near Santa Monica on the Government vessel which I commanded. I have never seen any weather in which a vessel could not ride at her anchors there in safety, and but few occasions when unloading at a wharf was impracticable.

Then he goes on to argue the necessity of a great harbor and the absolute necessity and practicability of locating it at Santa Monica. Captain Taylor is now the president of the Naval War College at Newport. At the request of the committee I wrote to Captain Taylor informing him that there was to be a hearing before the committee on such a day and asking him if he would not be present and give his testimony. He received the letter too late for the hearing. He wrote me that he would come at any time the committee desired, but that he must be authorized to do so by the Secretary of the Navy. A telegram was sent to him the next day, in order to save him from coming if possible, to know whether or not he had changed his mind any about Santa Monica since he made the report, and he said in a telegram:

Nautical advantages excellent. Natural location great port. My opinion strong.

Now, where can you get better testimony than that? There is the man who made all the surveys, the man under whose surveys these charts were made, a man utterly indifferent. When there was no controversy, when there were no two sides, when there was no contest on the one side and no contest on the other, when no question was presented to the Senate and no question to the Committee on Commerce, this naval officer gives his opinion selecting above all within 200 miles, and he familiar with every mile of it, Santa Monica, and giving his reasons.

I received some time ago a letter from General Miles, dated Chicago, Ill., May 29, 1894. He is the present General of the United States Army. He says:

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have been informed that there is a movement on foot to improve the harbor of Santa Monica, Cal. I desire to say that I was for several years in command of the Department of Arizona, also in command of the Division of the Pacific, and for more than two years had my headquarters at Los Angeles, Cal. That city is the center of communication and commerce for that whole Southwest district of country, including southern California and Arizona. There is in prospect a road running northwest that will connect it with Utah. Within 16 miles, in a direct line, is the harbor of Santa Monica, which will undoubtedly be the principal port of entry on the southern Pacific coast.

I have had excellent opportunity for observing the condition of the climate and the effect of storms in all seasons of the year, and have no hesitation in saying that it has many advantages to make it a very important port of entry. The topographical features of the coast are such as to give, to some extent, natural protection, and, with the assistance that could be given to it by either the Government or private enterprises, will make it, in my opinion, a perfectly safe harbor and good anchorage for vessels. There is sufficient depth of water for ships of any draft, and the pier that was built many years ago and the very large and important one that was recently built have demonstrated the capacity of such constructions to stand the severest storms.

I would recommend a liberal appropriation by the Government to improve what nature has already done, and what private enterprises have so generously contributed far in the advance of the work which would naturally fall to the Government to perform, as the improvement of the harbor is of national importance.

In the immediate vicinity of Santa Monica there are very high and commanding bluffs upon which land batteries of mortars and rifle guns could be placed, which would render the harbor easily defended.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NELSON A. MILES,
Major-General, United States Army.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CAFFERY. What is the date of the letter from General Miles?

Mr. FRYE. It is dated May 29, 1894.

I had thought to cite other testimony, but I am inclined to think I have presented, as well as I can, the views of the Committee on Commerce and that it is unnecessary for me to present any more testimony. But it is necessary for me to say a word in reference to the amendment, which seems on its face to be fair. I refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], in which he proposes a board who shall thoroughly investigate these two harbors and report, and then authorizes the Secretary of War to construct by contract a harbor wherever the board may report.

What objection have I to that proposition? I do not believe there is more than one chance in ten of any board now reporting in favor of San Pedro. Why not accept it, then, and take my nine chances? Because I dare not trust that one chance in ten. Why not? Because if that chance should be taken you would be throwing away $3,000,000. You might just as well dump it into the Pacific Ocean. Before that board can make its report the $392,000 provided in the pending bill for the inside harbor at San Pedro will be expended; the inside harbor will have 18 feet of water at low water, and the outside harbor, with the inside harbor at San Pedro, is an absolute absurdity.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that the appropriation for the inside harbor might in the meantime be suspended to await the report of the board. Then the objection he suggests would be obviated.

Mr. FRYE. I suggested to the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] that both of these items should be stricken out of the bill and that we risk the future in relation to the harbors, and he respectfully declined the proposition. They insist upon the inside harbor; they insist upon that appropriation, and I say I do not believe any member of the Committee on Commerce can be found other perhaps than the Senator from California who will assert that after the improvement is made in the inside harbor at San Pedro there is any necessity, so far as that commerce is concerned, of any outside harbor at all at that point.

Then, again, Mr. President, I think that Senators know something about Mr. Huntington. He has made his deliberate choice, has he not, between San Pedro and Santa Monica? He has sacrificed a million dollars or more in making it. Do you suppose he is going to change back again to San Pedro? Does any Senator suppose that he is not going to have a great harbor at Santa Monica?

Mr. VEST. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator to state that if the engineers secure the depth of water which they say they can secure by the expenditure of $392,000 upon the inside harbor at San Pedro it is absurd to contemplate the construction or making of an outside harbor?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. VEST. Is that because the inside harbor would answer all the demands of commerce when so improved?

Mr. FRYE. All of the demands of commerce that ever would come to San Pedro. The great commerce of the Orient is coming to Santa Monica. That Southern Pacific Railroad Company is at Santa Monica; its pier, costing $1,000,000, is at Santa Monica. That commerce, the Senator from California said, was to be created by "one man." That "one man" is there at Santa Monica; he is not going to go back to San Pedro.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, the citizens of Los Angeles—and that is a city which is behind both these improvements, so to speak, if you eliminate Mr. Huntington and the Southern Pacific Railroad and his steamship line there—the citizens of Los Angeles who were before our committee said that they were deeply interested in an outside harbor in the vicinity of that city, because they had commenced with the idea that Los Angeles was to be the entrepôt for this continent, instead of San Francisco, of the eastern commerce, of China and Japan and Asia generally. Now, there is but 3 miles difference in distance between Santa Monica and San Pedro to Los Angeles, as I stated yesterday that it is a triangle, on one side with San Pedro, 3 miles longer than the side to Santa Monica. The great interest, leaving out Mr. Huntington's personal interest and that of his company, with the people of Los Angeles and southern California is to secure an outside harbor at a port which is to receive this Asiatic commerce. If, then, either of these points can be made that entrepôt, it simply becomes a question of expense, which is the cheaper. As I understand the Senator from Maine to say—and I believe it to be true—with $392,000 and a systematic and intelligent improvement of the inside harbor at San Pedro we can secure what these witnesses claimed they were desirous of obtaining.

Now, if Mr. Huntington—and I am frank to say from all I have heard and know of him, that I believe the Senator from Maine is right—if Mr. Huntington chooses for his own purposes and those of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to go on and construct his outside harbor at Santa Monica, he has the unquestioned right to do it; and I hope that he will do it, because, of course, two outside harbors would be better than one. But the point with me is the expenditure of the money of the people of the United States, and if we can obtain an outside harbor and all the benefits of an outside harbor at San Pedro by improving the inside harbor for $392,000, it saves the difference between that and $3,000,000 at that point alone. Besides that, $3,000,000 expended, if done by Mr. Huntington at Santa Monica, is no charge at all upon the Treasury of the United States.

I am perfectly willing, if the Senate comes to the conclusion, against my judgment, that this outside harbor should be placed at one point or the other, to risk the judgment of another board, eliminating the member from the Corps of Engineers for the reasons I gave yesterday, and I am willing to make this appropriation contingent absolutely on the report of that board.

Mr. FRYE. I should not have said ten words more if the Senator had not interrupted me.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. FRYE. When I said that no one who knew Mr. Huntington doubted that the deep-water harbor would be at Santa Monica, I said it without fear, because I did not believe that a man, a United States Senator, would take advantage of the fact that he believed that Mr. Huntington would build a harbor which it was the duty of the United States to build, and let Mr. Huntington do it. He is as much entitled, with the commerce which he creates, to the protection of the United States and to the appropriation of moneys for rivers and harbors as is any man or any body of men. While I stated boldly that I had no doubt that he would do it, I did it only because I did not believe that a United States Senator would, on account of that statement, declare, "Well, then, let him do it, and we will save $3,000,000." That is too small a thing to charge to a United States Senator.

Mr. President, those are the reasons why I object to this proposed new board. We have had this fight—at any rate, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], one of the old members of the committee, and I have had this fight—on our hands for years. We wish to be divested of it, never to hear from it again.

I hope that the Senate, for the reasons given, will vote down the amendment which the Senator from California has proposed and will agree to the amendment reported by the committee, and that this contest will be ended.

I thank the Senate for the patience with which they have listened to me and apologize to them for the wearying of them.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the discussion has taken an exceedingly wide range. I thought I had some knowledge of the coast of California and of the wishes of the people of that State, but I must admit that I have been somewhat mystified by the discussion which has taken place during the past three or four days upon the floor of the Senate.

I find in examining the report of the Committee on Commerce that it gives evidence of great labor and great research, and contains a fund of information obtained by that committee, which is entitled to the thanks of the Senate and of the people of our country.

I notice that there are about 400 different appropriations made for the improvement of harbors, of rivers, of estuaries, and of lakes, and for the removal of bars at the entrance of harbors. I notice that these 400 appropriations are divided among 36 States of the Union, and that embraced in these appropriations are three great rivers, the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Ohio.

I also find in looking at the estimates made that almost every one of the recommendations of the committee and every one of the proposed appropriations, with, perhaps, the single exception of the one now under discussion, was made upon the estimates and recommendations of the United States Government engineers. It would have been a herculean task—it would have been practically impossible for the committee to have intelligently arrived at the various recommendations they have made—without the report of the Government Corps of Engineers, who have been detailed for this purpose.

The chairman of the Committee on Commerce has a national reputation, well earned by twenty-five years' duty in Congress. He is perhaps as well equipped to perform the duties of that committee as any other Senator who ever held a seat on this floor. While I differ with him in his conclusions upon this proposition, yet he could hardly do anything which would dissipate the admiration I have for him for his advocacy in former years of our American shipping and his defense of American industries and American institutions. He is deserving of and has the thanks of the people of this country for his indefatigable energy and zeal in whatever he undertakes. He is a positive man, a man of force of character and determination; and it was unfortunate, perhaps, for the people of California that in his first visit to the Pacific Coast he went to Santa Monica, and there saw the beauties of that delightful place, for the town of Santa Monica and its surroundings are not excelled by any place in any State or any country in the world.

Yesterday when I heard him picture in such glowing language the beauties of Santa Monica I asked my friend on the right, who accompanied him on that journey [Mr. DAVIS], what was the month of the year in which the visit was made. He informed me it was the month of November. I could then readily understand that one leaving Maine in November, with its bleak, cold, stormy coast, on which tossed the angry waves of the Atlantic, leaving a crest of frozen spray wherever they might strike on those rocks, and going to Santa Monica would be most deeply impressed with the place as he looked out upon the broad Pacific at that time of the year, the most delightful in California. That season of the year on the Pacific is what August and September are on the Atlantic. It is the Indian summer. The trade winds have ceased to blow and the angry Pacific, which has been bubbling and boiling during all the summer months, is as quiet as a mill pond in June in the Senator's native State. So I can understand, as he sat on the beach at Santa Monica and there heard the Pacific sing the sunset song of the nation as it washed the western shore of this continent, how he became enamored of Santa Monica, and that nothing that we can ever say or do will dispel his admiration. I might paraphrase a familiar couplet, and say:

> And neither the angels in heaven above
> Nor the demons down under the sea
> Can dissever his love
> From the love he bears—

For Santa Moni[ca]kee. [Laughter.]

Santa Monica will be a part of the city of Los Angeles, and perhaps many a Senator now upon this floor will pay it a visit and there find a delightful home.

The question before us for our consideration is a simple business proposition. California has a coast as long as the distance from Maine to South Carolina—that is, California borders the Pacific for the same distance that the States between Maine and South Carolina border the Atlantic. In the southern part of California there has grown up the great metropolis of Los Angeles—the city of angels. It is located in the midst of one of the richest agricultural, horticultural, and viticultural sections of the country. It has vast and illimitable commercial possibilities; it has undeveloped mining resources; it is the central depot of two great transcontinental railroads, and is their terminus on the western side of this continent—the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad. The population of Los Angeles County has doubled every four years during the past two decades, and yet they come; and the people who come there never return except to visit their friends, for it is the paradise of this country. Its future I shall not attempt to describe, but it is as bright as the midday sun. The railroads I have named are reaching out into Arizona, into New Mexico, into Texas, into southern Utah and southern Nevada, and are bringing the wealth of those great States and Territories into that city.

So the people say, "We want a port of entry, a port of export for these great products." They came to Congress, and Congress assisted them in improving the harbor of Wilmington, at San Pedro, and never was money more judiciously expended or expended with better results than those derived from the Government appropriations made for that port. When they commenced the work in 1872 there was but 2 feet of water upon the bar at the entrance to that harbor; to-day there is 18 feet of water; and the appropriation proposed by the Committee on Commerce of $492,000 will give us, we believe, 22 feet of water. If it does, the harbor is capable of being enlarged and made a great commercial seaport—a harbor where there will be machine shops, graving docks, and all the appliances which are so necessary to foster and encourage a successful commerce.

I want to say, about the enterprise of the railroads which have come into Los Angeles, that it is their competition which has developed that country. It is competition we want in business, in the transportation business, in manufacturing and every other branch of commercial industry. We want that rivalry, that emulation, that energy which commends business people to their patrons. I want to say here that this is no contest or rivalry, as has been intimated, between two railroad companies, and I can not permit to pass unchallenged the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yesterday. That I may not misquote them I shall read from the RECORD.

The Senator from Missouri said:

> Unfortunately, Mr. Huntington is a political factor in California. They test every man's competency and qualification for office there by the question, "Is he for Huntington or against him?" You can not hold a town meeting but what the question is, "Is this man a Huntington man or not a Huntington man?"

Then the Senator from Maine said, referring to some remarks which had been made by my distinguished colleague [Mr. WHITE]:

> This savors of the slogan of the sand lots of the Golden Gate, where the name of Huntington is conjured with to frighten babies, and used by demagogues to make weak-kneed politicians tremble.

Mr. President, I dislike exceedingly to refer on this floor to any gentleman who is not a member of this body. I dislike exceedingly to refer to anyone who is not here to speak and answer for himself. But I say that that charge is a libel upon the fair name of the good people of California, and I should be false to those I represent if I permitted the charge of the Senators from Maine and Missouri to pass unchallenged. The people of California have no prejudices against Mr. Huntington or his associates. I know nothing against Mr. Huntington to his discredit, unless it be his own testimony before a Congressional committee and certain letters which it is alleged he wrote to an associate upon the board of directors of the company with which he was connected. I have no feeling of personal animosity or jealousy or envy toward him; I admire him for his enterprise, for his pluck, for his energy; I admire him for what he has accomplished in his life. I knew him many years ago in California when he was an honored and respected merchant in that State. He left us to come East many years ago, and I do not know much of him, except through general report, since that time. But I repel the charge that the people of California seek office by declaiming against him or his associates, or by advocating that which he desires, or opposing it. The people of California are a cosmopolitan people. There are the representatives of every State in this Union to-day resident in California. They have built up that great empire of the West. They are a broad-minded, liberal people in politics, in religion, and in their business pursuits. They have no such prejudices.

Mr. President, I have but to refer you to the fact that the president of that great corporation was elected governor of that State by the popular vote of the people; I have but to remind you of the fact that he was twice elected to a seat upon this floor. The crowning act of his life was performed before being called to that "bourn whence no traveler returns." He had the courage to become the executor of his own estate while living, and administered its affairs for the benefit of the people. He established a magnificent university of learning, where the humblest child in this land may go and drink from the fountain of knowledge without money and without price. His associates upon that board have been known for their acts of public spirit, of munificence, and of benevolence. The family of Mr. Crocker to-day, to my certain knowledge, are distributing thousands of dollars in charity, and many an old man and old woman, many a sick man and sick woman and helpless child, inmates of hospitals and homes founded through their munificence, can thank them for their humane sympathy and assistance.

Mr. President, the people of California in city and county and State gave most liberally toward building the first transcontinental railroad. They were in sympathy with the promoters, because the latter were in touch with the people at that time, and if to-day our people censure them, it is because they believe they have not been true to their trust, that they have forgotten the common interests and the common bond which unite their interests with the interests of the people of California. That is the reason. If they are censured, it is because they use their great power sometimes to thwart the wishes and desires of the people; but that the name of Mr. Huntington is used to influence the acts of public men in California is untrue. I repeat it, it is a vile slander against the good name and fame of the people of California.

Mr. President, only last week a great State convention met in California. There were in that convention representatives from every town and county in the State. They assembled at the capital, and among the various resolutions they passed was one denouncing what is known as the railroad funding bill. But to show that they had no prejudice against the individual members of that company, except only as to their action in a corporate sense, they nominated for Presidential elector the vice-president of that great railroad company; and, as sure as the sun rises and sets on election day in November next, he will be elected a Presidential elector of the United States.

I did not intend to refer to this, but it has been called out by the charge made here, the unjust charge, that the names of certain men are conjured up as bogy men in California. The charge is without foundation; it is without one bit of truth.

We believe in railroads. We believe that they have the power to develop the great resources of our State as no other agency has. What we complain of is that they prostitute their power to elect to office men whom the people do not want; or that when men are elected to office they use their power to influence them to subserve private instead of public interests. All we want the railroad company to do, and what the people demand, is that it shall be equal before the law, equal before the people; that it shall pay its just quota of taxes and do as the humblest man in this land is compelled by law to do.

But, Mr. President, we are wandering away from this port of refuge, from this great commercial harbor, which the people of California have declared time and time again they want built on the coast. We have 75 miles alone on the coast of California fronting on the one county of Los Angeles, and comprised within that distance there is the great Santa Monica Bay and the great San Pedro Bay. Our Government has decided through two impartial boards of engineers, and also by a board of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, in favor of San Pedro.

And what is the Coast and Geodetic Survey? What is its mission? In the year 1807 the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey was established by an act of Congress. In 1843 it was reorganized, and since that time it has been the greatest factor in our coast surveys, making the soundings of our harbors, making the triangular surveys of the coast, showing the elevation of the mountains and the location of sunken rocks and of hidden bars, light-houses, and beacons, and publishing sailing directions for the mariner.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from California allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Do I understand the Senator to state that the Coast and Geodetic Survey have reported against Santa Monica?

Mr. PERKINS. Professor Davidson, who had charge of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, in a letter which my colleague presented, which has been published already and is of record, reported against Santa Monica as a suitable place for a harbor. I will read it if the Senator desires. It has, however, been printed in the RECORD; it appeared there in full this morning.

Mr. STEWART. Captain Taylor had charge of the surveys at that time. We have his letter.

Mr. PERKINS. Captain Taylor was a subordinate under the direction of Professor Davidson. I state it as a fact, which came to my knowledge through a captain of one of our vessels, that while he was engaged in making soundings in Santa Monica Bay a strong southwest gale of wind came on and he was obliged to run his vessel under the lee of the Island of Catalina for protection.

Mr. President, to the Coast and Geodetic Survey we are indebted for our charts of our coast. The chart before us and other charts upon the desks of Senators were made by them. We are indebted to them for the Coast Pilot. The last issue was published in 1889. It gives the sailing directions of the vessels making the different ports upon the coast. It gives the altitude of the different light-houses, the class of light-houses, whether they are stationary, revolving, or flash light, and all other directions so necessary to the safe and successful navigation of the coast. Since my friend from Nevada has referred to it, I will, with your permission, read what the Coast Pilot says of Santa Monica Bay:

From Point Vincente to Point Dume the course is north 67 degrees west, and the distance 25½ miles. The space inside this course is called Santa Monica Bay, and the deepest part is abreast the Arroyo Santa Monica, which is 10 miles north of the above line.

General hydrography of the bay.—From Point Vincente the cliffs to the northwest trend north 37 degrees west for 2½ miles to the westernmost termination of the ridge, which is called Rocky Point (described on page 47), and thence nearly north-northeast for 3 miles to the long sand beach forming the eastern shore of Santa Monica Bay. The northern shore lies at the base of the high, rugged mountains of the Santa Monica range. The beach is only passable at low water. The whole force of the western swell breaks heavily against these cliffs. The depth throughout the bay is quite irregular. Abreast of the arroyo and town of Santa Monica a depth of 40 fathoms is found 4 miles off shore, but off the beach, between La Ballona and the salt pond, a submarine plateau 4 miles wide stretches out to the southwest for 8 miles, with very uniformly decreasing depths, to 40 fathoms, with gray sand, mud, and gravel. Westward of this plateau and toward Point Dume the depth increases rapidly to nearly 300 fathoms, muddy bottom, and carrying 200 fathoms within a mile south of the point. On the east of this plateau, and toward Point Vincente, there is a remarkable submarine valley only 1 mile wide, between the 100-fathom curves, and carrying from 280 fathoms, muddy bottom, to 100 fathoms within 1½ miles of the beach, near the salt works. The eastern side of this valley is remarkably steep, dropping from 40 to 200 fathoms in three-eighths of a mile. The western side is more sloping, but the slope from 100 fathoms is very sharp.

Ranging off from each one of these points or headlands—Point Dume, Point Vincente, and Point Firmin—there is a great subterranean valley, as it were. As was shown by the letter from Professor Davidson presented here in my colleague's speech, the water pitches off abruptly from a depth of 6 to 8 fathoms to over 150 fathoms. This is not confined alone to Point Firmin or Point Vincente or San Pedro, but to Point Dume and to almost all the places where promontories reach out into the ocean. Therefore the charts other than those issued by the Coast Survey and presented here may easily deceive the eye.

I want to say in passing that Engineer Hood and Engineer Corthell stand high in their profession. They are perhaps as eminent as any we know of in that eminent calling. But they are not looking for defects in the harbor of Santa Monica. They are employed as special counsel, as special experts to show the advantages of that particular locality as compared with the other locality. While the Senator from Maine stated that Mr. Corthell had made a careful survey of the harbor and the soundings, I hardly think he spoke advisedly, because from his own testimony it was impossible for him to do this in the time he was on the Pacific Coast. The survey alone of such a bay as Santa Monica or San Pedro would take a vessel with her complete crew and a corps of engineers who are adepts and experts in that line at least six months. It is done by triangulation. Every 100 square yards off shore is sounded and the character of the ocean floor is depicted in the same way as the general topography of the country is shown on a map. It is a labor of months and years before a perfect and careful survey can be made and the rocks and reefs noted of the locality. When a company is about to build a wharf they spend weeks and weeks in selecting a location for that particular wharf. How must it be when it is necessary to survey an area of 50, 75, or 100 square miles? I am confident that the Senator from Maine must have been misinformed as to Mr. Corthell's knowledge of the bottom of this bay. It is not in the power of man to gain such knowledge in the length of time that this eminent engineer devoted to the study of Santa Monica Bay.

Now, coming back to the location, what is the sentiment of the people of Los Angeles? Public sentiment, the Senator from Maine says, has nothing to do with the locality of a wharf; it has nothing to do with the place where a harbor should be. The people, he says, have nothing to do with the location, that it belongs to the Government, but he is willing that a self-constituted committee of Congress may make the selection. In other words, we will prescribe the medicine and let the people take it.

Mr. President, who are "we"? We are simply the temporary agents the people sent here for a particular purpose, sent here to represent them on certain lines of duty. Some of these lines they have indicated in language that is unmistakable, others they leave to our discretion. The representative who is not true to the instructions given, the representative who does not carry out both in spirit and letter the well-known wishes of his constituents, is not only false to them and false to himself, but he is unworthy to be their representative.

Two years ago when the political campaign was made the universal voice and sentiment in Los Angeles was for San Pedro, and why? It was because a board of Government engineers had declared it the best, the most feasible, the most practicable place, and so the legislature of California, through their representatives, passed a resolution. I will try not to travel over any of the beaten ground which my colleague has so well covered, but to this resolution I think he did not refer, and therefore I will read it:

Senate joint resolution No. 15, relating to the construction by the United States Government of a deep-water harbor at San Pedro, on the coast of Los Angeles County. (Adopted February 8, 1893.)

Whereas the board of engineers appointed by the Secretary of War to inquire into and report upon the best point for the construction by the United States Government of a deep-water harbor on the coast of southern California and the necessities for such work have reported in favor of San Pedro, on the coast of Los Angeles County, and also in favor of the necessity of such harbor being constructed; and

Whereas it will afford greatly needed facilities for ocean commerce to a large section of this State: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of California (the assembly thereof concurring), That we instruct our Senators, and urgently request our Representatives in Congress from this State, that they use every means in their power to secure, at the session of Congress now in session, the passage of a bill appropriating the sum of at least $500,000, to begin the construction of such a deep-water harbor at San Pedro, on the seacoast of Los Angeles County, in this State, as is contemplated in the report of the board of engineers hereinbefore referred to; and

Be it resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State a copy of these resolutions.

That is the last expression of the people of California through their representatives in the State legislature.

Mr. STEWART. I inquire of the Senator if he has heard that senators and representatives who voted for that resolution have changed their views upon this same question?

Mr. PERKINS. Not in their official capacity. A few of those who thus performed their duty publicly have privately advised their Representatives that they would be glad to have them vote for Santa Monica.

Mr. STEWART. How many who voted for the Senator are among those?

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator is entitled to a fair answer and he shall receive it.

Mr. STEWART. All right.

Mr. PERKINS. In the county of Los Angeles six or seven representatives in the legislature who voted for me (that is a high encomium of their good judgment) have since wired me that they would be glad to have me vote for two appropriations, one for Santa Monica and the other for San Pedro. But that was done as private individuals, not as representatives of the people of the State in the legislature. They acted simply as individuals, at the importunity perhaps of some official friends, and being, as they must have been, amiable gentlemen, or I would not have received their votes, they desired to please them, knowing, as they did, that I have never yet swerved from my public duty as I understood it. I promised them before I was elected that I would carry out the wishes of their people on this particular question as expressed through my colleague [Mr, WHITE], the Senator who lives in their city, and through their Congressman, who lives in that city, and when a vote on the pending question is taken I shall do my duty as I understand it to be.

But since our legislature adjourned there has been another great assemblage, the eighth convention of the Transmississippi Commercial Congress. This convention met in Omaha, Nebr., on the 25th of November, 1895, and continued in session until the 28th. It had representatives from 26 different States and Territories. They assembled there, having in view the best commercial interests of this country. Representatives from 26 States went there without the hope or fear of reward. They went there having in view only that which they believed would best advance the interests of our whole country. I notice that the State of Missouri had some 30 or 40 representatives in that convention, as appears from their proceedings. Among the resolutions which they adopted was the following:

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be urged to provide for the construction of a deep-water harbor at San Pedro as already determined by the several acts of Congress, and in accordance with the several recommendations of the boards of United States Army engineers (as shown by Executive Documents Nos. 30 and 41 of the Fifty-second Congress, first and second sessions), and that the further improvement of the interior harbor at San Pedro be earnestly recommended.

I do not see how my friend from Missouri can do otherwise than vote for the appropriation for San Pedro, for I think Missouri was more largely represented in the convention, unless perhaps Nebraska, than any other State of the Union.

Mr. President, I have only referred to this as showing the public sentiment as expressed through the people in Los Angeles, which is the home of my distinguished colleague. Then we have the report of the Government engineers. If there were no other reason, I can not see how I could honestly perform my duty and vote on this question contrary to their recommendations. They are men of well-known integrity and high character. During the past ninety years, I think, since the Government first undertook the improvements of harbors and the building of fortifications and light-houses, the work has been delegated to the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, and to their credit be it said, out of the hundreds of millions of dollars which they have expended there has never been the taint of scandal connected with the disbursement of these immense sums of money. Holding their position for life or during good behavior, educated by the Government, they feel that patriotism and pride in their profession which have held them strictly to their line of duty. How could they then make an exception in this one particular case? I know the chairman of the first commission well and intimately, Col. G. H. Mendell, for forty-five years an honored army officer and chief of the Corps of Engineers on the Pacific Coast. He has no prejudice surely against any company or individual. He has no bias in favor of any particular place. You might as well charge a skillful surgeon called in to diagnose a disease with being biased or prejudiced. If he is true to his profession, true to his duty, he knows nothing but the subject that is before him, and he makes his finding according to the facts. So it is with these gentlemen.

As I have stated, and it is the one bright page in the history of our public men, this splendid corps of engineers, educated at our great institution of learning at West Point, supported by the Government, have always been honest and loyal to duty. They hold their position for life, and there is no influence that can prevent them from doing their duty. They can only be removed by impeachment, and impeachment can never lie against an honest man. So they have again and again reported in favor of the improvement of an outer harbor at San Pedro in preference to Santa Monica. They reported in favor of Wilmington, and I believe the Wilmington Harbor yet will become the great central shipping basin of southern California.

I remember that when a boy, many years ago, I visited Newcastle-upon-Tyne. At low tide there was scarcely any water in that river, and yet to-day for miles, tens of miles, along that stream there are great shipbuilding yards, great graving docks, machine shops, and foundries, where they are turning out five great steamships a day. It was the skill of man that widened those rivers and gave them a depth of water that to-day enables great ships to sail to and fro, carrying immense cargoes of coal and iron.

In conversation a few weeks ago with a very intelligent Scotchman who was born in Edinburgh he said: "When a boy, 3 miles below the city of Edinburgh I frequently waded across that little stream, which, as you know, is an estuary of the sea, and it is called the Frith of Forth, and yet to-day great steamships drawing 26 and 27 feet ply their vocation up and down that river." So I believe this is all possible for Wilmington in the future.

But there has been one strong point made in favor of Santa Monica, and it has not been answered yet. Why did the Southern Pacific Railroad, it is asked, abandon Wilmington, where they had expended millions of dollars, and go to an unknown place and there build a wharf costing them nine hundred thousand or a million dollars? The mere statement of that question carries with it a strong argument, and if the facts were true it would be almost unanswerable. But, Mr. President, they are not true. They have not abandoned San Pedro or Wilmington, and I do not believe there is any reasonable amount of money that could purchase their rights there.

Mr. STEWART. Have they not abandoned their scheme to build a wharf in the outer harbor?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; and I will tell you why. I will come to that in one second. They never seriously intended building a wharf outside until the breakwater was completed, because they had ample facilities inside for the transportation of all the freight that came there. The great objection to it was lighterage. It was one of the great expenses that ships having a heavy draft of water—more than 18 feet—could not go in over the bar at Wilmington, and the result was that the ships were obliged to anchor in San Pedro roadstead and there lighter their coal on shore. So there was a rival wharf built at a place called Redondo, on the southern portion of Santa Monica Bay, and that wharf was getting a large amount of business that came from the north, because passengers and freight would reach Los Angeles City via Redondo several hours before they could on vessels coming from the north going via San Pedro. It was a wise business undertaking, and it is characteristic of the enterprise and sagacity and the business foresight of the management of that great railroad company. As I have said before, for his enterprise, for his energy, for his push, Mr. Huntington is the peer of any man in this country. So he wisely said, "We will build a wharf on this bay where we can save this lighterage." Do you know that they use from ten to fifteen thousand tons of coal per month that is obliged to go over their road to the various distribution depots? So the railroad company decided to build this wharf at Santa Monica, and saved this dollar a ton lighterage which it was paying to another company. It was a wise business enterprise. It was not an experiment.

To hear my friend from Maine talk, anyone would think Santa Monica is the only place for a wharf on the coast. Mr. President, I can name you 16 different wharves between Golden Gate and Point Lome, just north of San Diego, built out into the sea precisely the same as the wharf is built at Santa Monica. They have not cost that amount of money, it is true, because there was no necessity for it, and while it would be presumptuous in me to criticise the great expenditure of money upon the Santa Monica wharf, yet it cost twice what was necessary; that is, a wharf costing one-half as much would have answered every purpose.

But this great railroad company does not do things by halves. It has tunneled the great Sierra Nevada. It has spanned great streams in Arizona, where the cloudbursts come down and, like an avalanche, wash out miles and miles of road. Yet it rebuilds it, and builds it to stand like a light-house upon a rock. It does things thoroughly and in a masterly manner, because it has great resources, and so it has built this wharf as it builds other structures which it undertakes. But I submit it was not necessary to build it so strong or so long or so wide unless it wished to do so in order to hold great coal bunkers, that the coal may be discharged into those bunkers, loaded on to cars, and transported by cars to the various depots in Southern California, Arizona, and New Mexico. There is a wharf to-day at Hueseme, a place about 40 miles north of Santa Monica, which did not cost over $75,000. It is built in a place not so well protected, because there is not the Catalina Island, and the Catalina Island is what protects San Pedo in a great degree. It breaks the southwest swells that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] talks about which coming in.

The prevailing winds on the coast of California during the summer months are from the northwest. They are the great trade winds, and they blow for four and five months in the year. Trade winds sound to those who are not initiated perhaps like a gentle zephyr, and yet it may be said to those who are not accustomed to them that they pick up a good-sized pebble and hurl it across the street. They prevail for four or five months in the year, and they are very strong when they blow. They commence in the morning and blow until late in the afternoon and evening. In the winter time the storms come from the southwest. The wind usually commences to blow very strong from the southeast. It hardly ever blows for more than a few hours from that point of the compass, when it veers around to the southwest, and there it blows with great strength and force. By reason of the location of Catalina Island, San Pedro is protected from those very heavy sea waves that roll in from the ocean. While Santa Monica in a degree is protected, yet it is not protected to that extent, or our friend Captain Taylor, who made the report, would not have been obliged to leave his anchorage and seek the sheltering protection of the lee of Catalina Island.

I find in looking at the chart which is before us that at Santa Monica—and anyone will notice it by closely observing the map—there are various lines running north and south, or following the meanderings of the coast. They are called the 5-fathoms line, the 10-fathoms line, the 15-fathoms line, and the 20-fathoms line. Surveyors seldom go outside of that. I find by examining the 10-fathoms line, which is 60 feet deep, that at Santa Monica it is only one mile and a half from the shore. If this wharf is 1 mile long there would be only a half mile between the end of the wharf and the breakwater; and if other wharves are built out, as they must necessarily be—this is to be not only a harbor of refuge, but also a great commercial harbor—there must be hundreds of wharves to accommodate the shipping. Where, then, is the anchorage for the great ships that will come there from the orient, from the islands of the Pacific, through the Nicaragua Canal, which we all hope and expect to live to see constructed? Where will there be anchorage for those vessels if there is only a half mile between the end of the wharf and the breakwater? It is true that the engineer reports say there is an area of so many acres. That will be between the wharves, and every nautical man knows that it is impossible for vessels to navigate successfully among them, even in charge of a towboat.

The wharf at Santa Monica, as I have said, has been a good business investment. I believe the saving alone to the Southern Pacific upon its lighterage of coal and lumber and other supplies will amount to not less than fifteen and perhaps twenty thousand dollars per month, and by reason of their facilities for doing other business, for handling merchandise coming in over the wharves from other countries, as well as our own coast States, they can handle it much more cheaply than anybody else can, and this will correspondingly add to their revenue. Therefore, the building of this wharf is a splendid business investment, and I do not believe that the projectors of the wharf when they built it had any expectation of asking the Government to build a breakwater. Fifteen miles south of San Pedro there is a wharf called Newport wharf. It runs out into the ocean about 800 or 1,000 feet. During the past eight months 35,000,000 feet of lumber alone have passed over that wharf, besides thousands and thousands of tons of grain. The same is true at San Buenaventura, Hueneme, and the other wharves on the coast. Every one of the owners of those wharves would like to have a breakwater. It would be a great benefit to the respective ports; it would be a great benefit to the wharf, and yet it would not make a commercial port or a harbor of refuge of any one of those ports more than they are at the present time. It is a law of nature which never yet has been successfully controverted that a breakwater can not be successfully constructed that runs parallel with a rectilinear shore.

It is contrary to the very nature of things that it can be. At Santa Monica, as well as in other open roadsteads, every twenty seconds there is a wave rolling in like a great battering ram, striking against the beach or sea wall, against the breakwater, against the wharf, or whatever may obstruct it. The most successful wharves that have been constructed on the coast are the wharves that presents the least surface of resistance for the action of the waves to strike against. Take a vessel and place it diagonally across the end of the wharf at Santa Monica or any other wharf extending into the sea, and I would almost wager my hope of future existence that if a southwest gale prevailed for twenty-four hours the vessel would sink at the end of the wharf or the wharf would be a story of the past. It can not be otherwise.

There is not an artificial breakwater constructed anywhere in the world of which we have knowledge that is built parallel to the shore. At Cherbourg, the great naval port on the coast of France, there are three land sides, and the great digue or breakwater is 2½ miles from the inner shore. It was commenced, I think, in the reign of Louis XVI. It was years and years—a hundred years I think—before it was completed. It cost an enormous sum of money—more than $30,000,000—and for the first years of its construction it did not resist the action of the waves. Yet it is exposed only to the short, choppy seas of the British Channel. Contrast that with the undulating, never-ceasing waves of the Atlantic or the Pacific, rolling in every twenty seconds, as I said before, thundering against this broadside. I believe the Government engineers are right when they say it is almost an engineering impossibility to construct such a breakwater.

While passing upon engineers, I wish to say one word. Yesterday eulogies were delivered upon the magnificient work accomplished by Mr. Eads in the Mississippi River, and deserved credit was given to him. None hold him or his memory in higher admiration and esteem than do I. I knew him well, and when governor of California I took the responsibility of inviting him to come to California and there investigate the great question that was agitating the public mind—the filling up of our rivers with the débris flowing from the mines. He came there. He made a personal examination, and his report has been productive of much good and benefit to our people. We are carrying out, on the lines he proposed, some of the improvements to our rivers with the most satisfactory results. Yesterday in the discussion the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] or the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] said that all the credit was due to him, and that the Government engineers were mistaken. I do not claim that the United States engineers are infallible. They undoubtedly make mistakes at times.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from California yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was surprised in looking over the RECORD this morning to find that in the little colloquy I had with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] yesterday I inadvertently made a statement which was entirely too broad and is calculated to do an injustice to the Engineer Corps.

In attracting the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the Eads proposition in 1873, when that subject was before the Senate committee, I said:

> At that time a controversy was going on in one of the committees of this body, of which I happened to be a member. Mr. Eads came before the committee with a project for improving the mouth of the Mississippi River. I had but little faith in it. I was a member of the committee, as I stated. The army engineers were unanimous in opposition to his scheme, from the Chief of Engineers down.

The latter statement was inadvertently and unintentionally made by me. What I intended to say, and what I really supposed I had said until I read the RECORD this morning, was that the then Chief of Engineers, General Humphreys, and those associated with him in the office here—in other words, that portion of the Engineer Corps whom we consulted then as we do now, General Craighill and his associates, were unanimously opposed to the Eads proposition. That is what I intended to say, but my statement was entirely too broad when I said that the whole Engineer Corps, from the Chief of Engineers down, were opposed to it. That statement was an injustice to the Engineer Corps, and I intended, as soon as the Senator from California took his seat, to make the correction. But inasmuch as the Senator was referring to the matter at this time, I thought the proper time to do so was now.

In this connection, I will state that I this morning received a letter from the present Chief of Engineers, Gen. W. P. Craighill, very properly taking me to task for the statement I made, and I take pleasure in inserting General Craighill's letter in the RECORD now. The letter is addressed to me, dated to-day. He says:

> I am sure you would not intentionally be unjust to the Corps of Engineers or anyone, but the RECORD of yesterday shows that you made a statement which the facts do not sustain relative to the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River.
> The first official suggestion of jetties there in 1852 was made by a mixed board of army and navy officers, among whom were three officers of the Corps of Engineers—Chase, Beauregard, and Barnard. While it is true that General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers later, opposed the scheme of Mr. Eads, it is equally true that Mr. Eads had the support of a mixed board who recommended the approval of his project, and on it were three officers of the Corps of Engineers, Barnard, Alexander, and Comstock, and they were sustained by many other members of the Corps of Engineers.

Nobody is infallible, and the Corps of Engineers does not claim to be, nor any member of it, but let us have justice at least.

Respectfully and truly, yours,

W. P. CRAIGHILL,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

I take great pleasure in presenting this letter to the Senate and having it incorporated in the RECORD, as my statement yesterday, as I said, was entirely too broad. I should be the last one who would say anything that could by any construction be tortured into any misrepresentation of or reflection upon the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, because I hold that Corps, as it is justly and universally held, in the very highest respect. The members of the Corps are not infallible, as stated by the Chief of Engineers. Nobody expects that of any corps or of any body of men. They sometimes make mistakes. The then Chief of Engineers, in 1873, was in very great error in his theory in opposition to the scheme of Mr. Eads. I had frequent conversations, I remember, with General Humphreys at the time, and his objections, as stated yesterday, were twofold. First, he claimed that after the jetties were built there would not be power enough in the current to wash out the silt from the bottom of the river; and secondly, that if there were, then a bar would be formed out beyond the jetties that would prevent ships drawing 10 feet of water from coming in. Based on that theory, vigorous opposition was then made by the Chief of Engineers and his associates in charge of the Bureau in the War Department. That is what I intended to say yesterday and what I supposed I had said, and I regret very much that I made the statement differently.

Mr. PERKINS. I could not expect less from my distinguished friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] than that which he has so frankly stated and which is a simple act of justice to our Government engineers. I was about to say that I am sure he was laboring under some erroneous impression, or that he had received wrong information, as the facts he has stated had been imparted to me personally by Mr. Eads.

There is one other thought. I do not like to trespass so long upon the patience of the Senate, as the question has been so thoroughly discussed. My distinguished colleague [Mr. WHITE] presented it in all of its phases, and I have endeavored not to enter upon any of the particular lines of thought which he followed. There are some suggestions, however, which I have learned in the practical school of experience which it seemed to me pertinent to offer at this time, and that is my excuse for intruding so long upon the patience of the Senate.

There is one point against constructing a wharf in an open roadstead or arm of the sea which has not been alluded to, and that is the undertow. It may not be known to all, especially to those who have not given it thought, that any shore presenting a line to the ocean has what is known as an undertow; that is, the waves come rolling in like an avalanche, combing up over each other on the beach, taking a rotary motion. The result is that when the waves recede they run back with a strong undercurrent. That is what nautical men call the undertow, Any vessel lying at one of these open wharves feels the effect of this undertow. It is stronger than the waves which are pressing her in toward the beach. The careful mariner moors his vessel so that in surging backward and forward the line that holds and counteracts the effect of the undertow is as strong as the one that resists the desire of the waves to press the vessel onto the shore. The result is that the vessel is in a swing, as it were, backward and forward, forward and backward, with the never-ceasing motion of the ocean.

I do not believe, and I do not think any engineering man does, that any breakwater exposed to the open sea can be constructed which will counteract the action of the undertow. It is fatal in a degree to the rapidity and the safety of handling freight. We lose large quantities of freight overboard and by being broken by falling from the slings upon the wharf, caused by the constant surging to and fro of the vessel. At Port Harford there is a rock perhaps 3,000 feet out from the north point of the bay, and the Government has made appropriations for the building of a breakwater from the shore to this rock in the bay. It is landlocked almost, and yet the undertow is present, especially when there has been a severe storm at sea. It must continue there. It is against the law of nature to have it otherwise in bay, inlet, or other place where the actions of the waves can affect the water. Therefore it is impossible to have in any open roadstead a successfully protected harbor where the vessels may be taken on the beach, or launched from the beach, and boats pulled up for repairs or safety.

The amendment proposed by my distinguished colleague [Mr. WHITE] provides that a new commission shall be appointed, whose duty it shall be to reexamine these two localities, Santa Monica and San Pedro. In doing this he has stated that which the people expected. He has voiced the sentiments of the people of California, the people of his own city, the people of the great West, that commerce demands and requires a great port of entry and a port of export in California. We want this money expended where it will do the most good. We want the Government to help us build this harbor, but we do not want them to build it at a place where commerce will derive no benefit. As there has been a great difference between private engineers and Government engineers as to the best locality, my colleague says, "Let us have a new commission." First, we will select one engineer from the Navy with rank not lower than that of commander. He holds his position for life. He is educated by the Government, and step by step, from midshipman to ensign, from ensign to lieutenant, from lieutenant to commander, and from commander to captain, he has won his epaulets by service. He holds his appointment during life or good behavior, not subject to the caprice of any political party. Who can object to such a commissioner?

He selects another one who is connected with the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Who is as capable to judge as the one who made the charts, who made the soundings, who knows the hydrography of the sea as well as the topography and the triangulations of the land? He says, "Let us select one from that department." Then, wisely, in my opinion, he has said that after the money has been appropriated by the Government it must be expended by the United States Corps of Engineers. The corps is composed of men who, as I said before, are selected because of their skill. They, too, have advanced by reason of their special fitness to discharge the duties of their important offices. They have never proven recreant to duty, nor have they failed in any charge delegated to them. It seems to me eminently proper that one member should be selected from the Corps of Engineers, because they are to construct the work, and they should pass upon the practicability of doing so—whether there is good material at hand, whether it is an engineering possibility. Yet my friend the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] says, and I hardly think he means it, that a subordinate would not dare to differ with his chief, that a subordinate would not dare to set up an opinion of his own. My friend the Senator from Maine does great injustice to true manhood when he says that. It is the primary lesson, it is one of the elementary studies in that Academy, that the young cadet shall be independent, that he shall speak for himself and reason for himself. It is the benefit of the judgment of such men, and not their superiors' judgment, that the amendment proposes to give to the commission. I say it is unjust, it is unfair to make the assertion.

But I feel so deeply interested, I am so anxious that an appropriation shall be made for a great commercial port in the proper place, that I wish to ask my colleague to consent to this amendment, and thereby quiet the objection of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Maine. I want him to make this proposition to those who so strongly advocate the location of the breakwater at Santa Monica. I want him to say to them, "Although it is not right, it is not just to the engineers, yet I will sacrifice my feeling in the matter, and, if you will consent to this amendment, I will agree that the President of the United States shall, instead of one member from the Engineer Corps of the Army, appoint one from civil life, a practical engineer." I believe, upon reflection, he will consent to do this, and if he does the amendment should be unanimously adopted.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. There was a question suggested yesterday with regard to the rivalry between different railroads to obtain access to the Bay of Santa Monica. What is the fact in regard to that, and what is the law in regard to connection with the harbor?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not think that there is so much in that proposition as has been made to appear. I do not think that any railroad company can monopolize any one port. While, if they own the land, they have a great advantage as to warehouses and other terminal facilities, yet under the laws of our State, as I understand them, anyone can make application to the board of supervisors for a franchise to build a wharf anywhere on the coast within one or two thousand feet of another wharf. It is only necessary for them to show that the demands of commerce or of business require it, and the board of supervisors can then regulate the rates of toll over the wharf.

Mr. STEWART. There is no arbitrary rule, then, but it may be done wherever it may be required by commerce. Have they that right?

Mr. PERKINS. I so understand.

Mr. STEWART. Is the Senator advised as to who owns the land at Santa Monica?

Mr. PERKINS. I am not, but it matters not who owns it, the right of way can be condemned there, and other wharves can be constructed, if the proper showing be made to the board of supervisors.

Mr. STEWART. There has been some question made with regard to the position of the outer harbor at San Pedro. It has been suggested in argument that it is open to the southeast wind, and that that was an insuperable objection to it.

Mr. PERKINS. I did not feel called upon to expatiate particularly upon the merits of San Pedro Harbor, because we have the reports of two boards of engineers before us, and they have been spread in full upon the records of the Senate, and have fully answered the queries in relation to that subject.

Referring to the southeast winds, I would say that they prevail, but are of very short duration. They blow pretty strong while they are blowing, but it is the experience of all nautical men that the winds blowing from the southeast soon chop around to the southwest, and the sea waves that roll in all come from the southwest. One of the advantages of San Pedro over Santa Monica is that the island of Santa Catalina, located some 15 miles away, about 18 miles long, rising up out of the ocean nearly 3,000 feet, acts as nature's great breakwater to the Bay of San Pedro.

Mr. STEWART. As to winds coming from the south?

Mr. PERKINS. As to winds from the south and west.

Mr. STEWART. I am talking about southeast. The gale comes sometimes from the southwest; but if a heavy gale comes from the southeast, what effect would it have on the San Pedro Harbor? What effect would it have upon ships sailing into the bay?

Mr. PERKINS. It depends upon their ground tackling, their anchorage. I have known a great many ships to hold on there during a southeast gale.

Mr. STEWART. Would that depend entirely upon the ground tackling?

Mr. PERKINS. There is no question about that; it would be as at any other place.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator will recollect he explained to me one day the effect of the case made before the committee, and if I understood him aright he thought Santa Monica was decidedly the better place?

Mr. PERKINS. Not the best place, but that the best argument had been presented.

Mr. STEWART. And that all the weight of evidence was in favor of Santa Monica?

Mr. PERKINS. I did. I listened to the testimony before the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and I am frank to say that it presented a very taking case, but, upon examination of the charts of the coast, especially of the 10 and 15 fathom curve line, and the soundings off Vincente and Point Firmin and Point Dume, I think the truth was painted by the advocates of Santa Monica in Titian colors.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has described the harbor of Santa Monica as being exceedingly dangerous on account of the constant moving of the waves, and yet during the last three or four years vessels have loaded and unloaded at that port without difficulty. Is not that correct?

Mr. PERKINS. There is no question about that. I think I admitted in my remarks that ships, unless there were very heavy gales, could and did lie close to those wharves and discharge their cargoes, but, of course, not with the ease or facility that they could in still water. That applies to Santa Monica, and I also state that it applies with equal force to 16 other wharves on the coast which I could name. Our captains, or those who have charge of vessels navigating the ocean in the coastwise business, become thoroughly familiar with these different localities. It would seem at times almost impossible to make a successful landing; and yet they have done so, and continue to do so. I reiterate that which I stated before, that Santa Monica is one of the best wharves on that coast or any other coast. It answers the purposes for which it was constructed. It was and is a good business investment. But the question we have under consideration is the appropriation by this Government of $3,000,000 for the purpose of building a breakwater. Is it practicable to build this breakwater, and, if it is built, will it bring the result that each of us desires?

Mr. STEWART. Is the Senator in favor of building a breakwater at one or the other place, or in favor of abandoning them altogether?

Mr. PERKINS. With the report of the board of engineers before me——

Mr. STEWART. I am speaking now of the Senator's knowledge of the situation. He is a sailor and navigator, and I want the opinion of a sailor and a navigator in the Senate. I want to say that these engineers are selected on altogether different lines. As has been stated, they are selected on account of their military knowledge; they are builders of military forts; they do not navigate the sea, and I would rather trust the Senator from California as to any harbor on the coast where he has navigated and where he lives, than any corps of engineers. Of course he would know more about it, because it is his specialty, it is in his line.

It is not the business of the engineers to find harbors. They construct harbors after they are found. I remember an instance at Duluth. I was interested there. The engineers reported that the only way to build a harbor there was at the mouth of the St. Louis River, about 5 or 6 miles south of Duluth. The people were very anxious that there should be a harbor on the northwest corner, but the engineers were all against it. They finally dug across the points which run out there several miles and connected with the bay inside. They ran across this point up near Duluth, when they were enjoined. Finally, they got inside and made a good harbor after the engineers had all given it up. They have built up the main harbor now, and the objections the engineers made to it have not materialized. Engineers may be mistaken the same as anybody else; and locating harbors, as I have said, is outside of their specialty. But the point I make is that the Senator from California has some experience, and I will ask him one or two more questions.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me first answer the questions the Senator has already put.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. PERKINS. When the Senator comes to California this summer I shall be pleased to take him yachting, and I shall try to find some quiet little cove, where we can discuss this question fully, and, combining the placid waters of the Pacific with other ingredients, which we will artificially secure, we shall make the trip a pleasant one for him.

We are acting here, however, Mr. President, in the capacity of representatives of the people and voting to appropriate a certain sum of money for certain purposes. It may not be improper for me to state that I accompanied a delegation to the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives early in the session—a delegation that came from San Jose, Cal. They were asking for $25,000 for the purpose of straightening an arm of San Francisco Bay, an estuary that runs up to the town of Alviso, which is the depot for vessels from the great Santa Clara Valley. The gentlemen composing that committee listened to the remarks of the delegation patiently for a time, and finally interrupted with the question, "Have the Government engineers surveyed that place?" "Yes; some years since." "Have they made an estimate of its cost?" "No." "Do they recommend the appropriation?" "Well, no; but yet they favor it." "It is useless, gentlemen, for us to listen to you. It is a rule of this committee and of Congress to make no appropriations for rivers and harbors or like improvements until the Corps of United States Engineers have surveyed them, have estimated the cost, and recommended the practicability of the same."

The delegation returned to San Jose; and ever since the Committee on Commerce of the Senate have recommended the expenditure of $3,000,000 for the improvement of Santa Monica against the recommendation of the United States engineers I have been wondering what I should say to that delegation when I returned to California and was confronted by them and they said, "You, our representative, could not get us even a hearing because we had not the recommendation of the Government engineer, and yet in the Senate you appropriated $3,000,000 for an improvement which the Government engineers have not recommended." I have been wondering what I shall say to them in reply. The only answer I can find is that perhaps the Senator from Maine or the Senator from Nevada will explain it.

Mr. STEWART. I am trying to find out what the Senator thinks about this question, for I regard his opinion as much more valuable than that of a man who is not an expert in navigation. The Senator is a sailor. He has already said that Santa Monica was an excellent place, the best place on the coast. He has already told us that ships have been in the habit of loading and unloading there without any difficulty for the last three or four years. I ask the Senator could they do that at San Pedro?

Mr. PERKINS. I think so, after constructing a proper wharf, not the same as my friend from Maine, who is very ingenious and wanted to build a wharf with its side to this breakwater. I admired the ingenuity with which he presented the case on yesterday. Here is the point: He proposed building a wharf heading west instead of southwest at San Pedro and then a southwest wind would strike against it broadside. I would have said to him: "Senator, I would build my wharf head to the sea, and then it would stand." Of course it will not stand otherwise or as you have indicated the line you would construct it upon.

Mr. STEWART. They can build a wharf just as the case stands now to answer equally for the purpose at Santa Monica.

Mr. PERKINS. I think so.

Mr. STEWART. Then they were very foolish to leave off building a wharf there?

Mr. PERKINS. No; because the other place is some twelve hours nearer to San Francisco, and has some other advantages.

Mr. STEWART. What other advantages has it?

Mr. PERKINS. It has deeper water, and they are saved from building a long line of railroad out to San Pedro Point to the wharf. The Senator is thoroughly familiar with it. The wharf could be built outside of Dead Mans Island and run out southwest to the sea without any trouble.

Mr. STEWART. Do I understand that the Senator is willing to have an appropriation made at one place or the other?

Mr. PERKINS. I am willing. I want to reiterate again and again that the necessities of southern California demand a deep-sea harbor. We want to make no mistake, and I am willing to vote for this amendment, and I hope my friend, if he wants the best place selected, will vote for the amendment proposed by my distinguished colleague from California, and make this appropriation definitely.

Mr. STEWART. If this amendment is defeated does the Senator from California propose to vote against the appropriation?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, it is hardly fair to anticipate what the verdict of the jury may be, and one is not qualified to sit as a juror who has already made up his mind before hearing the testimony. But we want a harbor; and if, as I have no doubt, the Senator is as honestly and as earnestly desirous for a deep-sea harbor as my colleague and I, he surely then will vote for the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. That is not the question. I want to know how the Senator from California would vote in case the amendment is voted down?

Mr. PERKINS. I would be disqualified to sit on a jury if I had made up my mind in advance.

Mr. VEST. I am as anxious to vote on this question as any Senator present. I do not want to protract the discussion at all. I certainly shall not go into a discussion of California politics. I have only the most general interest in the political affairs of that State, and only know what the issues are before the people of California by the testimony taken before the Committee on Commerce and by what I have seen in the newspapers published in that State.

I take it for granted that the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] who has last spoken, when he charges the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and myself with being libelers and common slanderers, is simply speaking in the Pickwickian sense and indulging in that old-fashioned and long-used political strategy which endears every representative to his people, of setting up some man of straw and then tearing him into pieces in the most impassioned manner, to give evidence of his love for his dear people. Nobody has attacked the people of California. I simply remarked, so far as I was individually concerned, that Mr. Huntington seemed to be the issue and the great political factor in that State. My information comes from the California newspapers, which are sent to me in great abundance, all containing headlines "Huntington or anti-Huntington," and declaring that the question now, the burning issue, is whether the State belongs to Huntington politically or not; whether the Southern Pacific Railroad system is to dominate the free voters of that Commonwealth.

In the speeches made by the California delegates before the Committee on Commerce a large portion of their addresses were given to that issue. Mr. Huntington was denounced in the most vehement terms by some, and praised by others. One gentleman, to show the impassioned fervor which entered into this personal discussion, an ex-judge of the superior court of the State, declared that rather than make any compromise with Huntington, or any concession to Huntington influence, he would expatriate himself, and cease to be a citizen. [Laughter.] That will be found in the evidence taken before the committee, for I presume it is fully published, though I have not looked at it.

So the Senator from Maine and myself are not responsible for these statements. California people came to us and made them, and they held up their manacled hands on the one side and asked us to deliver them from the thraldom of the Southern Pacific Railroad, headed by Huntington, and the other side wanted to deify Huntington as a great benefactor, who was causing the grass to grow where it had not grown before and the fragrance of flowers to be found upon their arid lands. If any Senator or Representative of the people of California can stand here in the presence of the utterances of their friends and say that this Huntington issue is not the burning one in that State, then he has a hardihood which I do not envy and which I can not appreciate.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Here is an extract from a leading California newspaper, published about a week ago, and sent to me marked. If the Senator will allow me, I will read it.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. It is as follows:

> The list of the nine members of the committee who voted for the Santa Monica steal has the suggestive sound of a burglar alarm. The names are FRYE, GORMAN, JONES, ELKINS, MCMILLAN, MURPHY, MCBRIDE, QUAY, and SQUIRE. There are two or three Senators in that lot whom it might be safe to meet on a dark night with a pocketful of money, but if a marksman wanted to bring down the greatest number of rascals with the smallest supply of rocks he could dispose of his missiles to better advantage in that quarter than anywhere else in the Capitol outside of a joint meeting of the Committees on Pacific Railroads.

[Laughter.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. From what newspaper is that?

Mr. FRYE. The San Francisco Examiner.

Mr. VEST. That is certainly a very vitriolic utterance. I am not taking any issue with it. The only surprise I desire to express is that my name is not in the list. This is the first time I have escaped. [Laughter.] They have charged me with burglary and every other felony.

Mr. FRYE. They had not heard the Senator make the speech in which he stated that Huntington was entitled to the rights of a civilized man. If they had heard that he would have been in the list. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. I protest against this being an issue of Huntington or no Huntington. I know very little about Mr. Huntington that every other Senator does not know. I think he is entitled to fair treatment, and that his claims are to be considered just as the claims of any other citizen of the United States. I do not intend to go into any discussion of that matter, nor do I propose to waste the time of the Senate in talking about the high character of the Corps of Engineers. They are gentlemen, United States officers, and whilst they are fallible and have the same prejudices and passions and errors that the rest of us have, they are certainly, as a Corps of Engineers, entitled to the highest commendation and consideration. It is not true, however, that they have been impeccable and infallible. They have made a great many mistakes, which I do not care to enumerate, but they are known to every public man who has had anything to do with rivers and harbors. As to corruption, they have no more been exempt from that than any other set of human beings organized for any human purpose. One of the worst scandals that ever took place in the city of Washington was that connected with the tunnel for the water works here, in which, I believe, the Government lost about a million and a half of dollars. That was, to use the mildest expression, caused by the criminal negligence of a member of the Corps of Engineers; and yet no man would stand here and say that the whole Corps were guilty of criminal negligence or corruption. As a rule they are men of the highest official and personal character, there is no question about that; but they are not infallible, and especially about rivers and harbors, and for the simple reason that, as the head of that Corps himself said before our committee, they are not riparian engineers, they are fortifications engineers.

These engineers went to San Pedro and Santa Monica. Their first idea was how these places were to be defended in case of a naval war, and when they look at any improvement upon the seacoast that is naturally their first idea, because they are West Pointers, trained in the art of destroying men and of defending localities. You could no more expect them to be riparian engineers than you could expect that they were astronomers or chemists or proficient in any other department than that for which they had been educated. I have the greatest respect for them. I received a copy of the letter which the Senator from Oregon read from the head of the Corps of Engineers. I suppose he thought it was necessary to send it to me because I said yesterday that the Corps of Engineers had opposed the jetty improvements at the mouth of the Mississippi River. They did oppose them. They are opposed to them to-day, and their objection to them is that a man outside of the Corps of Engineers, to whom this sort of work was not given by the Government, had been successful in doing what the leading engineers who belonged to that corps had denounced as utterly impossible. General Humphreys, at the head of the Engineer Corps, denounced the jetty system as applied to the mouth of the Mississippi River. I wish to say now in reply to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] that the jetty system is not a failure.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator from Louisiana made no assertion that it was a failure.

Mr. VEST. The Senator quoted yesterday from, I suppose, an interview, certainly not a report, of Major Quinn, who is the officer detailed from the Corps of Engineers to examine the jetty work and to report whether the Eads estate are entitled to the money for having 26 feet of water there with a 30-feet central channel 200 feet wide. If Major Quinn ever made any such report I have never been able to find it. I have here, not exactly an interview, but a report from the New Orleans papers, in which Major Quinn is made to say that this work is comparatively a failure; that the bar is increasing outside the mouth of the Mississippi River. He nowhere says in that interview or report, or whatever it may be—the newspaper report of what he did say—that the Eads estate would be compelled, on account of the expense of dredging, to abandon the contract; there is nothing of that sort in it; but he is made to say that the expenses increase, that the dredging is continuing, and that the remedy—and that is the point I am coming to, because the people of the Mississippi Valley, including those of Missouri, are vitally interested in the project of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi—he does say that the only remedy in the future is to cut a channel from Algiers to Barataria Bay. In other words, he indorses the outlet system, which is directly antagonistic to the jetty system. There are two schemes for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River and for the whole length of it. One is known as the outlet system, which is to exhaust the water in the river and prevent the outflow that damages and devastates the lower Mississippi country—to take the water out of the river; and Major Quinn says that that is the remedy, if he is reported correctly in the New Orleans paper, to cut a canal from Algiers to Barataria Bay, and then put jetties at the mouth of that canal.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. Does that interview purport to be authentic wherein it is stated that Major Quinn is in favor of a canal to cut across from Algiers to Barataria Bay, rather than to maintain the present jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; he says that is the ultimate remedy; and he says that it is the only remedy that can be applied. In order that I may do him no injustice I will give the interview.

Mr. CAFFERY. I never heard of any such statement as coming from Major Quinn.

Mr. VEST. Here is Major Quinn's interview, and here is the answer of the New Orleans paper. The Times replies to him in a column. It says that he was never friendly to the jetty system; that he has never been able to overcome his prejudices; and that he is now advocating the outlet system, which will ruin New Orleans and ruin the commerce of the Mississippi River. Here is the report, which I did not care to inflict upon the Senate, but I will put it in the RECORD. It is at the service of my friend. It purports to be an interview with him, in which he goes on to declare that the jetty system is comparatively a failure; that there are lumps of mud being formed in the channel; that the channel is crooked; that there is a bar forming which has increased gradually for the past ten years at the mouth of the jetties; and that it will require an infinite amount of expensive dredging in order to keep up the channel to 26 feet and 30 feet as the central depth.

The papers referred to are as follows:

A CALAMITY HOWL—MAJOR QUINN'S RECENT INTERVIEW SEVERELY CRITICISED—RESIDENTS OF PORT EADS DECLARE THE PASS FROM THE RIVER TO THE SEA WAS NEVER IN BETTER CONDITION—NAMES OF VESSELS OF GREAT DRAFT THAT HAVE PASSED OUT RECENTLY.

[Special to the Times-Democrat.]

PORT EADS, LA., December 21, 1895.

The interview of Major Quinn in yesterday's Picayune has been generally and unfavorably discussed here by many. He is not taken seriously, but is regarded as a mere calamity howl. His interview is a contradiction of, and is at variance with, his annual reports on South Pass for the years 1894, 1895, which show that the fan-shaped area in the Gulf at the mouth of the Pass, instead of diminishing, has increased in depth. The mud lumps that he speaks of are far to the westward of navigation, and were there when the jetties were built and are there now. The shoaling around them is expected, as the water of the Pass is discharged in that direction, but it is entirely out of the track of navigation and will do no harm.

The jetty work from one end of the Pass to the other is in good condition, and only the usual force of men is employed to keep it in repair. The channel through the Pass from the river to the sea was never better, and the largest vessels pass in and out without the slightest difficulty. Since November 1 over 50 foreign and domestic vessels drawing over 23 feet, and many drawing over 25 feet, have gone to sea. On December 4 the steamship Leenki, drawing 25 feet 10 inches, went to sea, and on the same day the American, drawing 25 feet 3 inches, went out. On December 11 the Pio IX, drawing 25 feet, went to sea, and on the 12th the steamer Parkmore, drawing 26 feet, went through the channel without difficulty. These figures are official, and are obtained from the bar pilots.

At present there is no evidence of any necessity for an early or remote extension of the jetties, and the probability of there being only 10 or 12 feet on the bar in the next ten years, as Major Quinn says, is farfetched and not deserving of serious consideration.

MAJOR QUINN AND THE JETTIES.

[New Orleans Times-Democrat, December 22, 1895.]

Major Quinn, of the United States Engineers, who has supervision of a number of important works in this district, among others the jetties, has for some time past spoken more or less derogatively of the latter, one of the greatest engineering achievements in the country. Major Quinn has not said that the jetties were a failure—indeed, he could not. It is his duty to report on their status, and whether the contract of the jetty company with the Federal Government has been carried out; and he has always declared that it has been carried out and that the depth of water required has been maintained. But in his interviews there is the general suggestion that the jetties are not the best way of treating the mouth of the river; that they are merely a temporary relief after all; that it will cost an immense sum to extend them, and that this will only relieve us for a comparatively few years, when a further extension will be required, it being more difficult and expensive than the original work. And these predictions as to the fate of the jetties are always accompanied by a proposition to get a permanent solution of the difficulty by a canal from the Mississippi to Barataria Bay. In other words, Major Quinn seems to be an advocate of the outlet or canal theory, as opposed to the Eads or jetty plan.

His remarks have the effect of creating apprehension as to the harbor of New Orleans, fear lest it may be ruined, and they undoubtedly throw discredit on the jetties. This is unfortunate, coming from an officer of the Government. The jetty plan has the approval of all the leading engineers in the world. It was conceived and carried out by the greatest American engineer. When Congress took hold of this matter it had to compare the jetty plan with the canal one, which Major Quinn now offers, except that his Barataria Canal is less favorably located than the proposed Fort St. Philip one.

The outlet or canal proposition was strongly pressed before Congress, but when Captain Eads was heard he made the matter so clear, showed so plainly the bad effects the canal would have, how it would altogether fail of its purpose to afford a navigable stream, besides injuring the navigation of the river, that Congress at once decided in favor of the jetties, and made the contract which Major Quinn is now required to supervise and see carried out.

The jetties proved to be all that Captain Eads claimed for them—and even more. We have had them for nearly twenty years, and they have been of untold value to New Orleans and the Mississippi Valley, and worth hundreds of millions of dollars to the country.

When the jetties were built, Captain Eads foresaw that there would be some filling in beyond their end; but the filling in has been less than expected; and the extension of the jetties, if it becomes necessary, will not be a difficult or a very expensive undertaking. In fine, Captain Eads's predictions in regard to the jetties and the mouth of the river have been so completely verified in every respect that it would be very bad judgment on our part to abandon the system he proposed for the improvement of the river and adopt that of Major Quinn or anyone else.

As for Major Quinn's account of the condition of affairs at the jetties, our correspondent there declares that it is "farfetched and not deserving of serious consideration"; and even styles Major Quinn "a calamity howler." His present account of the jetties is a contradiction of and wholly at variance with his last annual report on this subject to the Secretary of War. There has been no filling up at the mouth of the Pass, and the mud lumps he speaks of, and which are out of the way of navigation, were there when the jetties were built. The channel from the jetties out was never better than it is now, and there is no evidence of any necessity for an early or remote extension of the jetties.

The Government having adopted the jetty plan for the mouth of the river, and having stationed Major Quinn here to see that the contract is carried out, he is not the person to criticise that plan, to constantly throw slurs on it, and to predict its failure; and we believe that it would be better, if he holds the opinion he seems to entertain, to replace him with some other engineer who believes in the jetties and is anxious and desirous of seeing the success of this system of improving the mouth of the river. Congress has decided in favor of it, and Major Quinn can not change the plan in any way. If he ever sees the jetty system fail it will be his duty to report it, but his predictions of failure are no more worthy of consideration than the similar predictions that were so frequent when the work was first begun, and we have had nearly twenty years' use of the jetties to prove the falsity of those forecasts.

As for the canal proposed by Major Quinn to Barataria Bay, it is unworthy of consideration. Congress has rejected these canal projects over and over again, and there is nothing in Major Quinn's canal to recommend it. Emptying into a bay full of shallows, it would soon fill up at its mouth unless he had jetties there to keep it clear of the mud, and with jetties he would encounter the same difficulties which he claims to find at the mouth of the Mississippi, without the advantage of the volume and current of the great river which is now so effective in getting rid of the mud in South Pass.

It is always unwise to place an officer in charge of work or to supervise it who is opposed to it and believes it is going to prove a failure. Major Quinn is not the man to supervise the jetties if he entertains the opinion of them which his interviews indicate.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have here an official statement of the depth of water in the jetties. It comes from a report made by Major Quinn himself. Without reading all of it, for it is an extensive array of figures, it shows that the first year the jetties went into operation the depth was 30 1/10 feet. In the report for the last month that is reported upon, which was June, 1895, the depth of water in the jetties was 30 3/10 feet, or an increase of two-tenths. Of course it varied from time to time, but not in one single year did the Government fail to pay to Captain Eads when living, and to his estate after his death, the amount which that estate or which Captain Eads was entitled to receive only upon complying with the contract to maintain 26 feet of water over the whole 200 feet in width with a central depth of 30 feet, which was the main channel. In order to condense this matter, to put it in form before the Senate, I will ask the Secretary to read as a part of my remarks a letter from Mr. Corthell, who was the assistant of Captain Eads and had charge of the jetties, and who knows the truth of the statements which he makes.

Mr. CAFFERY. What is the date of it?

Mr. VEST. Yesterday; last night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 11, 1896.

DEAR SENATOR VEST: The remarks made by Senator CAFFERY to-day in condemnation of the jetties at the mouth of South Pass, built by Captain Eads, are entirely erroneous.

First. In regard to the formation of the channel, between 1875 and 1879, the following is taken from my History of the Mississippi Jetties, page 214, and I can vouch for its correctness:

"Some of the channel results have been obtained by dredging, but the amount of material moved by this means has been so small, being only about 1 per cent of the whole, that we have not included it in the exhibition of results. This artificial applinance has simply hastened a result which the current had ample power to accomplish, as is evident from the fact that it is now able not only to maintain the channel secured, but to still further enlarge it."

Second. I hand you herewith the chart of the jetty channel, and extending some distance seaward, of the ends of the jetties, as shown by Maj. James B. Quinn, the United States engineer inspecting officer, dated June 30, 1895, by which it will appear that there is a straight channel through the entire jetties and to the deep water of the Gulf 26 feet deep and over 200 feet wide at that depth, with a central depth of 30 feet as required by the law, and that this channel is not crooked, nor at any part difficult of navigation for the largest ships. It is chart No. 1 of the report. I also in this connection refer you to the table of depths of the water through the jetties at various dates, being pages 1732 to 1734, by which you will see that there has been through the entire period since July 8, 1879, when the maximum channel was obtained by Captain Eads, a depth fully equal to the requirements of his contract with the United States Government, up to and including June, 1895, the last month of the report.

The tendency at present is for a deepening rather than a shoaling in the Gulf beyond the end of the jetties.

Third. I happen to have at hand some very interesting data in regard to the number of days of dredging since 1879, and you will understand that this dredging was almost entirely done for the purpose of not enlarging but rectifying the channel in order to make it conform to the very difficult requirements of a Congressional enactment, that is, to make it 200 feet wide at the depth of 26 feet, with a central depth of 30 feet. It has often happened that the width of the 26-foot channel might be, say, 199 feet, and the central depth perhaps 35 feet, or 40 feet, but the law required that while the channel was large enough and deep enough for navigation it should have at least the width of 200 feet. It also has happened in the course of years that the 26-foot channel might have a width of say 250 feet or more, but the central depth might not be over 29½ feet, but yet this central depth must be made 30 feet to make the channel conform to the law.

Now, in order to accomplish this purpose it has been necessary, in order to maintain this legal channel, measured according to the recently corrected datum plane, to dredge only one hundred and twenty-one days in the jetty channel and forty days in the area outside of the jetties, where I assume Senator CAFFERY'S crooked channel exists. I wish to call your attention particularly to the fact that dredging in the channel beyond the end of the jetties was required in only one year in the last thirteen years, and that was during a very remarkable phenomenon of sand waves which moved down the main river and through the jetty channel to the Gulf, and to the further fact that no dredging whatever has been required beyond the jetties in the last three years, and this fact alone would seem to be an indication at least that no great amount of shoaling could be taking place beyond the end of the jetties. In other words, during five thousand eight hundred and forty days that have elapsed since the maximum channel was obtained by Captain Eads in 1879, he and his executors have been obliged to dredge to maintain a legal channel only one hundred and sixty-one days.

It was very unfortunate for Senator CAFFERY to refer to Major Quinn as his authority for his statement, for this same Government officer has been, during the last two years, so hostile to the jetties that he has made himself very obnoxious, even on the streets of New Orleans, in predicting failure and in calling the jetties "a fraud." In December, 1895, he allowed himself to be interviewed, and I inclose the interview, which appeared in the New Orleans Picayune December 20, 1895. I also hand you with it a statement sent from Port Eads at the time, which I am sure is correct, and I quote from it a few lines referring to the navigation passing through the jetties:

"The channel through the Pass from the river to the sea was never better, and the largest vessels pass in and out without the slightest difficulty. Since November 1 over 50 foreign and domestic vessels drawing over 23 feet, and many drawing over 25 feet, have gone to sea. On December 4 the steamship Leeuki, drawing 25 feet 10 inches, went to sea, and on the same day the American, drawing 25 feet 3 inches, went out. On December 11 the Pio IX, drawing 25 feet, went to sea; and on the 12th the steamer Parkmore, drawing 26 feet, went through the channel without difficulty. These figures are official and are obtained from bar pilots."

I also hand you an editorial of the Times-Democrat of December 22, 1895, which gives the real animus of Major Quinn's hostility to the jetties; in other words, he is still harping on the project of a canal and following the lead of his superiors, who, as you know, were utterly vanquished at the time of the charter. He is making the senseless and uncalled-for prediction which they made so persistently and openly twenty-two years ago.

It may be proper for me to state from personal knowledge that the executors of Captain Eads's estate have felt called upon to protest against the persistent attacks and the outspoken hostility of Major Quinn to Captain Eads's great work.

You, who knew him so well and so fully understand and appreciate the remarkably successful results achieved by him, are fully able to defend him.

I am, Senator, yours, very truly,

E. L. CORTHELL.

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST,
United States Senate, City.

Mr. VEST. I desire to put into the RECORD, without reading it, another letter to which Mr. Corthell refers. It makes the record perfect in that respect.

The paper referred to is as follows:

THE RIVER'S MOUTH—MAJOR QUINN'S CHARTS SHOW IT TO BE FILLING, AND DESPERATE REMEDIES WILL SOON HAVE TO BE TAKEN TO PRESERVE A CHANNEL.

[New Orleans Picayune, December 20, 1895.]

Yesterday Major Quinn returned to the city from quite an extended visit to Mobile Bay. Some time ago vessels, in entering the harbor during bad weather, carried away one or two of the beacons, and Major Quinn visited the harbor for the purpose of replacing these beacons.

Yesterday Major Quinn was extremely busy arranging a number of new maps and soundings taken at the mouth of the jetties, preparatory to a report to his department at Washington. After inspecting these charts and maps, which are the results of long months of observation, Major Quinn has come to the conclusion that the Gulf has been shoaling up, from the mouth of the jetties out, at the rate of 100 feet per annum.

The outside limit of the bar extends fully 1,500 feet farther out than it did during the year 1879. This very grave fact, together with the gradual increasing of the bar's width, has been carefully marked off on the charts.

These documents were laid upon a table and Major Quinn, after a thorough explanation, remarked that within ten years, should the present conditions remain as they are now, there would not be more than 10 or 12 feet on the deepest part of the bar. The slope of the jetties has been gradually decreasing, which slackens the current and removes the power which has in years past carried the mud of the river farther out to sea. There has been a gradual building up from the Head of the Passes down to the very mouth of the jetties. The only relief for the dangers which must come upon New Orleans is an extension of the jetties out into the sea, fully 1,500 feet, where the 20-foot shoals have begun to form.

At the mouth of the jetties there is a deep valley, as it were, where there is some 30 or 40 feet of water, but on each side of the works and beyond this deepened part of the Gulf there begin two banks of mud. Some of these lumps are so large that there is but 20 feet of water. The channel, however, is deep. Farther out there are other shoals, where from 30 to 40 feet of water can be found. Gradually the gulf deepens, until, at a distance of a mile and a half, there is 100 feet of water.

During 1879, three years after the building of the jetties, soundings and maps were made. The same depths then existed. There were 20 and 30 foot banks, but this shoaling up and gradual deepening began much closer to the immediate mouth of the jetties. At the rate of 100 feet for the year, these shoals have been moving farther away from the jetties.

Major Quinn explained further that with the shoaling up of the Gulf there was a decrease in the slope in the jetties and a corresponding decrease in the velocity of the stream. This was a very grave situation, for it meant certain ruin for the mouth of the river. Referring to a report upon the jetties, he stated that in 1879 the slope of the jetties was .856, while in 1895 it showed .621, or a decrease of .235.

In 1879, during the low tide, there was a slope of 1.242, while under the same conditions in 1895 there was a slope of 0.994. The slope of the jetties in 1879 during the mean tide was 1.05, and in 1895, the same conditions, the slope was 0.81.

Steadily this slope would be decreased until there would be no velocity to the stream and the filling up would come more rapid. He figured that within another fifteen years there would not be more than 10 or 12 feet of water on the bar.

Major Quinn was asked for his opinion as to a suitable and permanent remedy to this threatened calamity. The only relief which he could suggest, and this would be but temporary, was an extension of the jetties at least 1,500 feet. This would cost a vast amount of money. There would be more difficulty in extending the jetty work than previously, for the reason that there are deep places which must be crossed, and this would cost a vast amount of money and trouble. Then, too, even after this jetty work was complete there would have to be a renewal in another twenty or thirty years. He thought that the Eads Company could maintain the regular depth of water until the time their contract expired, but at the ending of this contract a vast amount of money would have been expended.

The Eads Company would have to keep a dredge boat constantly at work, for the passes are filling up. At present dredges are worked every day and a large force of men are kept at work upon the banks of the pass. He also found by the charts the same condition of affairs at the Southwest and Southeast passes. He has not as yet had time to make a thorough investigation of these outlets, however.

There was but one permanent remedy which Major Quinn could suggest, and that was to cut a canal from Algiers to Barataria Bay. There would be no currents into the bay to speak of, and this could be regulated with locks. At the end of the canal, in the bay, the jetties could be constructed so that deep water could be reached. This would make the distance between New Orleans and the Gulf, by water, only 50 miles, just one-half the distance along the river banks. This would require about five years' constant work, and within that time work would also have to continue on the jetties.

When these jetties are extended further out into the sea, their direction will have to be changed considerably. The mud banks on the west side have formed almost directly in front of the opening, while the banks on the east side of the jetties have drifted further away. This is most likely caused by currents in the Gulf.

Major Quinn was confident that something would have to be done upon the jetties before long, especially after the Eads contract has expired, which will be within a few years.

Mr. VEST. I care nothing about the personal part of this matter. I do not know Major Quinn. But I know that the people of the Mississippi Valley are deeply and intensely interested in the question as to the success of those jetties; and I know more than that, that when this interview or newspaper report in regard to what Major Quinn had said was published it created consternation in St. Louis and in all the country which is tributary commercially to New Orleans and is dependent upon the success of the jetties. If Major Quinn is correct then the outlet system is the proper one. If the outlet system is the proper one the jetties constitute a great blunder, and we have been expending millions of dollars for nothing. That is the inevitable result. As to the jetty system, I know personally from observation that it has been eminently successful in other places besides the mouth of the Mississippi. There are bars on the Mississippi River removed by the jetty system where no dredging is now required, and where there used to be 4 and 5 feet of water there are now 9, 10, and 12. There is upon the Missouri River to-day a piece of work extending 45 miles, done under the jetty system, which is the most perfect piece of riparian engineering in the United States. It was done by the Corps of Engineers upon the jetty plan. The Chief of Engineers claims in his letter to the Senator from Oregon that the jetty plan was originally adopted by the Corps of Engineers and afterwards was applied by Eads at the mouth of the Mississippi. But I care nothing about the matter. I do not wish to inject it here, and would not have done so except to make evident what I think is the truth—that the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi are not a failure at all.

Mr. CAFFERY. Neither the Senator from Missouri nor Mr. Corthell, whom the Senator appears to take as authentic proof, can put into my mouth words that I have never said. I do not charge the Senator from Missouri with that attempt, but the trend of his argument would seem to imply that there is hostility upon my part to the Eads jetty system.

Mr. VEST. No; I did not mean that.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator does not?

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. He quoted Major Quinn, and what I have said was in reply to the alleged statement of Major Quinn. For instance, when I asked the Senator's authority for the statement that the Eads estate was about to abandon the dredging on account of the expense and said, "Who made that statement?" his reply was, "Major Quinn." Now, permit me to say one other word. I am intimately acquainted with the executor and son-in-law of Captain Eads, Mr. McHenry. If any such idea obtains with Mr. McHenry or any of the heirs, and I believe there is only one other, of Captain Eads's estate, I have never heard of it. On the contrary, my information is that they propose to carry on that contract, and there never has been a shadow of a doubt in St. Louis, where Mr. McHenry has his home, that that was his intention.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not remember the exact words that I used yesterday in the part that I took in the debate, but I do not believe that I made the statement that the Eads heirs were about to abandon the jetty contract. I think in speaking of the cost of dredging, equalizing or about equalizing the amount of the installments that they would derive from the Government, I quoted Major Quinn. I will read precisely what I said:

Mr. CAFFERY. I know that the work of the current has been supplemented by the artificial work of dredgers. That I know. I have heard it stated that it was doubtful whether Eads's heirs would continue the dredging to maintain the depth, as the expense of dredging about equals the installments they would derive from the Government for keeping open the channel.

Mr. President, I know Major Quinn. I do not know Mr. Corthell. I do know that Major Quinn is an ornament to the service of the United States, both in his character as a man and in his equipment as an officer. He has made certain statements. He stated that the jetty channel was dredged. He stated that it was dredged to keep it open. The letter of Mr. Corthell read in the Senate proves that statement. He says there has been a small amount of dredging done, but there have been, I believe, one hundred and sixty-one days of dredging done out of five thousand days. I am not expert enough to know whether that amount of dredging would show that the jetties failed entirely in their purpose or partially in their purpose, but the fact remains that there has been dredging, and a considerable amount of dredging. The suction dredges which are now used throw out an immense quantity of mud or sand or gravel, as the case may be, in an hour. I think I heard a statement from the Senator from Missouri to the effect that one of the suction dredges used upon the Mississippi River in clearing out a sand bar would throw out 8,000 cubic feet of dirt in an hour. If, therefore, any dredges of that sort were used for one hundred and sixty-one days upon the Eads Channel an enormous amount of deposit would have been thrown out of the jetties.

I do not condemn, and Mr. Corthell can not make me condemn by a letter to anybody, the jetty system. When Major Quinn, as much as I think of him as a man and an officer, offered his judgment in regard to the comparative merit between the outlet system and the jetty system, it did not at all affect my judgment. I have seen enough of the jetty system and know enough of it to believe that while it will not at the mouth of the Mississippi River accomplish the entire dredging of the river, it will do so by being helped with dredges. That is not sufficient, however, to condemn it, and I do not condemn it for that reason. I believe that by narrowing the channel, and by giving greater velocity and volume to the current, sand bars in the Mississippi River or any other silt-bearing stream will be necessarily removed and the sandy bottom deepened. But where the tide only rises, as it does at the mouth of the Mississippi, about three feet and three feet and a half, there is not enough rise of water and the outgoing tide does not go down with enough velocity in low water to effect a complete dredging process, as is done, as the Senator from Missouri well knows, in certain rivers of Europe, where the ebb and flow of the tide is much higher than it is upon the Gulf of Mexico.

I do not want to be brought into a controversial discussion, nor do I want to be made to attack a principle of deepening rivers which I indorse so far as my limited judgment goes. I do not pretend to be an expert. I do not pretend to have that ability which I have heard advanced upon this floor, that a man can judge of the superiority of one harbor over another by looking at it. I know my judgment indorses the Eads project of improvement upon the Mississippi River. Not only that, but I believe that the levee system, in accordance with that principle of improving rivers, is necessary to the deepening of the channel of the Mississippi River, because it is only carrying out the system that Mr. Eads adopted at the mouth of the river. By confining the channel, by narrowing the water, not permitting it to spread over a vast area, you necessarily force the water to cut out obstructions.

I had intended before this discussion ended to say something about the two harbors on the Pacific coast; but I believe that any further remarks from me upon this point will be entirely unnecessary in view, as I am told, of the possible termination of the contentions between Senators who advocate one or the other of these harbors by a compromise acceptable to both sides.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in response to the statements made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

In the first place, I repudiate the intimation that there is anything of the so-called sand-lot agitation to be found upon the San Pedro side of this controversy. I wish to say to the Senator from Maine that the people of California are as law-abiding, and, with due deference to him and his constituents, as fully competent to take care of their own affairs, as intelligent, and as enlightened and progressive as are those whom he represents here.

As far as I am personally concerned, he places an estimate upon my character far from flattering when he assumes that I can be swerved in the slightest degree from the pathway of my duty by any ulterior influence or unreasoning excitement. I say to the Senator from Maine that however independent he may be I claim similar independence. I deny that my constituents are animated by any motives not creditable, manly, and thoroughly American. Those who are immediately interested in Los Angeles are persons of discrimination, fairness, and education. Nor is it true that I said one word in the somewhat lengthy argument made by me here that can be called undue criticism or uncalled-for censure of Mr. Huntington. I used no imprecatory phrase, no denunciatory epithets. I am confident that I have acted within the rules of politeness and duty. True, I do not and did not regard the soil upon which he treads as sacred, but I trust that I uttered no expression in reference to Mr. Huntington which was not becoming. His affairs when connected with legislation are to that extent proper matter for comment; so also of his motives. He is entitled to fair treatment and nothing more.

As my colleague [Mr. PERKINS] has said, the people of our State are always ready to do justice and have no disposition to oppress. They have resented certain interferences by Mr. Huntington and his associates in local affairs, and have demanded immunity in politics from corporate domination. The issue before us, however, must be solved upon other lines. I have endeavored to consider it on its merits, and Mr. Huntington's personality has less influence upon me perhaps than upon some who might be identified.

While the Senator from Maine was most eloquent and laudatory, and, I believe, extravagant in his praises of Mr. Huntington, I do not complain. It is a matter of taste for which I am not responsible. He can record his admiration, if it pleases him so to do. But I do complain of the caustic phrases he has used toward those who sent me here, and I assert he was not justified in the attacks so gratuitously made. The Senator from Maine says very truly that the proposed outer harbor is not to be a mere local improvement, and that the entire Senate—the country at large—is interested, and that it makes no difference what the people of Los Angeles want. He takes pains to tell the Senate he does not care what they want, a proposition which perhaps it was not necessary for him to announce here formally.

It is true that the nation is concerned in works of this kind. It is true that the views of the Senators from California are not conclusive. It is equally true that I might invade the domain of my friend the Senator from Maine and pass judgment upon public works in the State of Maine, and pay no attention to his recommendation. This course I might adopt as a member of the Committee on Commerce. Perhaps it would be my duty in certain contingencies to do so. I might act likewise regarding proposed improvements in other States. But surely I would not follow such a course without the gravest cause. It is the habit to yield somewhat to those who come from the locality immediately affected. It is sometimes the case that Senators who have resided for a long time in a particular neighborhood know more about it than a gentleman, however able he may be, whose eyes have been transitorily cast upon the troubled waters.

The distinguished Senator from Maine stood on the shore at San Pedro and he viewed the bay from the bluff. On Sunday he found himself upon the cliffs of Santa Monica, and looking upon the bay was charmed. This survey thus made by the Senator from Maine settled the harbor question, engineers to the contrary notwithstanding. It is true he did not make any soundings. Camille Flammarion, the celebrated astronomer, has very recently written that it is now possible to ascertain whether the seas in Mars are deep or shallow. As science has thus progressed, it is not singular that the Senator from Maine was able so accurately to determine the true inwardness of the harbor question during his brief visit to the Pacific.

The Senator from Maine tells us that he does not profess to be scientific; that he does not claim to be an engineer, familiar with all the details of breakwater constructions, yet he also declares that anyone—any man of sense who gazes upon the map which he produced must read there a recorded judgment in favor of Santa Monica. Perhaps I and other Senators may be able to endure in good health this flattering reference to our restricted and constricted and arrested mental development. But I submit that the evidence which is thus alluded to as conclusive does not convince and should not control those who are anxious to reach a correct result. There are other matters of far greater value to be considered.

There are various propositions that can not very well be understood by a mere glance at the map. However, it is true that this plat is useful. It shows that Santa Monica is merely an open roadstead. It can scarcely be called a bay. A casual inspection of the Coast and Geodetic chart dispels the delusion that there is any protection at Santa Monica from the dangerous ocean swells. The Senator from Maine several times declared that the southeast gales are the winds which are generally feared. We find in the Craighill report, under the head of "Meteorological conditions," the following:

> The prevailing wind on the California coast is from the northwest, nearly parallel to the coast line north of Point Conception, which is in latitude 34° 27′ N. At this point the trend of the coast changes from northwest to west. This fact, in connection with the bold topography of the shore, causes the prevailing winds along the southerly coast of California to be westerly. This wind never becomes more than a moderate gale. It never produces the heaviest waves. The disturbance of the water due to it is, however, always an inconvenience to vessels lying at a wharf exposed to its action, and when the disturbance is greatest there is danger to vessels. This wind prevails on the southern coast during the greater part of the year with the intermission of calms in the autumn and winter. In the last-named season occur the southerly offshore winds, which produce the heaviest waves to which the coast line is exposed.
> "Southerly offshore winds."
> A northeasterly land wind, known as the "Santa Ana," occasionally blows from the dry hot plains lying to the eastward. Its duration is short and it is severe, but having no fetch over the sea, it raises no waves near shore. It occurs both on Santa Monica and San Pedro bays.
> The southeaster comes in the winter and spring and brings rain. The storm first manifests itself by a wind from the southeast, which continues for a few hours, shifting then to the south and southwest. The storm clears up when the wind gets to the northwest. In these storms a heavy sea is developed, which breaks upon the coast line in waves of great magnitude. These waves come from the south and southwest. The waves produced by the southeast wind are short, designated by the sailors as choppy. The south and southwest seas, on the other hand, are long and heavy. A vessel at anchor under this exposure must, under these circumstances, get to sea, with the possibility of otherwise going ashore. It is the heave of the sea rather than the wind, although the latter alone is sufficiently dangerous, that makes the strongest ground tackle at times of no avail.

So the alleged terrible southeast gales amount to little, except in so far as they are ultimately the cause of the swells which proceed from the south and southwest. The southeast wind itself directly develops no waves save the short choppy waves just referred to, and the testimony, so far from sustaining the Senator from Maine, shows that it is the heave of the sea proceeding from the south and southwest which is to be remedied or counteracted. These exposures are absolutely protected by the harbor designed at San Pedro.

The Senate will notice the protection afforded San Pedro by Catalina Island, which is 17½ miles in length. The testimony is (and we scarcely need evidence to sustain that view) that this island tends to protect San Pedro Harbor. As I said in my opening argument, the calmest water anywhere in that ocean is on the land side or lea of Catalina, and the island being, as I have stated, 17½ miles in length, naturally influences the water even to San Pedro. Santa Monica is not thus favorably influenced by Catalina. The presence of frightful waves at San Pedro is the creation of the imagination of my friend the Senator from Maine. No one who has resided there and who is familiar with that coast has ever seen these alarming manifestations.

The San Pedro bluff affords proof that there are no such dangerous storms as those to which our attention has been called. The bluff shows no evidence of the battering to which we are told it has been subjected. It is a silent witness in refutation of the charge.

Said the Craighill board:

A strong evidence of the weakness of the destructive action of the southeast storms is seen in the very slow wearing away of the sandy cliffs and of the bluffs at San Pedro; nor could the exposed wharves be maintained in this region if the destructive action of the storms was great.

I have heretofore inquired why the southeast storms do not affect the inner harbor. Here [indicating] we find a narrow neck called Rattlesnake Island. The surface is but little above the sea, and if the winds blow with the force described, surely the shipping in the inner harbor would be injured. Nobody has ever heard of ships being affected at all in the inner harbor by the wind. No disturbance of that sort has ever been witnessed.

Again, the Senator from Maine stated that neither the first nor second board of engineers had any knowledge with reference to the westerly swells. The Senator is obviously mistaken. In the first report Colonel Mendell says:

San Pedro Bay is sheltered from the westerly winds by Point Firmin. It is open to the winds and seas from the southwest and to the prevailing southwest swell above noted, over an angle of 60° to the westward of Catalina Island.

It will be observed that Colonel Mendell speaks of the southwest swell, and one of the engineers, Colonel Hains, testified about it at the recent hearing. He said the same peculiarity is mentioned in the report of Colonel Craighill, already cited.

Colonel HAINS. The breakwater is to be carried around in such a direction that that exposure does not amount to much. In the first place, the southeast gales are of very short duration. They do not last long. The wind starts in from the southeast, but the sea comes from the southwest. The sea is what causes the trouble, not the wind; and the sea comes from the southwest.

Senator NELSON. It can not come from the southeast?

Colonel HAINS. Some seas come from the southeast; but the heaviest swells come from the southwest, even if the wind is blowing from the southeast. Then the wind generally shifts round to the northward.

The reason for the curved construction of the San Pedro breakwater is because it is designed to resist the westerly swells. While it is a fact that out as far as 7 miles from Point Firmin in the direction of Catalina Island there is to be found water not over 15 fathoms deep; while it is true also that 3 miles in a westerly direction there is water of very moderate depth, nevertheless if it be conceded that the depth westerly from Point Firmin is as claimed by Santa Monica advocates, still no point is made against San Pedro, for the breakwater will absolutely intercept this swell.

The very object of its construction is to cut off these waves, and that the section proposed is well designed there is now no question. On the other hand, when we come to Santa Monica Bay we have absolutely nothing to interfere with the southwesterly swells. The surf is not serious or the sea remarkably rough anywhere along the coast of southern California. At Hueneme, at Newport Landing, and at other places referred to by my colleague there are wharves extending directly into the ocean. In Monterey Bay there are wharves built seaward, and they stand. Senators not familiar with these uncommon conditions can not well appreciate the difference between the Atlantic and Pacific in this regard. The success of the Southern Pacific wharf is by no means phenomenal.

At Redondo, for instance, shown on the map, there is an excellent wharf in full operation. The water is very deep, and the pier is consequently short. It is worthy of note that while the water is deeper near Redondo than at many other places on the bay, no great difference in the westerly swells is observable. Before Mr. Huntington made his development above Santa Monica most of the Los Angeles coast business coming from San Francisco was transacted at Redondo because vessels were able to come up to a wharf and discharge their cargoes. The Pacific Coast steamship has been in the habit of calling at Redondo, and it has been rarely found difficult to discharge at that wharf. These illustrations suffice to show the availability of the southern California coast for wharf construction. A glance at the map discloses a number of shipping points similar to those mentioned.

The Senator from Maine alluded several times to Mr. Huntington's abandonment of Wilmington Harbor. He never has abandoned Wilmington Harbor. The Southern Pacific commenced to build a wharf near Point Firmin; Mr. Hood had charge of it. Mr. Hood was the same skilled engineer then that he is now, and he has been for a long time at the head of the engineering department of the railroad company. He was their chief engineer long before the Santa Monica wharf was built and he was thoroughly familiar with San Pedro when he commenced the pier near Point Firmin.

About the time that Mr. Huntington commenced work at Port Los Angeles the Terminal Railroad was built to Rattlesnake Island and commenced the transaction of business there. Redondo was doing, as I have said, the major part of the northerly business, taking most of it from Wilmington because of its proximity to San Francisco. So Mr. Huntington built his pier, not because of any special harbor advantages but to meet the competition referred to. He selected a point as far up as it was possible to go. The beach narrows proceeding toward Point Dume and Mr. Huntington has so arranged matters that it is practically impossible to pass him.

I have shown a photograph of the approach to Mr. Huntington's wharf. It will be observed that it is at the foot a bluff about 200 feet high. I exhibit the picture to the Senate. The isolation of the situation is clear. A study of the photographs filed makes comment unnecessary. Mr. Huntington controls the land upon this bluff, and the ownership extends to the sea and for some 2,000 feet along shore.

I do not deem the fact that any particular person owns this land as of controlling importance, but I desire the facts in the matter to be made of record.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the accessibility proposition. The Senator from Maine says that he does not know why the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company people are opposed to the Port Los Angeles breakwater. If the conditions were as the Senator from Maine describes them, of course the Santa Fe would not be opposed to it. If the managers of that corporation were not fearful of a monopoly they would naturally aid this appropriation. They want to reach tide water. They are already here [indicating] at Redondo Beach, and are not far, it will be observed, from San Pedro. Indeed, I have heard that they have some arrangement by which they pass over the Terminal line. But that is unimportant, and my knowledge regarding it is limited.

The Senator from Maine says that ten or twelve tracks can be constructed along the seashore at Santa Monica. But what will become of that town? Santa Monica is one of the most charming seaside resorts of which I have any knowledge. It is susceptible of great development and adornment. Its beauties will fade if its beach is devoted to railroads and locomotives. I can not believe that the trustees who control the subject will ever allow the intrusion of more railroads along the water front. Can boys and girls, women and children, nurses and babies safely be trusted upon a shore thus devoted to commercial uses? It is not to be anticipated that the members of the boards of trustees of Santa Monica will ever permit the place to be ruined.

But if further destruction of the beach is forbidden, how can competing railroads reach the protected harbor? It may be said that Santa Monica Canyon can be utilized for approach. But the difficulties of this plan are many. The route is circuitous, the grade severe; many private interests must be condemned. I believe that no competing railroad will construct a wharf there for years, and the erection of piers by parties of moderate means is impossible. It is not a matter of surprise to me that so much opposition is manifested to Mr. Huntington's plan by those who are actuated by business considerations rather than by sentiment.

The Senator from Maine mentions that there has never been the slightest trouble in maintaining the wharf which Mr. Huntington has built at Santa Monica. I have already observed that there is nothing remarkable in this. I do not doubt that this situation will be maintained for many years.

Occasionally landing will be difficult. For instance, last March the British ship Dunboyne was forced to leave the wharf because of an uncommon swell. She was towed away by the Pacific Coast Steamship Company's vessel Corona. But under all ordinary conditions I concede that any wharf on the southern California coast will fairly accommodate shipping. Santa Monica has no monopoly in that respect.

The Senator from Maine made a very able defense of Mr. Corthell. I do not complain that Mr. Corthell was employed by Mr. Huntington. I never have objected to that, but I do resent his attempt to pose as an official employed to give a disinterested opinion. He actually tells us in the letter which he addressed to the minority of the Commerce Committee that he acted in an official capacity. I read his language last week during this debate. What official authority had Mr. Corthell to make this examination? He says he was first spoken to by Mr. Huntington, and the Senator from Maine, who wanted, of course, an impartial report, sought the services of a man already spoken to by Mr. Huntington, and who had business connections with the latter, to make the inquiry.

Mr. Huntington was undoubtedly at liberty to employ Corthell, but the fact of such employment destroyed Corthell's disinterestedness. Could Corthell be bribed by the mere payment of a board bill? No one ever charged that he was bribed by the payment of a board bill or bribed in any other way; but I have asserted, and do say, that no hired expert, no man who is engaged to give an opinion by a party to a controversy, is as reliable a witness as a public officer who has nothing but his honor and reputation in issue. Mr. Corthell was employed for what? To assist Mr. Huntington in getting an appropriation for Santa Monica, a work in which he has been engaged ever since the Senator from Maine asked his opinion. Mr. Corthell, therefore, is an opinion witness testifying for his employer.

The very best men—persons of finest standing—have been found unequal to the task of impartiality under such conditions. Mr. Corthell is no exception. He is as intensely partisan as anyone can be. He is a loyal and warm advocate of Mr. Huntington, with whom he has long been associated, and whose interests he is seeking to conserve.

Certainly the Senator from Maine will not claim that Mr Corthell's opinions as an employee of Mr. Huntington are to be treated as disinterested and conclusive. Mr. Corthell is greatly interested. His correspondence with Senators, his anxiety to mix in its discussion, is demonstrative of his feeling. When the Senator from Maine and others connected with the river and harbor bills sent for Mr. Corthell and spoke to him about making this investigation in a State represented by other Senators, it was a little singular, it seems to me, that not a word was said to the officers entitled to speak for that State. Would it not be regarded as a little peculiar if I, as a member of the Commerce Committee, were to delegate some one to go to Maine to pass upon river and harbor matters there without consulting him at all? The Senator from Maine has said that he wishes to be courteous to everybody. Does he think this action to be the quintessence of courtesy?

The Senator from Maine says he is always anxious to yield to Senators upon the committee. One of the many characteristics of the Senator from Maine that I admire is his firmness, his positiveness, and the fact that, when he has an opinion, he is not afraid to express it, and to do so forcibly, and he generally adheres to his view. Does not each member of the Committee on Commerce know that if there ever was a determined chairman who not only wishes to have his own way, but nearly always does have it, it is the Senator from Maine? Talk about concessions! I have never known a man in my life to make fewer concessions than my friend the chairman of the Commerce Committee.

Mr. FRYE. I am always right. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE. Well, you think you are, and you are happy. I believe the Senator from Maine believes that he is always right; but one who credits himself absolutely is frequently in error. I hope the Senator from Maine will never again state in the presence of members of his committee that he is of such yielding and plastic temperament, of such conciliatory and conceding disposition. The Senator describes the formation of his opinion on this issue. In 1893, in the month of April, the Senator from Maine asserted upon this floor that his mind was fully made up. Why he desired any further investigation I do not know. Whether the Senator from Maine has ever in the course of his life changed an opinion formed by him deliberately I am unable to state. He may have done so in his younger days, but not in connection with his duties upon the Commerce Committee. His judgment is irrevocable.

The Senator from Maine, while disclaiming engineering attainments, seems to think that I was reflecting upon him in some way when I spoke of him as a navigator. I did think that the Senator from Maine was possessed of much nautical knowledge; but if I was in error I will withdraw the remark. [Laughter.] But while the Senator from Maine disclaims familiarity with technical matters he informs us that anyone can see the conclusive merits of his argument by a mere glance at his map. Those of the most ordinary intellectual development must see that he is right. This is his faith, and he does not hesitate to set up his nonprofessional judgment against those who have been employed by the Government to pass upon this subject. He not only relies upon himself against skilled authority, but he tells us that as there is one chance in ten of a decision in favor of San Pedro he will vote against the amendment which I offer. This is more conciliation.

Mr. President, the amendment which I have advocated involves the appointing of a commission of admittedly unbiased and impartial men to determine between these two locations—San Pedro and Santa Monica. What is the objection to this? The Senator from Maine says that possibly there might be a decision for San Pedro—only one chance out of ten, he declares. But this is quite enough. No impartial experts who choose San Pedro can, according to his view, be relied on. No impartial or other board for him. What does he want? He demands the power to personally solve this dispute his own way.

The Senator from Maine says that General Craighill stated that he was a fortifications engineer. So he did; and so he is; but the engineers of the Army of the United States have some riparian knowledge, I presume. They have general engineering skill. Their attainments are not confined to providing methods of defense. They have all had vast practical experience as well as thorough education in all branches of engineering science. It has been said that the reports of the boards of engineers as to San Pedro show that the main point considered was as to the availability of the harbor site for defense. This is inaccurate. The reports of these boards are here and show that but little space was devoted to mere fortification or defensive questions. A more intimate knowledge of the contents of these documents would prove beneficial.

Look at these seven volumes on my desk, compiled in the War Department and sent here for the study and enlightenment of myself, the Senator from Maine, and other Senators. What do we find? Only references to fortification matters? By no means. We find the advice and recommendation all through these books of the army engineers concerning riparian improvements. The great rivers, over which pass hundreds and thousands and millions of tons of commerce, are kept in proper condition under their management and control. The harbors needing improvement are committed to their care, not merely to carry out a project elsewhere devised, but their advice is solicited and obtained and acted upon with reference to the character of the improvements to be made. They furnish projects at the instigation of Congress. Grant that they are sometimes mistaken. Everybody is sometimes mistaken, except my friend from Maine, and we have his authority that he is never wrong. We concede that engineers are human—they are fallible—but if we have doubts as to the correctness of a conclusion which they have reached, let us investigate in an orderly way and obtain proper indorsement and authorization somewhere before we pledge ourselves to a contrary policy. If the eight engineers whose reports are being discussed are not all wrong this appropriation should not be made.

I have been criticised because I remarked that the Santa Monica site had been condemned. I would have been strictly accurate had I said that the engineers recommended San Pedro as the preferable place, and alluded to Santa Monica as comparatively undesirable. But this is a decision against Santa Monica. It is a virtual rejection of that site. It is true that many competent officers hold that the Santa Monica breakwater can be successfully constructed. Major Raymond does not think so, and I believe he has had more experience in the matter of breakwater building than anyone in the United States. He thinks—and his view seems to me rational—that the westerly waves will pass in behind the artificial protection. The construction parallel to the rectilinear shore does not appeal to his experience or mathematical investigation.

But, at all events, this disputation merely amounts to this, that my friend from Maine, the majority of the committee, and other intelligent, nonprofessional gentlemen, think that the engineers have made a mistake, and they propose not to let any contingent contract, not to do as Congress did in the case of the Brunswick Harbor, or in the Eads jetty matter—which, by the way, was approved by numerous members of the Engineer Corps—no success no pay—but we propose to appropriate flat $3,098,000 against the recommendation of our own officers, and in compliance with Mr. Huntington's unapproved solicitation, without any favorable recommendation. It is to that style of business that I object; and it is to the candid judgment of this Senate that I appeal. Senators, are you willing to make this appropriation without any recommendation, and are you ready to vote down the proposition that there must be some approval by some competent official authority? Can we afford to contribute governmental funds without any sanction or excuse?

I demand the judgment of a competent board. I have entire confidence in the Army Corps and in their opinions. Others differ from me. I am not unreasonable; but I insist that, even if Senators believe that developments lately transpiring indicate the preferable character of Santa Monica, still it is essential that we be accorded the favorable opinion of an able, qualified, and unprejudiced board suggesting the propriety of our action. Can you afford to vote down such a proposition?

I have repeatedly asserted that I announced no dogmatic rule for the formation of such a commission. I have no friends in this case to serve, no enemies to punish, but a duty I have to discharge. I want no stuffed commission, no prejudiced institution, nobody biased in any way whatever. I have submitted time and again to the majority of the committee the proposition that they should suggest some method of constructing an impartial board, and I have said that I would acquiesce, and yet that proposal has been refused, without reason assigned. I resubmit my proposal. I plainly suggest that there is no excuse, even tolerably plausible, against my tender.

My friend from Maine says that if there is to be an outer harbor at San Pedro then the inner harbor should not be improved. From this view I utterly dissent. The inner harbor of San Pedro is most valuable, even as it is. Wharves line the harbor frontage at that point—not piers costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, but wharves owned by moderate mercantile interests in Los Angeles—over which extensive commerce is transacted. This is done though only 14 feet at low tide is found upon the bar. When the Benyaurd project, adopted in this bill, shall have proved successful there will be 18 feet at low tide within that harbor and hundreds of wharves will demonstrate the success of the projects which the Engineer Corps has indorsed. The inner harbor is confined by low land. The bluff rises rather abruptly at San Pedro. The facilities for wharves and docks are marked, and the improvement of the so-called inner harbor has not only proven successful as far as it has gone, but few commercial projects offer more striking possibilities.

I have never known or heard of a citizen of Los Angeles opposed to the improvement of the inner harbor. The entire community appreciates its advantages and merits.

I have heard many things about the people of my home. Notwithstanding my long residence there I have been informed that the lawfully elected Representatives of that section are in the dark. My friend from Maine says that the present Congressman from that district was instructed when first nominated to support San Pedro, and that now he is renominated by a convention which passed a resolution in favor of Santa Monica.

The Congressional district convention—Republican, I am glad to say—to which allusion is made, passed a resolution in favor of all appropriations. In other words, they said, "We will take all the money you will give us." A willingness to absorb, not dependent upon a choice of places. A sentiment favoring donations common to all enterprising communities.

The Republican convention in California lately assembled was a very curious affair. I do not intend to discuss politics, but I must say that that body passed a resolution denouncing the Pacific Railroad funding bill as a fraud and an outrage, and at the same time put on the electoral ticket the vice-president of the railroad company offending—a very estimable gentleman. The only member of the California Congressional delegation who indorsed the funding bill, and who, by the way, is a very able member of the House Committee on Pacific Railroads, was elected a delegate to the national Republican convention upon a platform declaring not only against the funding bill, but also in favor of William McKinley and free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1. [Laughter.] If there is any subject not covered on both sides by my Republican local brethren, if my friends of the opposition have not agreed to all things that conflict, I am at a loss to interpret their singular platform. But the general sweeping resolution mentioned by the Senator from Maine merely amounts to an acceptance of all appropriations which we may make. Very few Republican conventions (I mean no offense) will decline to assimilate that which they can get. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. Did that convention make any specific reference to Santa Monica?

Mr. WHITE. No; but in the county of Los Angeles, where there are six assembly districts, two only of such districts acted upon the subject in recent Republican conventions and these passed resolutions in favor of San Pedro. So you have it. The immediate locality favors San Pedro. The Republican State convention indorsed the railroad as far as nominees were concerned, advocated all appropriations, McKinley, and free coinage, and opposed Democracy, monopoly, and the funding bill.

I am not responsible, I am glad to say, for the proceedings of the late Republican convention held in California. The Republican delegation being absent from that State, the convention evidently escaped from proper or consistent management. As far as the sentiment of the people of Los Angeles is concerned, I know whereof I speak when I say that their judgment is overwhelmingly for San Pedro. There are many, as I have said, who prefer to take Santa Monica rather than lose the appropriation; but, be it said to the credit of Los Angeles County, and let it be said to the credit of the workingmen of that prosperous section, and to the honor of the chamber of commerce and the board of trade, that they have all preferred to sacrifice a mere appropriation rather than to lose independence. The leaders and officials of almost all the labor organizations of Los Angeles have manfully and grandly supported the right in this struggle. They have emphatically declined to submit to blandishments and have approved of the course of myself and my colleague.

I feel that we should reach a vote upon this proposition at once, and I concur that the bill should reach conference immediately. I submit the issue to your candid judgment. Your opinion can not be coerced or controlled. You know this case now. Its various phases have been fully examined. I have sought to impress the facts upon you, content to rest my claims upon justice and truth.

The struggle which I have made here may seem stubborn to some, but it is maintained in the consciousness and belief that I am acting for the public interest. No demagogical appeal—notwithstanding intimations to the contrary—has influenced or ever will influence me. I have been as able as the Senator from Maine to maintain myself in my conservative methods without condescending to belittlement. I experience natural pride in my presence here, but I would willingly sacrifice that honor rather than yield my maturely formed judgment to any senseless clamor, to threats or flattery, to condemnation or applause, and I might say, Mr. President, that I had rather be a lawyer whose word was as good as the rich man's bond, and whose opinion upon an intricate question of judicial science was valued by the master minds of my profession, than to hold in my hand all the honors that ever were won by appeals to the passions or prejudices of men. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Senator from California has painted a picture of me which I do not believe any Senator who has been associated with me for quite a number of years will recognize. I think I do yield very frequently, and to a certain extent I am going to yield now, notwithstanding the charge which has been made against me—the navigator of the committee. I objected very seriously to the amendment offered by the Senator from California. It contained an army engineer as one of the commission. I am not saying anything against the army engineers, but in a question of this kind, in which there has been so much discussion and friction, to put on that commission an army engineer, when his chief is the head of the Engineer Department, and was the head of one of the boards which made report to Congress and has been under consideration, I do say that it is packing, in all human probability, the foreman of that jury, for he would be the foreman, and I should not be content with nor would I risk a commission of that kind. It was on that account that I said there might be one chance in ten of a commission so constituted reporting in favor of San Pedro.

The Senator has offered an amendment to strike out the item which the committee had inserted in the bill, and to insert his amendment. It is my right before that question is taken to perfect, so far as I may, the amendment which the committee itself reported, and I am going to propose a commission which, under the statement of the Senator made within the last fifteen minutes, I fail to see how even he can refuse to accept.

In order that the Senate may understand the amendment I now propose, I will read the first two lines of the amendment reported by the committee, which read in this way:

For a deep-water harbor at Port Los Angeles, in Santa Monica Bay, California.

After the word "California," in line 14 of that amendment of the committee, I move to insert these words:

Or at San Pedro, in said State, the location of said harbor to be determined by an officer of the Navy, to be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, an officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, to be detailed by the Superintendent of said Survey, and three experienced civil engineers, skilled in riparian work, to be appointed by the President, who shall constitute a board, the decision of a majority of which shall be final as to the location of said harbor. It shall be the duty of said board to make plans, specifications, and estimates for said improvement. Whenever said board shall have settled the location and made report to the Secretary of War of the same, with said plans, specifications, and estimates, then the Secretary of War may make contracts for the completion of the improvement of the harbor so selected by said board, according to the project reported by them, at a cost not exceeding in the aggregate $2,900,000, and $20,000 are hereby appropriated, so much thereof as may be necessary to be used for the expenses of the board and payment of the civil engineers for their services, the amount to be determined by the Secretary of War.

Mr. VEST. I will suggest to the chairman of the committee that he insert the words "who shall personally examine the localities named."

Mr. FRYE. I will say "who shall constitute a board and personally examine."

Mr. WHITE. I presume the Senator from Missouri has in view what he thinks is the necessity of re-sounding this harbor.

Mr. VEST. Yes. I do not want this work done by proxy, as has been done in other cases.

Mr. WHITE. I will suggest that the Coast and Geodetic Survey charts, upon which navigation is conducted on that coast, are presumably accurate. However, I only make that statement because I do not think it is just to criticise General Craighill for not making soundings, which had been officially done by the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Still, I am not objecting to the re-soundings.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that $20,000 is not an adequate sum for that kind of work.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was just making that same suggestion to me.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that if the President of the United States selects three engineers such as he ought to select, each one of them should have at least $10,000 for that work.

Mr. FRYE. Suppose we make the amount $40,000?

Mr. TELLER. I should say it ought to be at least $50,000—say "to be used in the discretion of the President, not exceeding $50,000."

Mr. FRYE. Very well.

Mr. PERKINS. I would also suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce that there should be limit of time within which the matter shall be determined. It does not seem to me that it should be like Tennyson's brook, to run on forever. I think there should be a limit of time.

Mr. FRYE. No; I do not think there should be. I think the board should have all the time they need to settle this question. There is one thing above everything else I wish, and that is a settlement of this vexed question.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to remark to the Senator from Maine that it seems to me that it would be fairer and better to take two of the members of the board from civil life and two from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, or one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey and one from the Navy. It occurs to me that it would be better to have more public officials on the commission who are responsible to the Government. I simply make the suggestion as giving my views about it.

Mr. FRYE. I am obliged to the Senator; but I have all day been running this over in my mind, and as a conclusion, a fair conclusion of this contest, I finally have settled down upon this proposition. As a matter of course, I have yielded a good deal in doing so. The Senator from California is practically having his own way, when he says he simply asks an entirely impartial board.

Mr. BERRY. Is the proposition satisfactory to the Senator from California?

Mr. WHITE. I have stated that I would accept any impartial board, and I usually stick to what I say, or try to do so, and I believe the President of the United States—I not only believe, but I know—will do his duty in this regard. If I had my way about it I would rather have one army engineer, but I see no reason to think that this will not be an absolutely impartial board. I think all the other boards have been impartial; but this is an endeavor to reach a conclusion satisfactory to the Senate, and I will adhere to what I stated. I have consulted with those who agree with me about this matter, with as many as I could talk to about it, and it seems to be the general impression that I should accept the amendment. While I have my preferences, as stated, I do not wish to interpose any objection to the accomplishment of a plan which is a concession by the Senator from Maine and also a concession by the Senator from California. I think we can afford to stand upon it.

Mr. FRYE. I offer the amendment, then, Mr. President.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, as one of the minority of the committee who objected to the majority report, I am entirely in favor of this amendment, and I am very glad that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the chairman of the committee, has conceded so much. There never was a time during the sessions of the committee when the minority of the committee would not have joined with him in obtaining what we all regarded as a fair and impartial board; and I think the amendment he now offers to us proposes just such a scheme as that. For one I hope that it will be adopted and that this plan of settlement will be agreed upon by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] will be stated.

Mr. FRYE. I am inclined to think there is no need of reading the amendment again. It comes in after the word "California," in line 14, on page 35.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the amendment be read at the desk, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 14, after the word "California," it is proposed to insert:

Or at San Pedro, in said State, the location of said harbor to be determined by an officer of the Navy, to be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, an officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, to be detailed by the Superintendent of said Survey, and three experienced civil engineers skilled in riparian work, to be appointed by the President, who shall constitute a board, and who shall personally examine said harbor, the decision of a majority of which shall be final as to the location of said harbor. It shall be the duty of said board to make plans, specifications, and estimates for said improvement. Whenever said board shall have settled the location and made report to the Secretary of War of the same, with said plans, specifications, and estimates, then the Secretary of War may make contracts for the completion of the improvement of the harbor so selected by said board, according to the project reported by them, at a cost not exceeding in the aggregate $2,900,000, and $50,000 are hereby appropriated, so much thereof as may be necessary to be used for the expenses of the board and payment of the civil engineers for their services, the amount to be determined by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine why it would not be reasonably good policy to require this board to report to Congress and have further Congressional legislation upon the subject after that report and before an appropriation is made?

Mr. FRYE. That is a question for the Senate. I am in favor of ending this matter by authorizing the Secretary of War to make the contracts whenever they report. I am in favor of ending it.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply asked to have the proposed amendment read, not because I am personally interested in it one way or the other further than I am interested as a representative of the taxpayers, but for the purpose of emphasizing two important points: First, Congressional responsibility is absolutely shirked by the amendment; and second, in the compromise which has been made between the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce and the honorable Senator from California the very important item of appropriating $2,900,000 has not been overlooked on either side.

Mr. VILAS. If I heard the amendment rightly it is not proposed to strike out.

Mr. FRYE. Yes. I propose to follow the amendment by a motion to strike out.

Mr. VILAS. The amendment was not so read.

Mr. FRYE. I propose to follow the amendment by another.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what would be the condition of the appropriation of $392,000 for the channel.

Mr. FRYE. That is left in the bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is left in?

Mr. FRYE. It does not touch that.

Mr. LINDSAY. It is separate from this amendment?

Mr. FRYE. It is a separate item.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Now, I move to strike out all after the word "aggregate," in line 23. That has been rendered unnecessary by what has been put in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "aggregate," in line 22, strike out the remainder of the amendment of the committee down to and including line 10, page 36, in the following words:

Two million nine hundred and ninety-eight thousand dollars, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided however, That prior to the expenditure of any part of the money hereby appropriated the Southern Pacific Company, or the owner or owners thereof, shall execute an agreement and file the same with the Secretary of War that any railroad company may share in the use of the pier now constructed on the site of said harbor, and the approaches thereto, situated westerly of the easterly entrance to the Santa Monica tunnel, upon paying its proportionate part of the cost of the same and its proportionate part of the expenses of maintenance of the same, to be determined by the Secretary of War in case of disagreement between the parties.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 108, after line 6, I move to insert:

Buffalo Fork of White River, from mouth to mouth, on Rush Creek, with a view to determine the character and extent of improvement required.

Mr. WHITE. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to what I consider a matter that needs a little change in the Santa Monica amendment reported.

Mr. FRYE. Let the amendment I have just proposed be agreed to first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 6, page 108, insert:

Buffalo Fork of White River, from mouth to mouth, on Rush Creek, with a view to determine the character and extent of improvement required.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. In section 8, providing for preliminary examinations, after line 4, page 111, I move to insert "La Trappe River."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. The committee has no other amendment to propose.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Maryland, before he offers his amendment, allow me to ask that a little amendment be made?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 76 I offer an amendment which I hope will be adopted. After the word "appropriated," in line 2, I move to insert:

Provided, That in making such contract or contracts, the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be expended.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CULLOM. It applies to only one item in the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. To what item does the amendment apply?

Mr. CULLOM. To the Illinois and Michigan Canal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SMITH. I ask what item it refers to?

Mr. CULLOM. It refers only to the Illinois and Michigan Canal appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to get a small amendment made before he enters into a discussion? It is merely verbal.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. On page 7, line 13, after the word "upon," I move to insert "the construction by"; in line 14, to strike out the word "constructing" and insert "of"; and to insert, at the end of the paragraph, after the word "causeway," the words "upon plans approved by the Secretary of War." It is merely a technical amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, page 7, after the word "upon," insert the words "the construction by"; and in line 14, strike out the word "constructing" and insert "of"; and at the end of the paragraph, after the word "causeway," insert "upon plans approved by the Secretary of War"; so as to read:

Improving harbor at Bridgeport, Conn.: Continuing improvement, in accordance with the modified project, $28,000, $10,000 of which shall be expended upon Yellow Mill Pond for constructing a channel 12 feet deep and 200 feet wide from the main channel to the causeway, conditioned upon the construction by the city of Bridgeport of a drawbridge at the causeway upon plans approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, there is another matter connected with the San Pedro and Santa Monica affair to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine. In the testimony of Mr. Huntington, page 33 of the hearings, he said:

Other roads which want to use our tracks can use them on the same conditions that we do; that is, paying interest on a portion of the track according as their business compares with that of the Southern Pacific Company. If they wish to use the pier of the Southern Pacific Company, it can be used in the same way.

And so on. In the alternative proposition contained in the amendment I think the Senator from Maine should modify the phraseology used, so that if Santa Monica were awarded the appropriation there should be a clause requiring consent upon the part of the railroad company to the use of their tracks on the terms suggested by the president of the corporation. It will require a little time to prepare it exactly in accordance with the conditions surrounding it. I make the suggestion to the Senator now, so that when the bill gets into conference he will not overlook it.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to it at all, but it would have to be drawn with some care. Of course you will have to provide that if Santa Monica should be selected then the company would be under obligation to do it.

Mr. WHITE. Undoubtedly. I will submit an amendment to the Senator that I think will cover it. I have not drawn one that exactly suits me with reference to it.

Mr. FRYE. All right; I have no objection. One moment, if the Senator from Maryland will allow me; on the Santa Monica amendment, page 35, I inserted the amendment after the word "California." All the rest should be stricken out—"said harbor to be formed," etc. Does the Secretary understand it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The clerks understand it.

Mr. FRYE. All that should go out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from Maryland if he will yield to me to offer an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, page 107, insert:

For the examination of sites and report upon the practicability and desirability of constructing reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water, to prevent floods and overflows, erosion of river banks and breaks of levees, and to reenforce the flow of streams during drought and low-water season, and to increase and utilize the supply of water for irrigation, at least one site each in the States of Wyoming, Utah, and Nevada.

Mr. WARREN. I had intended to occupy five or ten minutes in presenting this matter, but I will not trespass upon the time of the Senate or upon the good nature of my friend from Maryland, who has the floor. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will consent that the word "Colorado" may be added?

Mr. WARREN. I would be glad to have it added.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let "Colorado" come in after "Nevada."

Mr. THURSTON. I ask the consent of the Senator from Wyoming to insert "Nebraska" also.

Mr. WARREN. I have not the slightest objection to letting in all the States of the Northwest.

Mr. BAKER. I ask that the name of "Kansas" be inserted.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated, with the modifications suggested.

Mr. FRYE. I think that if it is to extend all over the United States I had better interpose a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not understand the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. I think I had better interpose a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SQUIRE. It is only preliminary.

Mr. THURSTON. It covers only the arid or semiarid region.

Mr. WARREN. I trust that the chairman of the committee will not make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. It is extending all over the country.

Mr. WARREN. Then I desire to say a few words at this time.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will explain his amendment as briefly as he reasonably can, I should like to have him do so.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is with us an important problem, which in my opinion ought to be solved, and that is, whether it is necessary or desirable or practicable to commence the work of impounding the surplus waters in the mountains and high plains in the Rocky Mountain country near to and above the arid plains—agricultural country. My attention was brought to this matter during the discussion of the pending bill by the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and I will read from his remarks. He said:

Now, I have not the slightest doubt but what the Missouri River can be improved and navigation brought back to it, and it can be made a portion of the great waterway to the Gulf, for it is really the Mississippi River. It gives color to it, and it ought to have given name to the whole river. * * *

We have appropriated hundreds of thousands of dollars (and I have been as much responsible for it as any Senator, possibly more so, under the demands of my constituents) at different localities to prevent erosion of the banks, to save walls, to save farms, and the money has been expended and the work washed away in the freshet that came down from the Rocky Mountains, from Montana and the Dakotas, in the next year. What we suffer from there is what has endangered the Lower Mississippi—immense fires upon the head waters of the Missouri, that destroy the undergrowth and the mosses and herbage that would absorb the water, and it runs as it would over the top of this desk when the snows break up in the spring and pours a flood down the Missouri and Mississippi, resulting in immense erosion and destruction of lands and even of towns.

The waters of the Missouri River come from the mountains, where great valleys—at one time inland seas and lakes, probably—pour the water from their vast watersheds, snow accumulations, and springs out through narrow gorges or chasms which have been at some point worn through the rocks by the escaping water. In many places not expensive dams or embankments could be constructed so as to catch and hold immense bodies of water during the seasons of melting snow and high water, and through proper gates and sluiceways this surplus could be drawn off for use during the dry, low-water season.

There are also great depressions in the high plains where nature has done so much that but little more is necessary to construct permanent and very extensive catchment basins.

The storage of these surplus waters as indicated would be of very great and important benefit in many directions.

First, it would prevent floods and overflows and consequent erosion of river banks all the way down to the Missouri River; also all along the Missouri and, indeed, the whole Lower Mississippi from the mouth of the Missouri to the ocean, its benefits thus extending thousands of miles; in the abatement of erosion of river banks, breaking of levees, and the inundation and damage of broad areas in the lower country.

Second, this reserve supply of surplus water gathered in flood time would be drawn off during times of drought, thereby keeping up an even flow in streams valuable for domestic purposes as well as for the benefit of navigation.

Third, and most important of all, this great reserve supply could be diverted and used for irrigation, mining, and mill purposes while on its way from mountain top to sea level, losing little or nothing but time on its way, the ultimate volume being but slightly, if at all, diminished through such uses.

Fourth, the presence and use of this additional water would, according to accepted theories, greatly increase rainfall in those high, dry regions, thus reproducing and increasing itself.

It may be said, Mr. President, that this is too big an undertaking for the Government to consider, or that the several States should take up this enterprise and expenditure. To this I answer, these waters form a part of interstate streams, and the impounding of water at certain seasons of the year and distributing it at others benefits equally, though not perhaps exactly in the same manner, different States all the way from our northern border to the Gulf of Mexico.

Again, the lands where these reservoirs are to be located belong to the United States, and if we are to relegate this problem and its solution to the different States, then let us appropriate the lands to the States and otherwise assist them.

In either case, the river and harbor bill is, in my judgment, where we should provide for it, whether we appropriate money to build works or appropriate lands to the several commonwealths.

Mr. President, I assume that the genius or plan of so-called river and harbor bills is to appropriate money to be expended in the interest of commerce and trade, and that primarily it matters not in what State or States the money is to be expended, the object always being to benefit the United States as a whole, as the result of improvements accomplished, rather than to benefit the States or localities where these improvements happen to be made, through the patronage or disbursement of the money expended in such locality.

As a matter of fact, however, such bills seem sometimes to be regarded as appropriations for the particular benefit of the several certain localities. Senators and members of Congress demand that States they represent be recognized; that constituents expect appropriations for their own particular States, and in many cases it seems as if the usefulness of a Senator or member is, by his constituents, measured by the amount he is able to obtain in the river and harbor bill for expenditure within his own State or district.

Thirty-seven of the States of the Union are named in this present bill, and appropriations of certain amounts are ordered expended within such States. The District of Columbia is also remembered. Four of the States not mentioned by name border on the Missouri River—namely, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas—and are interested in the quite liberal appropriations for improvements of the Missouri River opposite them. But there remains, Mr. President, four States in a group together, and four alone, that are not named as participants in this distribution, nor do they touch upon waters where money is to be expended. In other words, four States out of forty-five are cut off without a shilling. These are Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and Nevada. And it so happens that these States, so unfortunately excepted, have greater need for the expenditure of public money to promote trade and commerce and national as well as local prosperity than almost any other in the Union. These States are far above their sisters in altitude, and within their borders are the headwaters of the great interstate streams flowing out in all directions. Within these States are the mountain forests—or what is left of them—which gather the snow in winter, retaining it until spring or summer, and furnishing to the great rivers the largest proportion of their water supply. There should be within these States vast reservoirs to receive, retain, and distribute from the surplus waters, thus providing for the necessities of commerce.

Mr. President, turn it whichever way you will, the States I name in this amendment and the investigation I ask ought to be considered in this bill. Let there be an investigation by competent Government engineers, who, in conjunction with the several State engineers of the States mentioned, can report upon plans and ways and means, and Congress can then determine whether the United States will enter into the detention and storage of waters direct, or whether the States shall be aided by turning over to them the public lands within their borders.

In any event, I submit that it is no more than fair and just that these arid-land States shall participate hereafter in the deliberations, emoluments, and perquisites of river and harbor bills. If money appropriated is to be distributed with some little regard for local benefits, then give us our share. If it is purely pro bono publico, then what expenditure could be more generally beneficial to the United States as a whole or a greater portion than that which I propose?

It has been said of New England that every drop of water trebles its value by turning the wheels of industry on its route or flow from hills and highlands to ocean. How much more important, then, that we stop this waste of water that in time of flood rushes past immense areas of drought-stricken country, tearing away river banks and levees, and inundating the lowlands in its mad race from mountain to sea, and by impounding these waters high up in the valleys and depressions of mountain and plain, they can be released when needed, using a portion while en route to irrigate the arid, dry stretches of agricultural lands, and creating a regular, moderate, nondamaging flow through the lower country, at all times below high-water mark, and at no time far below the general-average mark.

Mr. President, I commend this matter to the earnest attention and investigation of the distinguished chairman and members of the Committee on Commerce, and I beg that committee to expect a vigorous struggle for proper recognition of this whole subject in the forthcoming river and harbor bills.

We demand in justice that these States mentioned shall at least have the benefit of the services of employees of the Government, and a statement from Government engineers whether this work and plan is practicable or not, and whether it shall be carried on by the Government or by the several States.

This is all I have to say at this time, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Maine to make the point of order?

Mr. FRYE. I dislike very much to make the point of order, and I will not. I will take a vote of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, on page 107, it is proposed to insert:

For the examination of sites and report upon the practicability and desirability of constructing reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water, to prevent floods and overflows, erosion of river banks, and breaks of levees, and to reenforce the flow of streams during drought and low-water season, and to increase and utilize the supply of water for irrigation, at least one site each in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, Colorado, Nebraska, and Kansas.

Mr. CARTER. I move to insert the State of Montana.

Mr. WARREN. I should be glad if it were extended to all the Western States, and in bringing in the amendment I did not intend to cut out any; but I named the States which had not been named in the river and harbor bill, with the exception of the State of Colorado, to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] called my attention. But as this is simply for an examination, it strikes me to be impracticable to make these examinations in all the States under present appropriations. I will simply say that if all the States, or all the arid States, are to be added, I pray the chairman of the committee will increase the appropriation or provide some means whereby the investigation can be made. It ought to be made in all the arid States.

Mr. FRYE. If there is going to be any increased appropriation the chairman of the committee will make the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. While I do not make a motion to extend it, I do not want to cut out Montana. I should like the other States to be included, but I do not wish to have the amendment cut out on their account. I beg Senators will not insist. If the chairman of the committee is going to make a point of order against the amendment if the other States are added, then I ask the Senators from the other States to withdraw the amendments proposed, and let it go as first proposed.

Mr. FRYE. I said I would allow a vote to be taken, but if a sufficient number of States are to be added here to make a majority of the Senate, then I suppose it would be rather doubtful whether it is the duty of the chairman of the committee to interpose with a point of order.

Mr. TELLER. It might endanger the bill, I should say.

Mr. SHOUP. I was about to ask the Senator from Wyoming to include the State of Idaho. Does the Senator in charge of the bill object?

Mr. VEST. I make the point of order upon the amendment that it is new legislation; that there is no estimate for it; that there is no report from a standing committee.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from Missouri whether the point of order made against so many States would be made against one State alone?

Mr. VEST. It is against the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that I am so earnest in my desire to have some examination made that I am willing to withdraw the State which I have the honor to represent in part, and to confine the investigation to any one State or any one site in the arid region that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will name.

Mr. VEST. That is not the point.

Mr. WARREN. Or any one site in the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. For my part I shall very gladly join hands with the Senator from Wyoming. He contends for a principle which the Senate ought to recognize. So far as I am concerned and the share that I have in representing the State of Colorado, I will withdraw that State, if Senators will permit under this bill an examination and report as to any section in the arid belt of the West, so that we may have some intelligent information as to the needs and possibilities of utilizing the waters of those sections which now go to waste.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope it will be confined to one State, and that that State will be the one represented by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who offered the amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I heartily agree with that suggestion.

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw my proposed amendment.

Mr. THURSTON. I withdraw my proposed amendment; but I should like to suggest that Colorado is one State which under all circumstances ought to be joined with Wyoming. They both lie similarly situated with respect to the great watershed of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest that we put those two States in.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his point of order and let the two States of Wyoming and Colorado go into the bill for an examination.

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope so, too.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. VEST). Withdraw your point of order.

Mr. GORMAN. Question!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the point of order withdrawn?

Mr. WARREN. I wish to add my further appeal to the Senator from Missouri, if he has not already withdrawn it, to withdraw the point of order. I am perfectly willing that he shall name any State and that it shall be confined to one site. I simply desire that the principle or plan may be investigated by a Government engineer, so that we may have a report.

Mr. VEST. As I remember the legislation in regard to this matter, we have made an appropriation in the sundry civil act, and one of the bureaus of the Government is now engaged in this particular matter. Besides that, we have given a million acres of land to each of these States—to three of them anyhow—for the purpose of testing this very matter. Now it is proposed to put in a river and harbor bill this amendment not germane to the bill. It ought to go upon some other bill if it is adopted at all after what we have done. We are told it might endanger the river and harbor bill. Then let it go.

Mr. WARREN. One word, if I may be permitted. There were, it is true, a million acres granted in the sundry civil act to each arid State under certain almost impossible conditions, but while so granted these States were simply given the privilege of selecting lands for certain of their settlers, 160 acres apiece, and there is no provision for the States to occupy the lands for reservoirs in that act, I am sorry to say, or I should not offer the amendment now.

I desire to say further that the State which I have the honor to represent in part has already executed with the Government three different contracts and is proceeding to avail itself of that privilege not to the benefit of the State financially, but for the benefit of those who wish to carve out homes and farms in that new country. They are proceeding as fast as they can under the act in question, but we meet this difficulty—that there must be storage of water in order to make it successful. We are confronted with the proposition that the lands belong to the United States. There is no law at present whereby States or individuals can secure them or the use of them for reservoirs as proposed.

The Government, on the other hand, is not prepared to proceed as to reservoirs and reservoir sites. It seems to me that it is very little for the four States named in this bill to ask sufficient consideration to obtain the report of a Government engineer for at least one site.

If the spirit manifested in this discussion on the part of some Senators whose States are snugly and generously provided for in this river and harbor bill is to prevail, and if we are to be ruled out on a point of order when it is manifest a majority of the Senators desire the amendment to be adopted, then I say it seems to me that the plan of extending the limits just far enough in river and harbor bills to include a sufficient number of States and the Senators therefrom to secure votes enough for the passage of the bill is an unfair and unjust one, and I desire to serve notice now that, so far as I am concerned, if it is to be a close corporation hereafter of few or many States, and the wants of some other States are to be unconsidered and a great national question like this of storage of waters, in which some of the States are vitally interested, is to be ignored as is proposed now, by the enforcement of a point of order, then I can not consent to give my support and vote to future river and harbor bills.

I shall at least ask for an explanation before I can give my individual vote for bills of this nature. I do not say this as meaning that I shall not vote for the present bill, but I am speaking of the future.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that the four States that are left out are the close corporations and that the others constitute an open corporation.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; we are a closed-out corporation.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to say that the people living on two-thirds of the area of the United States are interested in the matter now proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and, speaking for the people of Kansas, we will vote—100 per cent of us—for the project that he now submits in order that we may make a beginning in the direction he so earnestly and ably advocates.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator offering the amendment will withdraw it, and not attempt to place a provision of this sort on the river and harbor bill. It is entirely foreign to every provision and item in the bill. The Senator from Wyoming, and all the Senators representing those great States, will remember that Congress for the past six or eight years has appropriated liberally to the Interior Department. The money has been expended under the direction of the Geological Survey. Not all of the sites that are available for storage of water have been ascertained, but a great many of them have been. That information is now being collected by the only Department which can properly take charge of the subject.

Mr. WARREN. Permit me to say that the money so appropriated is not to be expended in those States to any great extent. In fact, nearly every Eastern State receives an expenditure of a greater amount than is expended in any Western State. A very slight amount of the money that is appropriated is expended there.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we were going on systematically under Major Powell and were locating these very sites for reservoirs with a view of reserving them so that the States might have them when the Senators representing those States themselves came forward and asked for a donation of a million acres of land to each that the States might undertake it themselves, having all this information about the sites.

Mr. WARREN. A million acres was not donated, but placed at the disposal of States under almost impossible conditions.

Mr. GORMAN. Now at this session, and at the request of all the Senators representing those States—take the State represented by the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], whom I have now in my eye—we inserted a provision in the sundry civil bill which practically turns over a million acres of land to each one of those States.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to one fact. We put a provision in one of the bills that the Interior Department, through the Geological Survey, should make examination as to those sites. There was a clause put in that the sites should be reserved after they had been located. Under that the Department of the Interior construed the law to withdraw from entry and occupation all the land of the United States, in other words, that that law repealed all the settlement laws of the United States. They were about to cancel 135,000 entries. Of course that left 135,000 settlers without any title, and we insisted upon a repeal of the whole provision, for it was becoming an intolerable curse to that section of the country. That is why it was repealed. So far as I am concerned I am very much afraid to have the Government of the United States put its hands on this question after that experience.

Mr. GORMAN. The point I want to impress upon Senators, and upon the Senator who offered this proposition, is that on the proper bill, the sundry-civil bill, when the question has come up, the Senate, on both sides, has dealt very liberally with this matter and we are prepared to do so, knowing it to be one of the great coming questions of this country. But on the river and harbor bill, I suggest to my friend who offered the amendment, it has no earthly place. It will meet antagonism which it would not have if considered in connection with the proper bill. I trust, without having the slightest feeling about the matter, that the Senator will recognize the universal rule of the body in discussing a question upon the bill where it properly belongs. That is all there is in this case.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Maryland please tell me on what bill it properly belongs? It is in respect to the water of streams and the uses of water. It seems to me that in the river and harbor bill there are many streams mentioned that I never saw nor heard of when I studied geography. We never see or hear of them when we go through the States mentioned, but I presume it is necessary that such streams shall be improved. This bill seemed to me to be the place for directing the engineers of the Government, who are directed by the bill already to examine certain streams, to examine this problem. It must be understood that we do not ask for a dollar of special appropriation or of the expenditure of any money except incidental expenses necessary for traveling, etc., for the employed agents of the Government. I again ask to what bill should we attach it?

Mr. GORMAN. To the sundry civil bill, I will state to the Senator, where it has always been.

Mr. WARREN. That bill has been passed.

Mr. ALLISON. The sundry civil bill is generally the omnium gatherum of items that do not go anywhere else; but I do not quite agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] as to the scope and purpose of the pending amendment.

There is one clause in it which, as I remember it, provides for an examination into irrigation. It seems to me that any appropriation for irrigation purposes is not germane to the river and harbor bill. But it is not a new thing, I submit to the Senate, to have argumentation and suggestion as to the storage of the waters of the Upper Missouri and the Upper Mississippi as affecting the flow of water into the Gulf of Mexico; and, although I do not remember it specifically, I venture the statement that in this bill there is an appropriation of a hundred thousand dollars or more for the purpose of storage reservoirs in the State of Minnesota. I remember a great many years ago to have examined the subject and to have found it a very interesting one. An old gentleman, who had examined the waters of the Mississippi River, their flow and overflow, conceived the idea that by establishing storage reservoirs in the northern portion of Minnesota, which is a flat country, the water could be there stored by raising a dam 3, 4, or 5 feet high, and that thus you could gather an immense quantity of water, which could be utilized upon the Mississippi River in periods of drought.

I participated somewhat a good many years ago in a little debate here upon that subject. Some years afterwards we put into a river and harbor act a provision looking to the gathering of those waters in the northern portion of the State of Minnesota, and if there is not an appropriation in the pending bill for that purpose it is because those dams and reservoirs have been so completed that further appropriations are not considered important.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Iowa understands that that was only for the purpose of navigation, not irrigation.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated in the beginning of my observations that if the word "irrigation" were left out of the amendment it would be a germane inquiry to insert in a river and harbor bill as affecting the overflow of the waters of the Missouri and the Mississippi, as affecting the mouth of the Mississippi River, as to what we shall do in the great future respecting the levees and dams and jetties which are a continuous annual expense to the Government of the United States, and undoubtedly will be as long as water runs.

If there could be reservoirs in the high mountain regions for the storage of the immense body of water that comes down the Missouri River at certain seasons of the year, and if there could be erected dams which would check the flow of water in the Mississippi at certain seasons of the year, it seems to me it is an intelligent investigation which would be valuable to the people of this country, and especially to the interior portion of it, where those waters flow and where the overflows occur. But it requires investigation by an army officer, perhaps, or some one who is an expert in all these questions of the effect of waters in the stream, when and how they gather and flow to the Gulf or to the ocean, as the case may be. I do not think we should restrict this inquiry. I think it is a very late hour, I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming, to propose the amendment; but I think at some time we might well enter upon this investigation.

Mr. VEST. I am so anxious to get a vote upon the bill and to get rid of it that I will say to the Senator from Wyoming and the other Senators interested that if they will strike out the word "irrigation" and let it apply to navigable streams, as is done in the case of the appropriation now in the bill for reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi, I will not raise the point of order unless some other Senator does. I do not believe in the system of reservoirs at all; I never have voted for it in committee or anywhere else, but if the irrigation feature is eliminated I will not make the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that I am willing that the objectionable word shall be stricken out, because I know that if the point of order is insisted upon, and it shall be maintained by the Chair, we can not get an expression of the Senate upon this subject; so, under the circumstances, I am compelled to accept whatever the Senator offers. I therefore give my consent to striking out the objectionable though by far the most important word in the amendment, that of "irrigation." If it is his intention, however, to apply it to the navigable streams and the head waters thereof, then it might seem better to include more of the States. I am willing, under the circumstances, that the word "irrigation" shall be stricken out.

Mr. SMITH. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will insist upon including the other States, because this seems to be a general grab-bag business, and as there are about $70,000,000 to be appropriated, there certainly ought to be enough to give each State a part of it. I should like to vote to have it properly distributed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] as modified.

Mr. BAKER. How does the amendment read now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 107, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

For the examination of sites and report upon the practicability and desirability of constructing reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water to prevent floods and overflows, erosion of river banks, and breaking of levees, and to reenforce the flow of streams during drought and low-water season, at least one site each in the States of Wyoming and Colorado.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. After the pending bill was ready for report, or about that time, and before the committee could have an opportunity to consider it, there was a communication from the Assistant Secretary of War asking that an appropriation should be made for the examination of the character, limitations, and description of the property and rights of the Government in the Fox and Wisconsin rivers—property which belongs to the United States, but which, by the terms of the deed of conveyance, was somewhat uncertain in respect to its boundaries. I prepared an amendment which has had the examination of the chairman of the committee and which provides in accordance with the request of the Assistant Secretary of War, and also contains provisions to make avail of the use of the water in the stream.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, after line 15, it is proposed to insert:

For a thorough investigation of the character, limitations, and description of the property and rights of the United States in connection with the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, to be made under the direction of the Secretary of War, upon condition that the owners of any property which may be interested in such delimitation shall pay such proportion of the cost of such investigation as the Secretary of War shall determine, $3,000. And the Secretary of War is directed, by the use of flash-boards or otherwise, to make avail of all the natural flow of water and prevent waste thereof to the height to which the right of the United States to hold the same has been established and without interfering with private rights.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, use so much of the money herein appropriated as may be necessary to prevent the erosion of the west bank of the Willamette River opposite Salem, Oreg., and to maintain the river channel at that point.

Mr. FRYE. That is to be taken from the general appropriation for the river, is it not?

Mr. MCBRIDE. Yes; to be taken from the general appropriation.

Mr. FRYE. Then I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to say a word in regard to the amendment proposed by my colleague, which has just been adopted by the Senate. My colleague intends that it is to take the place of an amendment adopted a few days ago, providing for a survey. I ask the chairman of the committee to make a note of that, so that there may be no difficulty about it in conference.

Mr. FRYE. All right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I offer an amendment to reimburse the city of Menasha for money which was expended in connection with a Government improvement of rivers and harbors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment already adopted, in line 15, on page 73, it is proposed to insert:

To reimburse the city of Menasha, Wis., for moneys expended by said city in the construction of a retaining wall along the bank of the Government canal in said city, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be found by the Secretary of War to be due said city for building said retaining wall.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer an amendment in line 23, on page 80, after the word "and."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the clause making the appropriations for the Mississippi River, between Cairo and the mouth of the Missouri River, on page 80, line 23, after the word "and," it is proposed to insert "$30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended"; so as to read:

And $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in removing the bar in front of Chester, Ill., etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I now ask that the amendment of which I have given notice may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 100, at the end of section 5, line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall so adjust the contracts herein authorized to be made by apportioning them in such way as not to obligate the Government under this act and all prior acts providing for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which provide for contracts beyond appropriations made, for a sum exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000 in any one fiscal year for such materials and work authorized to be contracted for in all of said acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I want to ask the Senator from Maryland how under that amendment the amounts appropriated would be apportioned? If I understand the proposition the money might be applied to the full extent of two or three contracts and the others allowed to go unaided.

Mr. GORMAN. In answer to the Senator, I will say that it will be applied precisely as it has always been applied since we have made river and harbor bills containing continuing contracts for improvements. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, as a matter of course, determine the amount to be expended on each of these works.

The object of the amendment is to limit the total expenditures under this bill and the provisions which have been heretofore made for continuing contracts for works on rivers and harbors. The bill as it came from the House of Representatives and as amended now by the Senate makes an appropriation of $12,614,550, as nearly as I can get at it. There may be some little inaccuracy in the amount, but I think it is substantially correct. I have embodied the appropriations contained in the bill as it came from the House and as reported by the Senate committee in a table, which I append herewith:

APPROPRIATIONS.

States.	Senate bill.	House bill.	States.	Senate bill.	House bill.
Maine	$251,500	$214,000	Tennessee	$307,000	$177,000

Senate report	$12,614,550
House report	10,594,718
Port Orford	140,858
	10,493,860

The bill contains provisions authorizing continuing contracts as follows:

CONTINUING CONTRACTS IN PRESENT RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Maine	$1,570,500.00	Washington	$980,000.00
Massachusetts	1,145,000.00	Rhode Island	707,000.00
New York	3,655,558.00	Pennsylvania	894,500.00
Delaware	4,885,846.00	West Virginia	1,200,000.00
South Carolina	1,908,250.00	Tennessee	600,000.00
Georgia	3,572,500.00	Kentucky	1,346,000.00
Louisiana	1,488,250.00	Mississippi	800,000.00
Texas	1,403,856.00	Michigan	1,065,000.00
Ohio	1,354,000.00	Illinois	6,360,960.00
Wisconsin	108,737.91	Ohio River	2,807,250.00
Minnesota	3,080,553.00	Mississippi River	13,400,000.00
California	4,006,000.00
Oregon	4,664,000.00	Grand total	64,211,760.91

In addition to these there is a provision in regard to the work on the Monongahela River, which will in all probability increase this sum $3,000,000 more. Besides that, we have appropriated—at least the Senate has passed during the present session—for contracts already existing, but which are not yet completed, $3,584,597, leaving the contracts heretofore authorized at about $47,000,000, in addition to the contracts authorized by the pending bill, amounting in all from sixty-four to sixty-seven million dollars.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator examined to see whether or not most of the existing contracts will not be completed in the present year?

Mr. GORMAN. I will give the exact figures. The contracts that were heretofore authorized amounted to $47,383,501; that is to say, by the river and harbor acts of 1890 and 1892, and they are still outstanding. We have appropriated heretofore on that account $39,158,468, leaving a balance to be appropriated of $8,225,033 at the beginning of this session. The estimate of the War Department of the amount they will require for the current year was $4,044,597, but Congress has only appropriated $3,584,597 of the $8,225,033 required, leaving a little over $4,000,000.

Mr. FRYE. To be appropriated for in the future.

Mr. GORMAN. And about four millions and a half to be added on account of the contracts authorized by this bill. These contracts, when made, necessarily must be met from time to time, and they ought to be met promptly. When the contracts are entered into there is no escape from making the appropriations, and it would be equivalent to repudiation if we should undertake to do so. I will insert a table setting forth this matter in detail.

The following shows the river and harbor contracts authorized by the river and harbor acts of 1890 and 1892, the appropriations thereunder to date, the balances under each, and the estimates submitted for 1897:

River or harbor.	Amount authorized.	Appropriations to date.	Balance.	Estimates, 1897.	Amount in Senate sundry civil bill of this session.

* Including $300,000 in urgent deficiency bill.
† Under joint resolution this session.

The yearly appropriations to meet said contracts since their authorization have been as follows:

1891 in river and harbor act	$2,340,000
1892 in sundry civil act	1,951,200
1893 in sundry civil act	814,000
1894 in sundry civil act	14,166,153
1895 in sundry civil act	8,400,000
in deficiency act	200,000
1896 in sundry civil act	11,287,115
Total	39,158,468

With the large contracts heretofore authorized, together with the appropriations made, the expenditure has not exceeded $20,000,000 in any one year. That has been found to be as much as could be properly and economically used by the War Department. It has never been attempted to exceed it.

If the amendment I have offered be adopted the case will stand thus: Under the direct appropriations made by the pending river and harbor bill of $12,614,550 during the next current year, if the War Department pursues the same policy which has been followed in the past, and I doubt not they will, because the river and harbor bill is regarded as a bill for two years instead of for one year, they will expend all that direct appropriation of $6,000,000, and they will have under the amendment I have offered the authority to spend $10,000,000 more on account of the contracts contained in this bill, and will have in addition the $3,584,597 which we have appropriated in the sundry civil bill, which will make within a fraction of $20,000,000 for the next fiscal year, and for the fiscal year beyond that it will be the same.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Do I understand that the effect of the Senator's amendment will be to eventually save anything? Will it reduce the total appropriation in any way, or will it simply take longer to dispose of it?

Mr. GORMAN. No; there is no saving on this bill.

Mr. BERRY. There is no saving, or no reduction?

Mr. GORMAN. No saving whatever except the saving of time and other considerations, though the Engineer Department, after looking at the works provided for, may, when they report to Congress, think that some of them are useless. That may be done. That is the only hope there is about it. The amendment, however, will save the Treasury in its present depleted condition—though I am not going over all the figures about that again—from the very unusual and extraordinary drain during this next fiscal year and the fiscal year following. It will give $20,000,000 in each of those two years to be expended on that account, which would be as great an amount or greater than has ever been expended before.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I suggest to the Senator, as to his amendment, that he need not extend it beyond the 4th of March next, for we shall then have a Republican Administration and shall have plenty of money, and so there will be no need of such a limit as the Senator proposes.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Oregon is assuming a great deal when he predicts that we shall have a Republican Administration after the 4th of March next.

Mr. COCKRELL. He ought to know that we shall not.

Mr. GORMAN. No matter what Administration shall be in power, whether it be Republican or Democratic, that has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the Senator know how much has been appropriated for in the sundry civil bill on these contracts each year for the last two years?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, and its only effect, will be to nullify what has been done in the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. So far from that being so, it practically insures that amount of money. The sundry civil bill of 1892 was the first bill in which appropriations were made on account of these contracts. The appropriations for contracts authorized by the river and harbor bills are now made in the sundry civil bill, and we appropriated all that the engineers required during that year, about $1,951,200; the next year $814,000, and the next year we appropriated $14,166,153. That was in the year 1894.

Mr. SQUIRE. How much does the Senator say?

Mr. GORMAN. Fourteen million one hundred and sixty-six thousand one hundred and fifty-three dollars. Then in the next bill we appropriated $8,400,000, and in the last bill $11,287,115. In the present year in the sundry civil bill, which is just passing through Congress and has already passed the Senate, we have appropriated $3,500,000.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland the question whether he would not be willing to modify his amendment so as to make the amount appropriated annually not exceeding the average for the past eleven years. I have before me a statement, prepared by an officer of the War Department, giving the appropriations from 1885 to 1896, inclusive. I shall not read it all, but I will state that it averages between thirteen and fourteen million dollars in each year.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator can put that in in his own time. I will say to the Senator that the appropriation this year exceeds anything which has been made in the past. This will give practically for the next year $20,000,000, which exceeds the amount appropriated in any one year. I know that you can not limit it. I should be delighted to see that done. I started off with the general idea to limit these contracts to not over $7,000,000; but, taking the conditions that surround this bill, the atmosphere about it, and the immense number of contracts which have been forced in here against the will of the committee who have examined it, and to which the chairman himself has had to give way, the Senate having insisted upon them, a reasonable amount ought to be added.

The bill came from the House of Representatives with a less amount than it now contains. The attempt was made there to limit the expenditure to 25 per cent. That provision was eliminated, and the Senate has inserted a provision that in no one of these cases shall more than $400,000 be expended. I desire to limit the amount to be expended to $10,000,000 per annum, and I say to the Senator from Washington that will give a greater amount per annum than has been expended in any year for the last eleven years.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope in some form that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be adopted. It is in accordance with the general scheme and plan of this bill. As to a number of appropriations in the bill, where contracts are authorized to be entered into, there is a proposition that not more than one-quarter of them, or 25 per cent of the amount, shall be expended in any one fiscal year. It is provided as to others that not more than one-third shall be expended in any one fiscal year, and in many others there is no limitation as to the expenditure. So we have here different provisions as applied to these different contract appropriations.

I have favored the contract provisions in the past. I became convinced by the arguments of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] several years ago that it was a wise thing to contract for the work on a specific harbor or river and then allow the appropriations to be made from year to year in the execution of that contract.

As I remember, the first work of the kind was one applying to the harbor at Galveston, Tex., and also another to the Sault Ste. Marie improvement on the Northwestern Lakes. At the harbor of Galveston we provided for a contract for $6,000,000, if I remember rightly, or perhaps $6,200,000, and we authorized the contract to be made for the entire work. The contract was so made, and then, when this first appropriation was made, the Committee on Commerce, having charge of rivers and harbors, practically dismissed that improvement from their consideration. They did so because under their jurisdiction it was a completed affair, and the subsequent appropriations were reported by the Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill.

The result was, we progressed in these contract provisions and increased them from year to year. As I remember, the next year we provided for twelve or fifteen million dollars in those contracts, the next year for $31,000,000, and the next year in the river and harbor bill for $47,000,000, as I think the Senator stated. These old contracts lapsing from time to time, and new ones being entered into, the result of that in the Committee on Appropriations has been that that committee, and the Engineer Department as well, as to these great contracts, have been at the mercy of the contractors rather than having the power to regulate the speed with which the contracts should be completed and executed. The contractors secure a considerable plant for the execution of their contracts. If they have favorable contracts, as most of them have, for they contracted for the work on higher prices and are executing them upon a constantly descending scale of prices, and if they are able to execute them, they come to the Committee on Appropriations and say, "So many dollars will be expended under this contract in the next year and so many dollars each year thereafter." The result of that has been that in the sundry civil bill we have, as the Senator from Maryland has already stated, appropriated as high as $14,000,000 in a single bill for the execution of contracts over which we have no power, except to know from the engineer officers of the Government that the contract entered into two or three years ago is in the process of execution.

Last year during the short session we appropriated, as I recollect—the Senator from Maryland gave the amount—$11,500,000 under these continuing contracts for rivers and harbors and other public works. That swelled the sundry civil bill to $39,000,000. I have seen it stated in many places that the sundry civil bill of this year came to the Senate with less than $25,000,000 upon it, making a saving of $15,000,000 as to the appropriations of this year compared with those of last year.

Mr. President, I think that if we are to continue the process of making these large contracts, mortgaging the future revenues and the future appropriations of the Government, we should do so in such a way that we shall have a reasonable control of the probable amount from year to year. We are having these contracts made not only as to rivers and harbors, but they are made in other departments during the present year and have been in the past. They are made now in the fortifications bill, which will presently come before us. Here are $60,000,000 to be appropriated in the future, and in many of these items there are but small initial appropriations, to which are attached large sums of money. I do not object to that; I do not say that it is unwise; but I say that if we are to put into an appropriation bill this year $5,000 and upon it hang a contract of $4,500,000, which may be executed by the Secretary of War, and if, in the judgment of the Secretary of War and in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers, that contract should be executed within two years with the Government of the United States, its credit and its faith are mortgaged to pay that amount within two years.

So, whether the limit be $10,000,000—I do not say that that is the proper sum, but I think it is large enough—or, if that be not the proper sum, let us take a sum, whether it be ten or eleven or twelve million dollars, whereby the engineer officers of the Government shall have a guide as to these contracts, so that they shall not obligate the Government beyond a fixed sum for a certain year.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. Referring to the appropriations for the last few years, the Senator has already mentioned the appropriations for 1896 as being eleven and a half million dollars. With his permission, I shall at this point insert a table showing the appropriations for rivers and harbors from 1885 to 1896, inclusive.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. SQUIRE. The table is as follows:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS FROM 1885 TO 1896, INCLUSIVE.

1885	$14,948,300.00
1886
1887	14,464,900.00
1888
1889	22,410,791.99
1890	500,000.00
1891	25,292,395.00
1892	2,951,200.00
1893	22,068,218.00
1894	14,181,153.00
1895	20,055,005.30
1896	11,452,115.00
Total	148,324,077.99

What I want to ask the Senator is, does he think the sum of $10,000,000 per annum would enable the Government to pay for past contracts as well as future contracts; in other words, is that sum sufficient for what is contemplated in past legislation and in present legislation?

Mr. ALLISON. I see the point the Senator makes. There is only a liability of $4,300,000, or about that sum, upon contracts already made. Here is a liability upon future contracts amounting to $64,000,000 or $62,000,000. Is it understood that this is to be the last river and harbor bill? These contract provisions do not cover more than one-tenth or one-twentieth of the river and harbor bill. We may not have at the short session of Congress a river and harbor bill, but we are certain to have one at the next long session of Congress. We have these river and harbor bills only once in two years. When the next Congress after the present convenes, is it supposed that that Congress will not have, as this Congress, with our present depleted condition of the Treasury, projects and plans and improvements that will require appropriations at that time?

We have here now in this bill, it is stated, $12,000,000 or more that are to be currently expended with respect to contracts. We have in the sundry civil appropriation bill $3,500,000 additional, making fifteen and one-half million dollars that are to be expended in the next fiscal year from current appropriations and upon contracts already made, without reference to the future. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland, I understand, provides only that the contracts in the pending bill and the contracts heretofore made shall not have expended under them exceeding $10,000,000. Will not the Senators on this floor from every State in the Union, or every State that has rivers and harbors within it, ask two years from now that there shall be sums appropriated for their rivers and harbors, because there are not contract provisions in the pending bill applying to them? These contract provisions here are rare. They apply only to a few important places; and yet there are a great many places which will need improvement. So, under the next river and harbor bill there will be at least $12,000,000 and possibly $20,000,000 appropriated outside of these contracts. It is the only purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, as I understand it, to limit the expenditures under these contracts.

I will defer largely to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and to the Senators upon that committee as to what should be the annual limitation, but to say that we shall authorize $60,000,000 in contracts and leave it to the Chief of Engineers to make contracts and say that the $60,000,000 shall be spent in two years is an abdication of the power of Congress that for one, whatever others may do, I never shall consent to. We place the whole power of the $64,000,000 in the hands of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War to expend it in one or two years, except where we have already put in the bill a limitation that only 25 per cent shall be spent in a single year.

So I think a limitation in addition to the limitations already provided in the bill should be added. I would not have made the suggestion had not the bill been amended in the Senate. There is in section 5 of the bill a provision, as it came from the House, that only 25 per cent of the postponed contracts shall be expended in any one year. That provision by its own vigor sends these contract appropriations over a period of four years. But here that limitation has been stricken out and another limitation, which I agree is a limitation as well, has been inserted. It is that there shall be expended only $400,000 in a single year, unless it is otherwise specifically provided for. Is that a wise provision, making fish of one improvement and flesh of another?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator does not understand the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad I do not. I thank the Senator for that information.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLISON. I will read it.

Mr. FRYE. No; will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLISON. I will.

Mr. FRYE. As the bill came from the House there was a provision that not more than 25 per cent should be expended in any one year, but it excepted all below $500,000. Now, there was a contract following shortly of $517,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator must not say that he corrects me in any statement that I made, because I did not make the whole statement at the moment. I was only speaking of these larger appropriations. Of course I was not ignorant of the fact that there was a limitation of $500,000.

Mr. FRYE. Below $500,000, which can be expended in one year, and one of the next items was $517,000, with a 25 per cent limit to it, and therefore that could not be expended under four years. The large majority of contracts were below $800,000 and over all continued by the 25 per cent clause for four years—exceedingly unfair and unjust in every respect.

Now, what the Senate said was that no more than $400,000 should be expended on any one contract in any one year, and then it provided in certain very important contracts, like that at Superior and Duluth, that not over 25 per cent should be expended in any one year, not limiting them to the $400,000, and in another one, the Delaware harbor of refuge, which was a very important work under way, we put in a provision allowing them 25 per cent. We could get a million dollars of expenditure for Superior and Duluth, because they were very important and ought to be completed as soon as possible; and the Senator himself, in concert with the Senator from Illinois, has to-day put into the bill a provision that the Hennepin Canal, the propriety of which I always doubted, and I think I have always voted against the Hennepin Canal anyway——

Mr. ALLISON. I know.

Mr. FRYE. Should have 25 per cent of expenditure—that is, about $5,000,000, and $1,000,000 that they can spend in every year. I do not see how you could make it fairer than that.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has only reenforced my argument.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator did not need any reenforcement of his argument.

Mr. ALLISON. Here is the point. I will read the limitation in the bill:

> That under the authority to make contracts for materials and work, under the provisions of this act, in addition to the sums appropriated herein, the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay, in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than $400,000 upon the said contracts for any one of the works herein placed under the contract system, except as herein otherwise specifically authorized to do.

The Senator from Maine has given two noted illustrations where the 25-per-cent clause was inserted, and through the kindness of the Senate the Senator from Illinois had the same inserted as respects the Hennepin Canal. Now, then, there are three important works that have no limitation except the one-quarter of the expenditure. There are other important works that have the limitation of $400,000. All these, I take it, are limitations intended to restrict and limit the annual expenditures, are they not?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. They are for that purpose. Therefore the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is in the line of the policy and of the project and plan of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Only, if the Senator will allow me, the Committee on Commerce undertook to so arrange it that the most important should not be limited as to the $400,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. FRYE. And they undertook to discriminate in the interest of commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; upon certain improvements. We had a controversy about the Santa Monica improvement. It lasted two days. If that authority shall be given finally under the scheme and plan adopted they can expend only $400,000 annually under the bill as it stands.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask a question in that connection?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. On the Lower Mississippi River the amount is specified that may be expended for the next year and for three years following.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BERRY. Now, what will be the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, if adopted, in regard to the contracts on the Lower Mississippi?

Mr. ALLISON. That is pertinent. It will, of course, depend upon what the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers may do in adjusting all these appropriations. The Senator will bear me witness that I said in the opening of my observations I was not certain that the limit of $10,000,000 proposed by the Senator from Maryland is the right limit, although I thought it was sufficient. I would defer very much to the Senator from Maine and the other Senators upon the Committee on Commerce as to what that limitation should be.

Mr. BERRY. That being the specific amount named in the law as it now stands which may be expended by the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, or it may not be. That is all within the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, and in the case of the Lower Mississippi it is in the discretion of the Mississippi River Commission, which is far away from us as respects these expenditures and far away from our examination as respects the methods of the expenditures.

Mr. PASCO. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to ask the Senator if the amendment is adopted whether it would not be just as fair that all the special limitations should be eliminated from the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. No; I think not.

Mr. PASCO. Otherwise the items which are to receive the special amounts will for the first two years, at all events, absorb all the money appropriated for these purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think so, though I have not myself examined it with care as respects that point. It only shows that the amount is to be increased to $11,000,000, if you please.

Mr. SQUIRE. Does not the Senator from Iowa think it would be right that the reduction should be pro rata all around and not exceptional in favor of some improvements and against others?

Mr. ALLISON. How is the bill now, I ask the Senator? That is exactly its situation now. The reason why I support the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is because I think it is in accord with the spirit of the bill that we shall equalize and arrange it so as to limit the expenditure in any one year.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it may be true as stated by the Senator from Iowa, that the amendment ought to be adopted in some shape or other, but I doubt very much whether it ought to be adopted in the shape in which it is now before the Senate. I understand that when the contracts in the bill are authorized, there is specific authorization as to each place limiting the amount. In the bill itself, these amounts are fixed by the Commerce Committee. The effect of the amendment, I understand, is simply to do away with all the limitations and leave to the discretion of the Secretary of War how much shall be given to one place and how much to another. The amendment does not require the Secretary of War to make a pro rata reduction from each one of the contracts, but in carrying out the amendment the Secretary of War may take out of a specific appropriation made, a specific contract authorized, all the reduction that the amendment requires. I think that is giving him too much authority, and for that reason I shall not vote for it.

Mr. VEST. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Maryland on the table.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion, so that there may be a test vote on it.

Mr. VEST. If we do not lay the motion on the table we can go on with the amendment in the morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland demands the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to lay the amendment on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is absent, but from the conversation I had with him this afternoon I feel warranted in voting upon the amendment. I vote "nay" upon this motion.

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. I am informed by his colleague [Mr. PASCO] that the senior Senator from Florida would vote "yea," if present. Therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. I think if the senior Senator from Pennsylvania were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL. Upon that assurance I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURROWS. My colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who has not voted. I will transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Pasco,	Squire,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Perkins,	Vest.
Blackburn,	George,	Platt,	Walthall,
Burrows,	Lodge,	Pugh,	Warren,
Caffery,	McBride,	Quay,	White.
Cullom,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Sewell,
Dubois,	Nelson,	Shoup,

NAYS—31.

Allen,	Carter,	Harris,	Peffer,
Allison,	Chandler,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,
Bacon,	Chilton,	Hill,	Roach,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Kyle,	Smith,
Brice,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Vilas,
Brown,	Gear,	Mantle,	Wetmore,
Butler,	Gorman,	Martin,	Wolcott.
Cannon,	Gray,	Mitchell, Wis.

NOT VOTING—32.

Baker,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Mills,	Stewart,
Call,	Hale,	Morgan,	Teller,
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hoar,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Daniel,	Irby,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Pritchard,	Voorhees,
Elkins,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,	Wilson.

So the Senate refused to lay Mr. GORMAN'S amendment on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, it nullifies the provisions of the bill in regard to most of the appropriations made for harbors under contract, and the bill had better not pass at all than pass in that way. I understand that there are a large number of provisions in the bill for contracts in various important works. These provisions contain limitations of various kinds, some that there shall not be over $400,000 expended in any one year, and others that not over 25 per cent of the appropriation shall be spent in any one year. Those provisions in the aggregate will undoubtedly amount to more than $10,000,000, of which certain provisions will get the whole amount the bill calls for, and all the other provisions in regard to contracts will get no appropriation, and will not be entitled to have any contracts whatever made.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The last provision is a limit upon the whole bill. The other provision is a limit upon the specific appropriations "not exceeding"; they are not bound to expend one-quarter annually.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the other provisions stand until they reach $10,000,000, and then no other appropriations are to be made and no other contracts are to be made.

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no. It does not read so.

Mr. ALDRICH. It certainly reads so, and there can be no other construction of the amendment. If the amendment has any force at all, if it is not put in here—I do not say the Senator from Maryland put it in for any such purpose—simply to preach economy and has no binding force whatever upon future Congresses as to whether the appropriation shall be $10,000,000, or $20,000,000, or $30,000,000, or $40,000,000, as that Congress may determine; but if it is actually binding upon anybody it practically prevents any appropriations or any contracts for a large portion of the works which are put under contract by provisions of the bill. The theory upon which they are being put under contract is that they are the most important works upon rivers and harbors in the whole country. Now, if it is the purpose of the Senate to defeat the most important parts of the bill, we had better do it on a direct vote, with a full understanding of what we are doing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. FRYE. This amendment is likely to lead to more discussion. I recognize the fact that it has been a very hot day and that Senators are weary. I should like to ask unanimous consent that further debate on the pending bill and any of its amendments shall be limited to the five-minutes rule——

Mr. PLATT and others. That is right.

Mr. FRYE. That its consideration shall be commenced immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, and that at 3 o'clock a vote shall be taken upon all the amendments and upon the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CAFFERY. I wish to know of the Senator from Maine whether he includes the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]?

Mr. FRYE. All amendments.

Mr. CAFFERY. I think the pending amendment will require a greater latitude of discussion than can be secured under the five-minutes rule.

Mr. FRYE. Each Senator is entitled to speak for five minutes. The five minutes' debate is the best and most intelligent debate that ever was provided for.

Mr. VEST. That is true.

Mr. FRYE. Interminable speeches in the United States Senate befog infinitely more than they instruct. Any Senator can say everything he wants to say about the amendment in five minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope the Senator from Maine will except from that statement the delightful speech he made a few hours ago.

Mr. FRYE. I have finished that speech.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house and jail at the county seat thereof.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 15) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., certain cannon, etc., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 981) relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2780) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell;

A bill (S. 2870) to permit Rene C. Baughman to lay pipes in a certain street in the city of Washington;

A bill (S. 2843) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Boonville, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 175) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain uses of national military parks;

A bill (H. R. 1020) granting an increase of pension to Gilman Williams;

A bill (H. R. 1980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. 3046) for the relief of Frederick Van Gilder;

A bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 3606) granting a pension to French W. Thornhill;

A bill (H. R. 5481) to restore the lands embraced in the Fort Lewis Military Reservation, in the State of Colorado, to the public domain;

A bill (H. R. 6104) for the relief of Anton Gloetzner;

A bill (H. R. 6431) to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765;

A bill (H. R. 7865) to allow the return free of duty of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 167) authorizing foreign exhibitors at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition, to be held in Nashville, Tenn., in 1897, to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits, and allowing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 13, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 12, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE RECORD.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to call up a matter.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has a question he calls up.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to what I regard as a violation of the privileges of printing in the RECORD, as found on pages 5472, 5473, 5474, and 5475 of the RECORD. The House will remember that on Friday last we were engaged in the absorbingly interesting question of providing clerks for members.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, let us have order. It is impossible to hear.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH], chairman of the Committee on Accounts, yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER]. On that occasion my friend from Alabama trembled for his country to such an extent that his vibrations extended over those pages of the RECORD that I have named.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not a pleasant task for me to call the attention of the House to a violation of the privileges of printing in the RECORD upon the part of any member; but it is a matter, as it seems to me, incumbent upon me, and one in justice to the members of the House generally and to the proprieties involved in the proceedings as they appear in the RECORD. I think in this instance it is so manifestly improper that I hardly need to say anything more. I am quite willing to yield now to the gentleman from Alabama for the length of time I have occupied—and granting in that no leave to print [laughter]—for such an explanation as he may choose to make.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, the offense which the gentleman alludes to is the printing of some tables in the RECORD illustrative of other remarks I made; but, while I have not the notes before me, my recollection is that I distinctly stated, with the permission of the House, that I would print them. Now, it is known that never in the history of Congress has a table been read before the House. They are simply put in the RECORD by all members without objection, simply upon the suggestion that they will do so. Since I have been a member of this House I have never given myself the pain which the gentleman from Iowa says he has given himself to-day. I have never alluded to any members personally, except where I could do it in a complimentary and pleasant manner and in such a manner as would commend them to the country and their constituents.

Now, with regard to the revision of the RECORD. There is no rule in the rules adopted at the opening of this session of Congress alluding to this subject in any way whatever; and from the beginning of this Government it has been the custom for members of Congress to take their remarks as handed them by the stenographers and give them such revision as they thought proper and best. Even the greatest man that ever was in the Senate of the United States, Daniel Webster, in the case of the greatest speech he ever made, that rang throughout the whole world—that speech appeared in the RECORD thirty days after it was delivered; and the persons who took down his speech, as nearly correct as possible, as I have seen lately published—this speech when printed was not recognizable as the speech delivered in the Senate.

Now, the purpose of members of Congress should be, and it is my purpose, to do my duty to my constituents and to my country; and in speeches which are to go into the RECORD, if I find, after reading the stenographer's notes, I can recast sentences or make such changes as to express myself better, it is a privilege that has always been accorded without objection to members of Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WHEELER. Allow me to get through; one moment more.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield one or two moments more.

Mr. WHEELER. Thank you.

Now, on more than one occasion, when I have made speeches which have contained matter which met the approval of at least my own party—on more than one occasion some gentleman on the other side has risen to make objection to the way it appeared in the RECORD.

Now, the other day an objection was made. When I went to the Printing Office I found that the gentleman who had made this objection had made changes in his remarks far exceeding those I had made in mine; but I did not come before the House like a tattling schoolboy to rise up here and criticise my fellow-members. But even in the last Congress, so correct a member as our distinguished Speaker, while making a speech on that side of the aisle near where the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] now stands, a speech which was read all over the country, as the gentleman will recall, being on the silver question, taking from his pocket a memorandum, read a list of gentlemen on this side who then were voting with the gold-standard men and who had up to a short time before cast their votes for free and unlimited coinage of silver; and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], with that wonderful emphasis and that wonderful command of language and manner which he possesses, used, as I recollect, these words. He quoted my friend from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], and Mr. Bynum of Indiana, winding up with the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. Wilson. He was referring to the vote of 1890. I then rose in this place and said: "Yes; and every Democrat who voted the other way—who voted against free coinage on that occasion—has been defeated and retired from public life by the people."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WHEELER. I am coming to my point. [Applause and laughter.] That evening I saw my remark, just as I had made it, written out in typewriting in the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Maine, the present Speaker, but next morning, when that great speech came out, instead of seeing my well-timed remark in its place it was not there; there was a perfect blank. [Laughter.] Therefore, if I can have the example of the distinguished Speaker of this House for changing other people's remarks, certainly I can enjoy the poor privilege of making some slight changes in my own. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Now, will the gentleman——

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, I am not through yet. [Laughter and applause.]

A MEMBER. Ask leave to print. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I want to put myself right. The gentleman said he felt pain; now I want to relieve him of his pain by explaining my position.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not yield any further, Mr. Speaker. If the purpose——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor. Can the gentleman take me off the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa had the floor——

Mr. WHEELER. And he yielded to me.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And yielded the same time that he had occupied to the gentleman from Alabama, which was about three minutes. The gentleman from Alabama has had ten minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, I want about thirty. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. That is in the same line as the matter I am complaining of. If the position of the gentleman from Alabama is correct, any member on this floor, any morning that he may see fit, can fill the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or expand it to two or three times its usual size, with any matter that he may choose to put in. Now, certainly the manifest impropriety of that must be recognized by everybody. If the gentleman will refer to the Manual, page 355, he will find that he is not correct in the statement he makes that a member may print tables, etc., at his will, and without asking the consent of the House, provided he has simply alluded to them in his remarks. I read from the Manual:

Citations or other matter not actually delivered in the course of debate, but simply referred to, can not be printed in the RECORD without consent of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. I have that before me.

Mr. PERKINS. The reference is to Journal, first session, Fifty-third Congress, page 114. Now, Mr. Speaker, there can be no question as to the impropriety of the proceeding under consideration, and I am surprised that the gentleman from Alabama claims it as a right. I have been led to think that he does, because he has repeatedly violated the privileges of debate here in a similar manner. It has occurred to me that if the gentleman from Alabama or any other gentleman on this floor considers it a matter of right for him to put anything that he may choose into the RECORD, it would be well for us to determine that question now. The gentleman's position seems to me so manifestly improper, so absolutely absurd, that I propose to submit the question to the House, and I move you, Mr. Speaker, that the superfluous matter which I have indicated, other than the matter actually delivered on the floor of the House on last Friday by the gentleman from Alabama, be stricken from the permanent RECORD; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will permit the Chair to put the question before the House. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the portion of the RECORD which he indicates, on pages 5472, 5473, 5474, and 5475, in the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, the interpolated matter which he did not deliver in the five minutes allotted to him, be stricken from the permanent RECORD. Will the gentleman from Iowa reduce his motion to writing, so that the House may know exactly what matter it includes.

Mr. PERKINS. I will do so. I offer the resolution that I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PERKINS moves to strike out of the permanent RECORD the matter inserted by Mr. WHEELER on Friday last, aside from the matter, according to the reporter's notes, delivered by him in his five minutes' time; said matter being on pages 5472, 5473, 5474, and 5475.

The SPEAKER. On this motion the gentleman from Iowa demands the previous question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This is a new proposition. There has been no debate on this proposition at all, and I respectfully make the point of order that we are entitled to twenty minutes' debate upon it. It is entirely different from the other motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there has been debate within the rule.

Mr. WHEELER. Not on this resolution. The gentleman from Iowa made some remarks and then submitted some verbal suggestion as to what he was going to do, but not in the form of a resolution; and there was debate on that. But now he has submitted a written resolution, upon which there has been no debate. I make the point of order that under the previous question twenty minutes' debate must be allowed on each side. I should like to hear the gentleman sustain his resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] that perhaps the best way out of this difficulty would be to refer the whole question to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the House can readily dispose of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In the last Congress (if I may be permitted to refer to the matter) a question similar to this was raised, and it was referred to the Committee on Rules that they might investigate and report. It occurs to me that the gentleman from Iowa has now accomplished his purpose in calling attention to this irregularity, if it be one, and that we might avoid further difficulty by referring the question to the Committee on Rules and letting them examine it.

Mr. PERKINS rose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, I make the suggestion for this reason——

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from Alabama claims this as a right; and it seems to me the House ought to determine whether he has such a right or not.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly not without debate.

Mr. PERKINS. Whichever way the House may determine the question I shall be satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is whether under the rules debate on this proposition should now be allowed.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the ruling of the Chair on that question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was about to make a suggestion which I think would relieve the House of embarrassment in this matter. It is almost impossible for a member in hastily drawing a resolution like this to cover just what matter should remain in the RECORD and what ought not to remain. Having myself had some experience in investigating questions of this kind, I simply suggest that it might be well to refer this question to the Committee on Rules, that they might determine what part of the matter published is competent and what part is incompetent and should go out. That is the object I had. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Iowa has called attention to this irregularity, if it be one, I think that the ends of justice would be subserved by the course I suggest.

Mr. PERKINS. As there seems some disposition to have some further debate on this matter, I will withdraw my demand for the previous question for ten minutes, and will now yield five minutes to the other side, retaining five minutes for myself, giving notice that at the expiration of ten minutes I shall move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa yields five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose any member of the House fails to comprehend why this movement was made. One of the most distinguished Republicans said this morning that the trouble with these statements showing appropriations by Democratic Congresses and by Republican Congresses was that they put the Republican party in a bad light, and therefore they want to obliterate them. I want to say to the Republican party, and with the best feeling, that if they do not want to be put in a bad light they must not make a record which puts them in a bad light. They must not for a series of years make a character of appropriations which place them before the country in an unfavorable light, and then cry out at the beginning of an election campaign that they want to obscure and hide their own record. The case to which the gentleman referred was different from the case now before the House. That was a case where a member sought to incorporate in the RECORD extracts from newspapers, very voluminous extracts, which should properly have been read to the House. These are not extracts from newspapers; they are simply tables prepared with great care and great accuracy and great truth [laughter]; and though the publication of them to the country may be disastrous to the Republican party's prospects, they ought to stand it like men [laughter and applause], and try to make some excuse, or they ought better to remain here during this summer and legislate in behalf of the people, so as to palliate the wrongs they have heretofore committed. As a friend near me suggests, "while the lamp holds out to burn"—I will not say "the vilest sinner," but I will say the greatest transgressor "may return." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, another trouble in this case was that there was put before this House an adverse report upon a resolution which took $200,000 from the hard working laboring people and gave it to already overpaid Congressmen. A resolution reported adversely was brought before the House, and I, in my humble efforts, sought to prevail upon my fellow-members to consider and reflect and hesitate before they committed themselves to an act which they would regret all their days, and which the metropolitan press of the country is to-day denouncing as a salary grab—as unjustifiable and indefensible as the salary grab of 1873—which retired every advocate of it to private life. That, Mr. Speaker, was the ground of my offense. Not a member who has made a speech on this floor——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that this question relates to the value of the tables inserted by the gentleman from Alabama, or to the value of the comments which he made thereon. This is a question, and a question only, whether the gentleman from Alabama has the privilege to make such use of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as he, in the discharge of his public duties, may see fit to do.

I presume it is true, also, that both sides of the House are somewhat afraid of the gentleman from Alabama. [Laughter.] But that is not the question. The question and the sole question is as to whether the privileges of the House, with reference to printing matter in the RECORD, were trangressed by the gentleman in this case. That is all. It is a matter of no concern with me, and

I dare say it is a matter of no concern with any other member on this side of the House, what the value of these tables or the lack of value in them may be. But it is the question as to whether the House of Representatives controls matter appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or whether the gentleman from Alabama does.

Now, he suggests that it is his privilege; that, notwithstanding his desire to economize in the expenditures of the Government, he claims it to be his privilege to enter into the Printing Office any night in the week, or at any time he may desire, and have printed over his name or under his name whatever he sees fit to present there for that purpose, and have it published in the RECORD; and that that is a privilege which remains with him as against the House of Representatives. Now, it is important that we should know whether that right exists or not, and therefore, in order that the question may be determined by the House, I have made the motion to expunge from the RECORD the matter referred to, excepting that part which the gentleman uttered on the floor of the House; and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for two or three minutes?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. I only wish to say to the House that if the previous question is ordered I shall move to commit this resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CRISP. Why, of course.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think the privileges of the House were abused in this instance?

Mr. CRISP. I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa that the very purpose of my suggestion was that this matter should be properly examined into, so that the House may know authoritatively after that investigation whether or not there had been a breach of privilege.

Now, Mr. Speaker, ever since you have been a member of this House, and ever since I have been here, whenever a proposition has been made to expunge from the RECORD remarks inserted therein by any gentleman, and it was claimed on the floor that they were improperly inserted, it has been, when the question was raised, always referred to a committee for investigation. The Committee on Rules is the committee that is charged with the making of the rules of the House; it is charged with the interpretation of the rules of the House; it is your committee, and therefore it seems to me that in this case, unless you wish to deal very summarily with my friend from Alabama, the wiser course, the judicious course, and the judicial course, that course which will commend itself to the approval of every gentleman who desires to protect himself and the House, and to do no injustice to a fellow-member, will be to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules. They can report at any time; they can examine into all of the facts involved in the matter; they can inform the House as to their opinion on investigation, and the House can intelligently pass upon the question, protecting its own rights and privileges, and at the same time inflicting no indignity on the gentleman from Alabama, unless it be absolutely necessary to do so.

I thank the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would not trespass on the time of the House on this occasion except for the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia.

It seems to me that this is a question that the House can determine, and one that it is prepared to determine now without the intervention of any committee.

This is not the first time or the second time, or even the third time, that the House has been detained because the gentleman from Alabama has seen fit to violate this rule of the House by inserting not only a page or two but often dozens of pages of matter never delivered in the House, and has inserted without the consent of the House these lengthy articles in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Heretofore the gentleman has acknowledged his fault, and claimed that he did it through ignorance or something else.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not claim it was ignorance——

Mr. PAYNE. And the House has usually excused him and allowed the matter to stand in the RECORD. Now, it seems to me, it is high time that the House and each member of the House, including the gentleman from Alabama, should understand by the vote of the House whether this thing is proper or whether it is to be stopped. The House will understand——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. PAYNE. I have only three minutes. The House will understand that if at any time the gentleman from Alabama should propose by unanimous consent to insert matter in the RECORD he could obtain the consent of the House without reading the matter before the House. There is no time that the gentleman from Alabama, if he proposed to abandon the floor in favor of printing matter in the RECORD that he had written out, could not obtain the consent of the House [laughter], and it seems to me that under those circumstances the gentleman from Alabama should understand what is the rule of the House. He comes in here to-day and does not apologize—does not ask to be excused. He does not say that on account of his ignorance he violated a rule of the House, but he asserts as a matter of right that at any time he sees fit he may print 2 pages or 4 pages or 50 pages of extraneous matter in the RECORD, whether it is in accordance with his line of thought, whether it is in accordance with his argument, whether it is at all upon the line of the question on which he "trembled" for the condition of the country or not—that he has a right to insert that in the RECORD and, I suppose, send it out by his frank, after having compelled the Government at a large expense, as in this instance, to set up the matter—solid pages of figures—and print it in the RECORD. It seems to me that the House ought to vote on it now.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield me one minute.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee, my colleague on the committee [Mr. RICHARDSON], and then I shall move the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this House will bear witness to the fact that I have endeavored, not only while the House was controlled by my own party, but while it has been controlled by gentlemen on the other side, to keep the RECORD as clear as it could be kept of matter that ought not to go into it. Now, I submit that this House is not prepared to vote on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] to exclude the improper matter, conceding, if you please, that improper matter has been inserted by the gentleman from Alabama in the RECORD. What part are you going to strike out? The gentleman has not defined it. Are you going to strike out the words that the gentleman from Alabama uttered on that day? Do you know, does any gentleman know, what words he uttered? He spoke five minutes, as I am informed. You do not know, acting in an emergency or in this hasty manner, where to draw the line. You want to strike out a part of what he has inserted in the RECORD. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is proper and orderly to let this matter go to the Committee on Rules, and have that committee draw the line at the proper point. Then we can vote understandingly upon it.

I submit that we ought not now ruthlessly, because "the gentleman is an old violator," as my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] intimates, adjudge him guilty without a hearing, and strike out everything he said. That is a bad rule to apply.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is stating a case that does not exist here. The motion provides that the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, as taken down by the Official Reporters, shall remain in the RECORD, and that the remaining portion shall be stricken out. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CRISP. I move to commit the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. CRISP; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division, demanded by Mr. CRISP, there were—ayes 63, noes 122.

Mr. CRISP demanded the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 75, nays 148, answered "Present" 1, not voting 131; as follows:

Mr. HARDY with Mr. MILES.

Mr. BOUTELLE with Mr. PRICE.

Mr. GOODWYN with Mr. ELLETT of Virginia.

Mr. HOWE. I would like to vote. I was not in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPALDING). The Chair, under the rule, can not entertain the request.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the vote by which the House concurred in the Senate amendments to House bill 5731 be reconsidered, and that the House agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the vote whereby the House concurred in the Senate amendments to House bill 5731 be reconsidered.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the title be read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is the bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is the medical bill, and this request comes from the Senate committee, as there was a misunderstanding of some of the amendments that were adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon concurring in the Senate amendments. The gentleman moves to nonconcur and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The following committee of conference was appointed: Mr. SHANNON, Mr. BABCOCK, and Mr. COBB.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation, in said State, as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakotainto the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton;

A bill (H. R. 3189) to increase the pension of John S. Cochenour;

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—RINAKER VS. DOWNING.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in obedience to the direction of the Committee on Elections No. 1, I call up for present consideration the report of that committee in the contested-election case of John I. Rinaker vs. Finis E. Downing; and I will also say, Mr. Speaker, that by an understanding with the gentlemen who have signed the minority report in that case I believe we can this evening reach a vote, perhaps late in the afternoon. It is agreed between us, I believe, that we are to take not to exceed two and a half hours on either side. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] will control the time upon the part of the minority, and I will control the time upon the part of the majority of the committee. If the statement which I have made meets with the concurrence of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will ask that the House order that the agreement which we have reached may be made the rule of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Perhaps the gentleman in charge of the matter will understand that if there be five hours' debate that will carry it to half past 6, when the vote shall be taken. Is it the intention to have the vote as late as half past 6?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. We have agreed that we shall not take exceeding two and a half hours on each side, hoping that before the House adjourns we may be able to take a vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think we ought to take a vote at half past 6. I should object to having a vote at that time, as members will not be here, and you can not do it.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman can move the previous question when he desires.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has it in his own control. He can move the previous question whenever he sees fit.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the vote is to be had, the previous question ought to be called at 5 o'clock.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MOODY. The two branches of the committee have agreed between themselves that they will not take a longer time for debate than five hours. We all hope that we may conclude in a reasonable time and have the vote; and if the debate is prolonged,

I hope we may come to some other arrangement; but I dislike to enter into an agreement now that the vote shall be taken to-morrow, because if the debate should proceed we shall have to debate to empty benches, which I do not propose to do.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. Is there objection to the proposal as to the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That Finis E. Downing was not elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That John I. Rinaker was elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois, and that he is entitled to the seat.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall move a substitute for those resolutions, moving to recommit this case to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. DINGLEY. With or without instructions?

Mr. MOODY. With instructions for a recount of a part of the vote.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] has yielded to me in order that I may say that, pursuant to the instructions of the Committee on Ways and Means, as soon as this case is disposed of—not meaning, however, to interfere with the special business of to-morrow—I shall ask the House to consider what is called the free alcohol bill; that is, the bill to repeal section 61 of the Wilson bill. A great many gentlemen are interested in it, and I have therefore thought it proper to make this announcement.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested to me that I ought to state more fully the motion that I intend to make.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. What is the point of the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts desires to present a substitute for the pending resolutions. The Clerk will read the substitute.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he proposes to introduce a different substitute from the one which appears at the end of the minority report?

Mr. MOODY. I do not, unless some suggestion is made as to the form of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk proceeded to read the substitute.

Mr. RICHARDSON (during the reading). Mr. Speaker——

The Clerk continued and completed the reading of the proposed substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the contested election case of John I. Rinaker vs. Finis E. Downing be recommitted to the Committee on Elections No. 1, with instructions either to recount such part of the vote for Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois as they shall deem fairly in dispute, or to permit the parties to this contest, under such rules as the committee may prescribe, to recount such vote, and to take any action in the premises, by way of resolution or resolutions, to be reported to the House or otherwise, as they may deem necessary and proper.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LEONARD].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged matter. I move that the House adjourn in order that we may attend the unveiling of the Hancock statue.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois can not be taken off the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can rise to make a privileged motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not while some one else is on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] had been accorded the floor and had begun.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But there had been no debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois was occupying the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rose and addressed the Chair when the gentleman from Massachusetts commenced to make his motion.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand that. The gentleman rose at what time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. When the Clerk commenced to read the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts I arose and addressed the Chair, but waited for him to complete the reading, and then made my motion.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts for the purpose of introducing his substitute, but still retained the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Tennessee was too late.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I also yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], retaining the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think my motion is a privileged one and that I have a right to make it. I insist on my right, under the rules of the House, to make the motion that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois was on the floor all the time. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LEONARD], my colleague upon the committee.

Mr. LEONARD. Mr. Speaker, the consideration of this case, as compared with the other cases which have taken the attention of this House during the present session, is decidedly refreshing. Here there is no allegation of ballot-box stuffing, no allegation of raised returns, no allegation of false conduct on the part of sworn election officials. On the contrary, this contention rests entirely upon errors of election officers honestly, though in many instances mistakenly, performing the duties of their office. The Sixteenth Congressional district of the State of Illinois comprises the counties of Cass, Morgan, Scott, Pike, Greene, Macoupin, Calhoun, and Jersey. It is essentially a farming district. No large cities are within its borders, the largest town containing a voting population of only about 3,700. The official return for Congressman at the November election of 1894 gives the contestee, Mr. Downing, 17,816 votes, and the contestant, Mr. Rinaker, 17,776 votes, a plurality of 40. It will therefore be readily seen that the errors of election officers need not have been very numerous or very great to completely obliterate this narrow plurality and give the contestant a right to a seat in this body.

One of the charges contained in the notice of contest is that the election officers of the various election districts of the Congressional district erred in interpreting and rejecting ballots. The ballot in use in Illinois is a species of the Australian ballot system. It is an official ballot containing the different party tickets ranged in columns. At the head of these columns is the party appellation; over the party appellation is a circle in which the voter may mark a cross and thereby vote for all the candidates for all the offices mentioned in the columns below. There is also a provision in the Illinois ballot law which prohibits the voter from marking more names than there are offices to be filled. Upon this ballot voted in the November election, 1894, were four tickets, which contained complete lists of all the candidates for the different offices to be filled, the Democratic, the Republican, the Prohibition, and the People's Party. There were also two columns containing partial lists of candidates for the different offices to be filled, namely, the Independent Republican and the People's Silver Party.

Of these rejected ballots there were 30 which contained a cross in the Republican circle and also a cross in the Independent Republican circle. These ballots were interpreted by the various election boards as being in violation of the mandate of the statute which prohibits the marking of more names than there are offices to be filled, and were therefore rejected. However, since the record was made up in this case, since the briefs were submitted, a decision of the supreme court of Illinois has been handed down—a decision to which allusion has been made in both the majority and the minority reports, and to which reference will constantly be made in the argument of this case. I refer to the decision of Parker vs. Orr, wherein it is held that if a voter mark a cross in two or more circles at the head of two or more columns that ballot shall not be counted as to any candidate for an office where there are two or more candidates in those columns, but that where he makes a mark in the circles at the head of two or more columns and there is but one candidate for an office in those columns the ballot shall be counted as to that candidate.

Upon the Republican ticket was the name of John I. Rinaker as a candidate for member of Congress. Upon the Independent Republican ticket no name was mentioned for that office. In conformity to this decision, the ballots marked with a cross in the Republican circle and also with a cross in the Independent Republican circle should have been received and counted for the contestant in this case, and should therefore be credited to him in this contest at this time. That being done, the narrow plurality of 40 is thereby reduced to 10. The decision in the case of Parker vs. Orr throws light upon other questions which are important in this case in interpreting other irregularly marked ballots, 57 all told, which are classified in the majority report under the head of "irregularly marked ballots." The decision in Parker vs. Orr holds that the voter must declare his intention by making a cross. Great liberty is given him as to the form of the cross, but he must make some sort of a cross. The decision also holds that what was formerly in practice, the privilege of the voter to write his name upon his ballot, is now prohibited; that the writing of a name upon a ballot renders the ballot void, for the reason that it tends to destroy its secrecy.

Of these 57 ballots there were 3 which were received and counted and made a part of the official record. Evidence was taken as to those ballots. One was marked with a straight line instead of a cross; 1 had the voter's name written upon it; another was marked after the name "Downing" and before the name "Rinaker," rendering it uncertain for whom the voter intended to cast his ballot. All agree and concede that these 3 votes should be deducted from the count, 2 from the contestant and 1 from the contestee. Of the remaining 54 ballots after careful inspection and thorough investigation the majority of the committee have decided that the election officers were right in 41 instances, that they rejected 41 ballots properly. As to the remaining 13 they agree that 7 should have been counted for the contestee and 6 for the contestant; leaving the contestee the gainer by 2 votes as the result of our investigation and conclusion as to irregularly marked ballots.

Another subject which gave the committee no little labor was that of illegal votes. The election law of the State of Illinois requires the voter to have lived within the State one year, within the county ninety days, and within the election district thirty days to entitle him to the right of suffrage. As often happens there were very many who presented themselves to their election board to vote, whose residence qualifications were questioned. I think there were 65 all told in this case about whose qualification to vote evidence was taken. After carefully considering the peculiar evidence as to each case, the majority of the committee have concluded that 55 of those alleged illegal voters were legal; that 10 were illegal and their votes should not have been received and counted—6 for the contestee and 4 for the contestant, leaving the contestant the gainer by 2, by virtue of our investigation and conclusion as to illegal votes. There was 1 vote offered which was not received. All concede that that voter was a legal voter and that his vote should have been received. It was a vote for the contestant and should be credited to him in this contest.

There was also a question about the return in Patterson township. The certificate showed that the contestee, Mr. Downing, had 100 votes, while the tally sheet showed that he had 114 votes. This was discovered accidentally by a deputy county clerk. His evidence was taken; also the evidence of the recollections of the election board, which was conflicting. The determination of this question depended upon weighing evidence; and the majority of the committee came to the conclusion that there was not such evidence as to justify a contradiction of the official return. They therefore leave the return from that township as returned.

But as to irregularly marked ballots, as to illegal votes, as to the counting of this vote which should have been received, as to accepting the returns from Patterson township, the minority of the committee accept the conclusions of the majority of the committee, leaving two conclusions of the majority of the committee to which the minority of the committee do not assent—the conclusion as to assisted voters and the conclusion as to the recount in Macoupin and Cass counties. I will read the section of the Illinois ballot law which bears upon the question of assisting voters:

> Any voter who may declare upon oath that he can not read the English language, or that by reason of any physical disability he is unable to mark his ballot, shall, upon request, be assisted in marking his ballot by two of the election officers of different political parties, to be selected from the judges and clerks of the precincts in which they are to act, to be designated by the judges of election of each precinct at the opening of the polls. Such officer shall mark the ballot as directed and shall thereafter give no information concerning the same.

There were, all told, some 44 illiterate voters and voters laboring under some physical disability who presented themselves to their election boards, stated their inability or disability, and requested assistance in marking their ballots; whereupon the election boards gave them this assistance without administering to them the oath as to the truth of their statements which is prescribed in the section I have read. The theory of the majority of the committee is that when these voters presented themselves to their election boards and made a truthful statement as to their inability or disability, and requested assistance, they did all that the act required them to do, and that the failure of the election officers to perform their duty in administering the oath should not render their ballots void and should not disfranchise them. The theory of the minority of the committee is that the administration of this oath is an absolute condition precedent to the right of the voter to vote, and the failure to administer this oath rendered their ballots void, and that the ballots should be rejected and deducted from the official counts—38 from the contestant and 6 from the contestee.

I will say here that the Elections Committee of the last Congress had this question before them in the case of Stewart vs. Childs, and they held that the provisions of this statute were mandatory; that the failure to administer this oath rendered the ballots void. It is a fact that the report of that committee was never acted upon by the House. We have information that that statute was hastily considered in the committee. The able jurist [Mr. DANIELS], the distinguished chairman of our committee, informs us that this is the fact—that the question was not carefully and thoroughly considered by the Elections Committee of the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. MARSH. Was he a member of that committee?

Mr. LEONARD. He was a member of that committee. Under the circumstances, we think that not a controlling authority in this case. The chairman of our committee will tell you, as he told us, that he has given this question careful and thorough investigation, and he has become satisfied that the provisions of this statute are directory only, and that these votes received under the circumstances which I have mentioned should not be disturbed.

It is nowhere alleged that these illiterate and disabled voters were otherwise disqualified to vote. It is nowhere alleged that the statements which they made as to their inability or disability were in any respect untrue. It is nowhere alleged that they did not receive assistance from the proper election officers—presumably two from different parties, designated by the election board at the opening of the polls. That being the case, we can hardly see how it is in point of fact any violation of the secrecy of the ballot. The minority report makes these cases parallel to the case of the voter who writes his name upon a ballot.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman further, if he desires.

Mr. LEONARD. I think perhaps I had better use no further time.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman, that he may conclude what he was saying.

Mr. LEONARD. I will occupy only a minute or two.

Where a person writes his name upon a ballot, that is notice to everybody under whose eyes that ballot ever comes that he voted that ticket. Where these voters were assisted by two election officers, their sworn duty is not to disclose how any person voted. The fact that the voter takes or neglects to take the prescribed oath makes no difference whatever as to their duties and makes no difference as to the information that may be given to the world.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman permit me a question right there?

Mr. LEONARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. The point which the gentleman is now discussing is the point, as I understand, on which the case may turn.

Mr. LEONARD. I understand that it is decisive.

Mr. HALL. It involves a sufficient number of votes to turn the entire case.

Mr. LEONARD. So I understand.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will my colleague permit me to answer that question?

Mr. LEONARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is a fact in the case not disputed that the majority of the committee return the contestant as elected by 30 votes, and there are 32 votes which the contestee attacks. Now, if you deduct those votes it leaves the contestant without a majority.

Mr. LEONARD. It leaves the contestee 2 plurality.

Mr. HALL. Now, what I want is to address the mind of the House to that question, as to the statement of the law the gentleman is now making.

The law of my State in reference to elections, if the gentleman will permit me, is very plain. We have two separate sets of judges; first, a distributing set, and then the receiving judges. The distributing judges are required to put their initials on the top of the ballot. It is handed to the voter, who takes it to the booths, fixes his ticket, brings it back, and delivers it to the receiving judges. The law requires them also to put their initials on the ballot. But the law also requires the voter, on delivering his ballot to the receiving judges, to turn his back, or withdraw a certain number of feet away from the voting place. Our courts, in construing the law, say that the privilege of the voter is to see that the distributing judges' initials are on the ballot, and it is his privilege also to see that all of the conditions of the law are complied with until he parts with the ballot. But if the receiving judges fail to put their initials on the ballot it does not invalidate the ballot.

Now, I want to know if you are not taking the position that you do not require the voter to see that the condition precedent is complied with; something he could have done, something that under our law, according to the decision of the court, it is his duty to do?

Mr. LEONARD. That is the position I take. I believe it to be in conformity with the statute and decisions of the State of Illinois.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] for twenty minutes, or for such time as he may desire to occupy.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I think we ought to hear from those favoring the minority report before we proceed further on this side.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that in conference with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] I suggested that he follow our colleague on the committee [Mr. LEONARD]. He expressed a decided objection to occupy the floor at that time, inasmuch as he expressed his intention to open the debate on that side of the question.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not want to be understood as still persisting in the intention of opening the debate on this side. I have no desire to speak at the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOLLIVER). The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I would like to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, as suggested by gentlemen around me, that it is no more than fair that after we have opened the case the gentlemen on the other side shall proceed to occupy some part of their time, so that we may know what their position is.

Mr. MOODY. I yield so much time as he may desire to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to address the House upon this case just at this time, but at the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. MOODY] I will proceed. As was stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LEONARD], there are involved in the case no questions of fraud. While the notice of contest contained many allegations, yet there are no allegations or charges that in any wise attack or impugn the integrity or honesty of the election officials or their management of the election, so that the House can come to the consideration of the case with the absolute assurance and confidence there is not the suggestion or an intimation made in the pleadings or proofs submitted that anything fraudulent was done in the management of the election or in the casting or counting of the ballots.

The contestant in his notice of contest sets out that certain irregularities in the counting of the ballots by the election judges and officers occurred, but nothing that impugned either the integrity or the correctness of their conduct, except mistakes in the construction of the law as to how certain ballots marked should be counted, whether they ought to be counted for the contestant or contestee. He also alleges that certain illegal votes were cast, and alleges that certain unsworn and illiterate voters were permitted to vote, and that their ballots were marked for contestee by the officers without their having first taken the oath prescribed by law. This comprises succinctly the grounds of the contest; so that, I repeat, we come to the consideration of the case with absolute confidence in the integrity of the election officers. Whatever was done that might have changed the result was done in the utmost good faith, was done in counting ballots or not counting them at all, because of the failure of the elector to mark his ballot in accordance with the law prescribed by the Illinois statutes.

It is not strange, Mr. Speaker, that these election officers should be charged with making errors, because this law—this election law—is not simply a species of, or an imitation of, the Australian ballot, but is in fact the Australian ballot system recently adopted by the State, and had never been construed by the courts of Illinois prior to this election. The election officers proceeded to construe it and to count for the contestee or contestant, or to refuse to count at all, certain ballots that had been deposited in the boxes.

Now, this was done in accordance with instructions that were sent along with the election papers by the Secretary of State, and which were also posted up at the polling places so that the electors could see them. The supreme court of Illinois have, since this case was pending, made a decision in the case of Parker vs. Orr, and if we are permitted to resort to the ballots for the evidence this decision will relieve the House and the committee from any trouble in determining how these ballots thus marked and cast shall be counted or whether they shall be counted at all.

Upon investigation of the Illinois statute—which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] will discuss more in detail, for I do not desire to take up any more time than is absolutely necessary to state the case—I say upon investigation of the Illinois statute it will be found so declared and so adjudicated by the supreme court of the State of Illinois in the case of Parker vs. Orr, which will be discussed, and which I have here, that this is an Australian ballot system, and that the main purpose and intent of this ballot law of Illinois, as is the main intent and purpose of all these ballot laws, is to secure fair and honest elections, and above all things to preserve the sanctity and secrecy of the ballot. So that we come to determine the main question in this case, which is whether the House will accept an unofficial count, made by a person not an officer, not under oath when he made the count, in preference to the official count made by honest, sworn election officers, or in preference to the best evidence—namely, the ballots themselves—in the case.

I have here a sample of the ballot that was voted on that day. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has one that was certified to in the evidence, and I have simply a copy of it. There are, as you see, 50 names upon the ballot. There are instructions as to how the ballot shall be marked. To vote for the entire Democratic, Republican, Prohibition, Independent Republican, or People's Silver Party ticket upon this ballot the voter would have to mark a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket. That is what he did if he desired to vote the whole ticket. If he desired to vote for certain candidates on that ticket and not the entire ticket, then he would mark in the squares opposite their names. The voter, in undertaking to carry out these instructions as to marking his ballot, would sometimes mark in the circle over the whole Democratic ticket and then mark one Democratic candidate, and then mark the Republican ticket, sometimes in both circles. I do not mean to say those are the particular cases; but in that way, the voter not following out the instructions, the ballots were not marked in accordance to law, as the judges of election then understood it. Those ballots were some of them rejected and some of them were counted for one party and some for another. You will see the size of this ballot.

Now, there was a contest in one of these counties over local officers, and a recount was had under the supervision of the judges of election in one of these counties, as provided by the Illinois statute. The ballots were taken out during that recount. Pending that recount a witness, whose testimony is proposed to be accepted here and acted on in the place of the ballots and the sworn return of the election officers, stood behind or at the side of one of the officers conducting the recount and cast his eye over the ballots as they were handed from one judge to another or from one counsel to another. He did not have the ballots in his hands, and did not examine them critically, but he now undertakes to detail in his evidence the manner in which those ballots were marked and how they should be counted. It is upon that evidence, upon this point of the case, that the majority of the committee undertake to say that the solemn action of the election officers, organized under the law of Illinois so that each side shall have a representation, shall be set aside. It is insisted that the action of these sworn election officers in determining that certain ballots should be disregarded for being improperly marked, and that those ballots should not be counted for Mr. Downing or for Mr. Rinaker as they had been; that that count shall be undone and that the House shall accept the evidence of an outside third party in preference to the return of the election officers. I stand here to assert, without the slightest fear of successful contradiction, that in the election cases that have been decided in this House or by courts or in England or anywhere, that the testimony of an unsworn third party—the unofficial count of a third person—has never been taken and accepted in preference to the sworn official returns of the election officers where it has not been charged that the return is fraudulent.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will my friend permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is a very important suggestion; but it is claimed, I understand, by the advocates of the contestant, that by reason of an injunction, sued out by the contestee, the primary evidence could not be obtained, and that they were compelled to take this secondary evidence.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that. I am coming to that.

Mr. HENDERSON. You are going to discuss that?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Why, certainly, if I have the time and the ability, and I might as well do it now, since my friend has asked the question.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question just at this point?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand that there are 160 election districts in this Congressional district?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think as many as that; yes.

Mr. DALZELL. And am I right in assuming that the recount that was accepted only extended over 25 of the 160 election districts?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, I think so. Yes, 25; that is right.

Mr. DALZELL. And am I right in further assuming that those 25 districts fall 11 districts short of constituting the whole of one county?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, 11 districts short of all the districts of one county.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Neither of those assumptions is correct.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Then the record is not correct.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The record is correct.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman from Georgia is correct, too.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; I happen to know I am right. I was on the subcommittee. I went over this evidence with my colleagues on the subcommittee. I know I am right, and I shall be glad if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] can show where I am wrong, for I know I am correct in the statement I make, and his assertion is not sustained by the record.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Upon what point is the gentleman speaking?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. This recount by Mr. Murphy was in 25 districts in Macoupin County.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. That is true; and it is so stated in the brief.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly; but it was denied by your colleague [Mr. CONNOLLY].

Mr. CONNOLLY. I beg your pardon. I deny that it was 25 in the whole district. It was 25 in one county out of the whole 165 districts. The question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was whether the recount was had in more than 25 of the 165 districts.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And the gentleman said that was true.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I said that was not true. The others were in Cass County.

Mr. DALZELL. Pardon me a moment. I only ask for information. Was that had in more than 25 districts?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Twenty-five in Macoupin County and 37 in the district.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to know whether Mr. Murphy's testimony covers any more than 25?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Only 25, and they all relate to one county. That is all in the whole 165.

Mr. BRUMM. Why were there no more than 25 districts canvassed?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. In that county?

Mr. BRUMM. Anywhere. I simply want to ask for information.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. This was not done at the instance of the contestee. They never had any more. As to why they did not do it, I can not account for it.

Mr. BRUMM. Why did not the contestant have it done?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Will my colleague allow me to answer?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. The answer is, an injunction was obtained on the part of the contestee prohibiting the counting of any of the ballots for this entire Congressional district, based upon an alleged construction of the statute of Illinois which places it in conflict with the statute of the United States, which statute expressly provides for the counting of all the ballots in every election district in it where there is a contest. That is the reason why.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think my friend and colleague understands the question. This injunction was gotten out after this alleged recount.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. This injunction was gotten out after there had been a local contest.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That is what I said.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Other officers had their local contests in this election.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. In two counties. And there were judicial recounts made, and at these judicial recounts there were persons present who made a careful memoranda of exactly how the votes stood upon the Congressman, and that evidence was put in as secondary evidence after the best evidence had been suppressed by this illegal injunction.

Mr. DINSMORE. And this investigation, if my friend from Georgia will permit me, was all based on a report made by a man looking over the shoulders of the persons making the recount, making such as he could without an opportunity to make a careful examination of the ballots.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. The testimony will show that it was made with the greatest care and sustained and corroborated by unimpeachable evidence.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to consume as much time as I have. I want to get to the point suggested by the gentleman from Iowa and answer the suggestion of my colleague from Illinois. Now, the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] was why the recounts were not had in the other counties, and the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, stated because there was an injunction. Now, I say as to that injunction that it was not obtained until after this recount was had in these two counties. The recount was had for these local offices, and there was no injunction before that. Very well.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly; to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. POWERS. Do you contend that the officers of a State court can tie up these ballots so that the House of Representatives shall have no power to get at them?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not; and that is not done in this case, nor claimed to be so by the minority.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Georgia deny that the injunction in express terms prohibited the opening of these ballots until after the 3d day of March, 1895?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do; and the order in the record will sustain me.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. The gentleman will find by examining the order that it prohibits the opening of the ballots except in some court of competent jurisdiction, or before some person authorized to try the case, or until ordered by the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1895.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I so understand.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Now, does the gentleman claim that there is any court having competent jurisdiction over this matter?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think so.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. What court?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Any court of the United States or court of the State of Illinois.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. What court of Illinois and what court of the United States has jurisdidtion over a contested election case where the seat of a member of Congress is involved?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not undertake to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to answer that question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOODY. By the express terms of the statute any judge of a court of the United States has jurisdiction over this subject-matter of ordering a recount. Also by the terms of the statute any judge of a court of record of the State has jurisdiction; but I assume that no State court will take jurisdiction in compliance with a statute of the United States, but that any United States court will assume jurisdiction in conformity to an express statute passed by Congress.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. The very statute to which the gentleman refers——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman from Illinois will pardon me if I say to him that he will have plenty of time to make his argument hereafter. If it were not for the consumption of time which I ought not to undertake to consume I would be glad that he should be heard now, and if he does desire to be heard further at this time I will give him the floor; but if he does not, I hope I shall not be considered at all offensive if I decline to yield further.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Proceed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I do not contend that any State court or any other court could tie up the ballots in this case so that Congress could not get at them. The minority of the committee has based and bottomed its report upon the proposition that those ballots are to-day, by order of this court and its decree, just as they were, preserved as when they were cast and voted, for the special purpose of preserving them so that Congress might have them and count them.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the State law make provision for the preservation intact of the ballots?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It does; and they are to-day preserved, and if this House desire to "dig deep" for the truth and to get at the justice of the case they can have those ballots before the Committee on Elections or before the officials of this House where they can be counted just as they were cast. Instead of doing a wrong this injunction preserved the ballots for the use of this House, and the judge who made this order was careful to prescribe in it that the ballots should be preserved for the purposes of this contested election case so that this Committee on Elections and the members of this House can to-day, on the evidence in this record which is not denied, have those ballots brought here and counted for the candidates for whom they were cast.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Why was not the evidence taken as to what these ballots told within the ninety days as the law provides?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I can not tell you why.

Mr. CANNON. Was there any effort made to take that evidence?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think not, by either side. There was no notice given or subpœnas issued.

Yes; there was a subpœna issued upon the clerk of the court, who returned that he had been enjoined from delivering the ballots except in the way provided by the order.

Mr. CANNON. Was that subpœna issued in pursuance of United States law?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It was. The gentleman knows that it was; he is simply asking these questions for effect. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I want to get at the fact. It was issued by an officer in pursuance of the law?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. By a notary public.

Mr. CANNON. Why was it not answered?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It was answered.

Mr. CANNON. Were the ballots produced?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. They were not.

Mr. CANNON. Why not?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Because the clerk answered that he had been enjoined.

Mr. CANNON. By whom?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. By the judge of an Illinois court, the judge of an Illinois circuit court.

Mr. CANNON. Who sued out the injunction?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman knows that it was the contestee.

Mr. CANNON. The sitting member?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir. The gentleman from Illinois was aware of this all the time; and he need not have had any fear that I was not going to state it, for I had expected to state it. He has not embarrassed me at all by getting information which was no information to him.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman please state why the injunction was procured?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. In order to preserve the ballots, because they were the evidence of the title of the contestee.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. How would those ballots have been in any way endangered by bringing them before the notary in the presence of the contestant and the contestee and their respective attorneys?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not know, except in the manner alleged in the bill; and the judge who tried the case decided that they would be, and enjoined their being delivered to the notary public.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. What judge?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. A judge of a circuit court of Illinois having jurisdiction in equity. I apprehend everybody understands that to have taken the ballots before a notary public, an officer who has hardly any other power than to administer an oath, who can not preserve order—to have dragged those ballots before a notary public would have endangered them. At any rate that was the belief of the contestee. And, however much he may have erred in that respect, however much the judge may have erred in granting the injunction (which I do not concede except for the argument), this House can not afford to take the evidence of an outsider as to what those ballots contained in preference to the returns of the election officers when the ballots themselves are preserved by order of the court for the purpose of being counted.

Mr. HALL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The gentleman has unlimited time.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But I do not want to occupy unlimited time. I want to get through as soon as I can. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL. I wish to ask this question for information purely: Whether the contestee and the minority of the committee have ever volunteered or offered to produce those ballots or expressed any willingness to do so?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly. It was desired to produce them and have them counted. The contestee asked to have them recounted. They are in the custody of the court—preserved by order of the court and by the court officials, for the special purpose of being recounted by this House.

Mr. HALL. I ask the gentleman whether that application for an injunction was not for the purpose of construing a statute which was somewhat ambiguous as to who was the proper custodian of the ballots?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It was filed, as alleged, to have the ballots preserved and opened only as provided by the Illinois statute.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in this connection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Very well; I will answer the gentleman's question, and then I will not yield further.

Mr. LACEY. The inquiry has been made as to the ground on which the injunction was issued, and whether it was a good ground or not. Now, I ask whether that proceeding was not based on this language of the statute:

> Such ballots shall be opened only in open court, or in open session of such body, and in the presence of the officer having custody thereof.

The judge may perhaps have made a mistake in issuing the injunction; but did he not act on the theory that the ballots could not be opened except in the presence of the court?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That was the law of Illinois. That was the ground on which the injunction was sought, construing a statute of the State of Illinois which had not before been construed, as I understand.

Mr. LACEY. Was any motion made to dissolve the injunction?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. It was a Democratic clerk who was the defendant in that proceeding, I believe. The contestant was not a party to the suit, was he?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No, sir; but the same counsel represented both.

Mr. LACEY. Did the contestant ask to be recognized as a party in the proceeding in order to move to dissolve the injunction?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. He did not. As I understand the law in Illinois and everywhere else, a person who is interested in a matter of this kind, whose title is involved, can come into court and be made a party and make such a motion and take such action in the matter as the law may justify.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I stand here to say that this House, acting in a judicial capacity, can not afford to put itself upon record as saying that it will punish a man for appealing to the courts of the country and punish him because the courts of the country have sustained him in the contention that he made. When you say that the contestee shall be subjected to such a rule—that the law as it has existed for years shall be changed and that a party shall be punished simply because he desired and attempted to preserve for the use of this House the evidence which this House ought to have—then indeed will you establish a precedent which no judicial body can ever safely follow.

Mr. Speaker, I have an authority upon this question of secondary evidence. I call the attention of the House to the decision pronounced by Lord Campbell in 2 Ellis & Blackburn's Report, page 944. The rule there laid down is that where a third party to the case is subpœnaed or notified by proper legal procedure to produce documents or papers and fails to produce them, if they are still in existence, and if he does not give a good ground for his refusal, then, under the law, as construed in that case by Lord Campbell, chief justice, secondary evidence of the contents of those papers is not admissible. Here is the decision by Lord Campbell:

> If a stranger so served (with a subpœna duces tecum) does not produce the documents and shows no lawful justification for refusing or omitting to do so, his omission does not entitle the party who served him with the subpœna to give secondary evidence of the contents of the documents.

In the same case, Erle, judge, also said:

> The appellants have, as a part of their case, to prove the contents of a written document. They must, therefore, produce that document or account for its nonproduction. They say they account for it, because they served with a subpœna duces tecum the person who had it, and he did not produce it. I am of the opinion that the law does not admit the disobedience of a person served with a subpœna duces tecum a sufficient excuse for giving the contents of a document when the person served is punishable for his disobedience.

The case is the case of the Queen against the town of Llanfaethly, seventy-fifth English Common Law Report, page 938.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we all understand, as lawyers, where a notice is served under the statutory provision, that the party in the contest or the suit, if he fails to produce the papers, if he can not account for them and does not comply with the order, the presumption is that there is something in the papers which would injure the party so refusing to produce them. And where you serve a subpœna duces tecum on a third party, such as the clerk of the court in this instance, requiring him to produce them, and he fails to do so and at the same time declares or discloses the fact to the court that the ballots or the papers are reserved for the use of the case, such a declaration or disclosure would not authorize the court to use secondary evidence.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Will my colleague allow me an interruption?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Of course I can not refuse to yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Were not the ballots in each of the counties in this case asked for under a subpœna duces tecum by the contestant in this case?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have so stated.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Was not the answer in every instance that the injunction prevented, or stood in the way?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have so stated more than once.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Then, how does the gentleman undertake to say that secondary evidence was not proper evidence under the circumstances? Does the gentleman make that declaration?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Then, if I understand the gentleman, he holds that the injunction was a lawful and proper proceeding and produced no wrongful results?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I say it produced no wrongful result. Whether the judge who granted the injunction rendered an erroneous judgment with reference to it it is not for me to say. I do not undertake to criticise his action. Certain it is that it was not appealed from; and I take it for granted, where a judge in Illinois, wearing the judicial ermine in that State for many years, has rendered a decision which was not appealed from, but which was an honest decision, it is a question res adjudicata; certainly until it is set aside on a review of the case by some tribunal having authority to review it.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. The bill, if my colleague will permit me, is in the record in full, and the order in full. Now will the gentleman give the House the benefit of his opinion as to whether the decree was lawfully entered or not?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am of the opinion that the decree was lawfully entered because the court entertained jurisdiction of it and decided upon it. I do not undertake to say finally, because I have not arrived at a conclusion, that the court, as a matter of law, had a right to enjoin the delivery of the ballots. That is a question that I do not undertake to enter upon now. Nor do I undertake to say that the law of the United States, which provides that the notary public could serve a subpœna duces tecum to produce a paper, would cover the ballots, that the ballots are "papers" in the language of the law, and that the provision of the statute is supreme, and that it was a provision of that statute which prevented it from being done.

I am not prepared to say that the statutes of the United States prevented the judge from doing what he did, because as a matter of fact Congress has not indicated its purpose on the subject by the enactment of a law other than as to how testimony in contested election cases is to be taken, and matters of that kind. And as lawyers we know that until Congress has enacted a law the law of the State with reference to elections must be followed. So I do not say that the judgment of the court is wrong, nor do I undertake to criticise it. On the contrary, the contestee, taking advice of counsel going into court, rested his action on the judgment of a judge in Illinois. This House decided in the case of Follet against Delano, 2 Bartlett, page 113, that no conduct of the contestee in election cases where a mistake was made was to act as an estoppel, because the electors of the district were interested and their interest was entitled to be considered. Here is the case:

But the contestant and the sitting member are by no means the only parties interested in this representation. The electors of the district, each and every one of them, have a vital interest in that question, and no one of them can be precluded by any laches not his own from insisting that the choice of the majority shall be regarded. No confession of the sitting member, however it might bind him personally, can place the contestant in his seat unless he is the choice of the majority, nor deprive that majority of its rightful representation. The committee are of the opinion that the House should require proof that the sitting member has not, and that the contestant has, a majority of the legal votes before unseating one and admitting the other, however the sitting member may have seen fit to conduct his own case in a contest.

If this is the correct rule (and it has been accepted as such by the best authorities and commended), then this House can not justly punish the people of this district, because the contestee sued out this injunction, by unseating him upon illegal evidence. The proposition to do so is simply monstrous.

Mr. Speaker, the House at this very session, in the case of Van Horn vs. Tarsney, decided that these ballots were the best evidence. Both branches of the Committee of Elections No. 2 decided that the evidence as to the contents of the ballots was inadmissible, and that the ballots themselves were the best evidence; and the House refused to send back and have the ballots investigated or inquired into, because the proof was that they had been tampered with, or that the election in which they were cast was one in which there had been great frauds perpetrated. That was the argument both in the reports of the majority and minority of the committee, both sides holding that the ballots were the best evidence, but the majority contending that they ought not to take the time and trouble to ascertain for whom they were cast, because they could put no faith in them, as they had been shown to be fraudulent. The minority of the committee took the view that the House could ascertain what they were and the truth about them. Now, that is the position of the minority in this case, precisely. We occupy that position, that the ballots are the very best evidence, just as the House decided in the case of Van Horn against Tarsney that they were.

Before the official return of the elected officer can be set aside by an unofficial count, surely the House will require that fraud shall at least be charged. I call attention to the following authorities on this subject:

The burden of proof is always upon the party attacking the returns. The presumption is that the officers, charged by law with the duty of ascertaining and declaring the result, have performed that duty faithfully.

The true rule, while it may not require the exclusion of all reasonable doubts, does require clear and satisfactory proof of fraud or mistake before the legal presumption in favor of the correctness of the acts of sworn officers will be nullified.

The presumption is always against the commission of a fraudulent or illegal act and in favor of the honesty and correctness of the official acts of a sworn officer.—Paine on Elections, section 762.

The law presumes that sworn officers of election perform their duties until contrary is shown. The presumption is a fair one in favor of the correctness of the record kept by officers of election. (Paine, section 763; Koontz vs. Coffroth, 2 Bart., 128; Cooper vs. Telfair, 4 Dall., 14; Webster vs. Gilmore, 91 Ill., 324; Bromberg vs. Haralson, Senate Cong. Com., 355; Barr's Case, L. & R., 254; Bank vs. St. Joseph, 46 Mich., 526; Turner's Case, C. S. & J., 21; Custis vs. Yocum, 1 Ells., 416.)

The return must stand until such facts are proven as to clearly show that it is not true. This rule is well settled by numerous authorities, including the following: McCrary, sections 536, 537; Blair vs. Barrett, 1 Bart., 308; Knox vs. Blair, 1 Bart., 521; Howard vs. Cooper, 1 Bart., 276; Washburn vs. Voorhees, 2 Bart., 54; State vs. Commissioners, 35 Kans., 640; Reed vs. Julian, 2 Bart., 822.

A return can not be set aside upon proof that a recount made by unauthorized persons some time after the official count has been made showed a different result from the official count. This was upon the ground that the count made by sworn officers immediately upon closing of the polls was better evidence of the true result than a count made by interested parties not sworn at a subsequent period, and after the result of the official count had been made known. Such evidence comes far short of establishing either fraud or mistake in the official count. (McCrary, section 538; Gooding vs. Wilson, 5 Cong. Cases, 79; Featherstone vs. Cate, Rowell Cong. Cases, 103; Mudd vs. Compton, Rowell Cong. Cases, 150; Bisbee vs. Hull, 1 Ells., 316; Bard, C. & H., 117; Frederick vs. Wilson, Mobley, 402; McDuffie vs. Turpin, Rowell, 264; English vs. Peelle, Mobley, 235.)

An application for a recount of the ballots cast at an election will not be granted unless some specific mistake or fraud be pointed out in the particular box to be examined. Such recount will not be ordered upon a general allegation of errors in the count of all and giving particulars as to none of the boxes. (McCrary, Elections, third edition, section 400; and cases cited.)

In the case of Letcher vs. Moore (Clark and Hall's Cases, page 715) the House refused to accept a recount of a portion of the election precincts to discredit the returns. In that case the votes of four out of five counties of the district was recanvassed; and the report says:

If a part of the vote is omitted this is not even prima facie evidence, because non constat that a canvass of the whole vote would produce the same result.

Mr. BRUMM. It seems to me that this case will turn probably on this question, and the sooner we get this information the better, though it may take a little time. I see by reading the minority report that you favor the adoption of the following resolution:

That the contested election case of John I. Rinaker vs. Finis E. Downing be recommitted to the Committee on Elections No. 1, with instructions either to recount such part of the vote for Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois as they shall deem fairly in dispute, or to permit the parties to this contest, under such rules as the committee may prescribe, to recount such vote, and to take any action in the premises, by way of resolution or resolutions, to be reported to the House or otherwise, as they may deem necessary and proper.

Now, suppose this case is recommitted. How can you get at these ballots now, any more than you could have gotten them before?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Why, sir, because the order of the judge, on page 214 of the record in this case, declares that they are enjoined—

From removing or permitting said ballots to be removed from the place where they are now kept, until the same are ordered to be opened or recounted by a court of competent jurisdiction of the State of Illinois or of the United States, or by the House of Representatives in Congress of the United States after the 3d day of March, A. D. 1895.

Mr. BRUMM. Are you now reading from the decision of the court which granted the injunction?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; I am reading the decree of the court.

Mr. BRUMM. That is a part of the decree of the court?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; signed by Lyman Lacey, the judge of the circuit court, where the case was heard and decided; and this is certified to by John F. Clark, clerk. I hope the gentleman will understand how we can recount them. They are there. They are preserved. The witnesses swear they are there, sealed up, tied up, put in trunks. There they remain to this day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. To be counted here, if necessary.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And the clerks for those counties certify that they are there in the same condition in which they were when they were sealed up by order of the court, and we have these certificates here before the House.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. If the gentleman will allow me, how were these ballots originally counted? Were both parties represented by election officers?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. These parties?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I mean the political parties to which these gentleman belong.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. There were men on the board representing both parties?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes. The Illinois law required that.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. How is it proposed to set aside their official count?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. By the statement of a person who stood behind one of these officials and looked over his shoulder, and who undertakes to say how the ballots were marked and for whom he thinks they should be counted; and this was done by him only in 25 precincts out of 37 in Macoupin County, when there are 160 precincts in the district.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Was he an employee of the contestant? How came he there?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. He did it in the interest of the contestant and was employed by him to do so.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. He was not commissioned or directed by any court?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No; as a matter of course, not; and no pretense is made that he was or that he acted except at the request of the contestant. We should count the ballots for ourselves. It is not only our right but our duty to do so, that the truth may be ascertained and the right prevail. We have ample authority to do this. I call attention to the following language of Judge Cooley, to be found in Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 625:

But back of the prima facie case the court may go, and the determination of the State board may be corrected by those of district boards, and the latter by the ballots themselves, when the ballots are still in existence and have been kept as required by law.

Mr. HENDERSON. Right here, if I may be allowed to interrupt my friend, I will call his attention to the fact that he read an English case which I do not think he has applied. As I understand the doctrine, which is a sound one, if the contestant had been asked to produce the ballots, under a subpœna to bring and produce them, and if they were in his possession, the authority would apply if they were not produced. But the contestant sued out this subpœna and the clerk, who was not a party in interest, had the possession of the ballots. The answer was put into the clerk's mouth by the contestee, through his writ of injunction. The clerk, standing in the shoes of the contestee, refused to produce the ballots. Therefore it seems to me that the English authority would operate against the contestee. If I misinterpret the gentleman's application, I should be glad to have him make it clear.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think you do. It does apply. The gentleman has not applied it in the way that I think it ought to be applied.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to hear your application of it to this case, because I think this is an important part of the case, so far as I have listened to the discussion.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. We have a statutory provision, notice to produce—a number of the States have—and they have it in England by statute. Notice to produce papers in the possession of a party serves as a subpœna duces tecum upon a third party; so that if a party to a suit is served with notice to produce, and it is shown that the papers are in his possession, that he has them and he fails to account for them, then the law, as a penalty upon him, does one of two things. It either permits the plaintiff (if he is the plaintiff and the person notified is the defendant) to proceed against him without hearing him, or permits the jury to conclude that he does not produce the papers because they are hurtful to his case. But if a third party fails to produce under a subpœna duces tecum, no such inference can be drawn as against the party against whom the evidence is sought by means of the subpœna.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; but in this case the contestee had brought about the condition of things which prevented the clerk from responding to the subpœna, and all the time was insisting upon the enforcement of the injunction, so that it could not be done, as I understand it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That is true; the contestee did it, but the contestee did it in the assertion of what he deemed to be a legal right, and in the assertion of that legal right he had the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction sustaining him. Now, does the distinguished gentleman [Mr. HENDERSON], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this House, undertake to say that any court would visit upon a party as a penalty or a forfeiture that which he was sustained in doing by a court of competent jurisdiction?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that the contestee, as I understand the case thus far, ought not to have stood in the way of letting the best evidence be produced——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. He did not.

Mr. HENDERSON (continuing). To show his title.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. He did not.

Mr. HENDERSON. And that is why secondary evidence had to be taken. As to your objection to the secondary evidence, I do not see, in its application to the case, how it helps the matter.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am sorry you do not.

Mr. TERRY. With the permission of my friend from Georgia I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that if the law provided that these ballots should not be opened before a notary public—should not be produced before a notary public—and the law requires that they should not be produced except before a court, then the clerk in refusing would not be standing in the shoes of the contestee, but he would be standing as the minister of the law. So that when the court of Illinois, clothed with competent jurisdiction to construe the statutes of Illinois, held that the law forbade these ballots to be opened before a notary public, then the clerk making such response responded not as the contestee but as a minister of the law acting under the direction of the chosen instrumentality authorized to interpret the law of the State of Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not yield. I can not yield any further. I am obliged to go on.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like to answer that suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I will yield if you will not take it out of my time.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to say that the evidence in this case was being taken under the Federal law, and the notary public that he speaks of under this law has the same right, the same power, and the same authority as a Federal judge; and it has been decided on this floor that an officer of that kind, clothed as this man was, seeking to examine these ballots, was empowered with all the authority of a court.

Mr. TERRY. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that there is no law of the United States that clothes the notary public with the power of a United States court.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman, then, has not read the law, and does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. TERRY. I undertake to say further that you can not find any decision of any court in Christendom——

Mr. HOPKINS (interrupting). That was decided in the last Congress.

Mr. TERRY (continuing). That ever held that under a statute providing that the ballots should only be opened before a court a notary public was a court within the meaning of the statute.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, if the gentleman knows anything, and knows anything of the facts in the Scull case, he knows that under the law as interpreted there the notary public was given the power I speak of.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Am I understood to have the floor?

Mr. TERRY. I would like to have it out with my impetuous friend from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have the law of Illinois here before me. There being no law of the United States upon the subject, it provides that the ballots in an election in Illinois shall not be opened except in open court, and must be opened in such a body in the presence of the officer having the custody thereof. I have undertaken to say, in answer to the question of my friend from Iowa, that the law of the United States makes no provision except for permitting the notary public to take the testimony and have the papers produced. I am not discussing the Scull case, referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], because my colleague will do that. I could discuss it. But I take it that no House, and no tribunal, will undertake to say that because the contestee in this case—and there I will leave this question—because the contestee in this case undertook to protect the ballots by legal process and by sanction of a court, which was done, that this House in trying this case should trample under foot the rules of law and admit the testimony of a witness who, while he doubtless intended to tell the truth, is not reliable because of the circumstances that surrounded him. His testimony itself shows that he was liable to be incorrect as to how these tickets were marked, and under those circumstances I think that this House, even this Republican House, ought to pause long before they destroy a rule of law so universal and so essential in the preservation of the title of a seat of its member.

One more word in reference to the other point and I am done. The other point is that there were a number of voters who voted for the contestant and for the contestee who under the law of Illinois were illiterate voters, and who had to take an oath before they could be assisted by the clerks or officers in marking their ballots. I do not know what occurred in the committee room of the last Congress with reference to the case of Steward against Childs. I know it was an Illinois case. I know it was a case which undertook to construe the very Illinois statute which we now are to construe. I know it has been stated that the chairman of our committee, who was also upon the Elections Committee then, said that it was not a well-considered case; but I know that this very identical point was made in the contest of a Democratic contestant, and I know that there were countercharges made by the Republican contestee that illiterate voters were assisted to mark their ballots for the Democratic contestant without taking the oath prescribed by statute.

I know that the briefs submitted upon both sides for the contestant and for the contestee made this point and discussed it. I know that a committee composed of a majority of Democrats and a minority of Republicans, including the distinguished chairman of the present Committee on Elections No. 1, including also the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 3 of the present House, unanimously reported that Steward, the Democrat, was not entitled to his seat, because, among other reasons, it was stated that of the voters who had voted for contestant 94 had been assisted by the Democratic election officers to mark their ballots, when the law of Illinois required that the voters should be first sworn as to their inability to mark the ballots themselves.

Mr. DANIELS. Where is the evidence that the minority of that committee agreed to that report at all?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not know what occurred in the committee room, but the evidence is here that the Committee on Elections submitted a report to the effect I have stated. Here is the report. No minority report is made.

Mr. DANIELS. I have the report here, and there is no evidence whatever in it that any member of the minority of that committee in the last House agreed to the report, and the report by the minority in the case of O'Neill vs. Joy was directly to the contrary—to the effect that a voter could not lose his vote by the neglect or fault of the officers of election in that respect.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not know, of course, what occurred in the committee room, but I can not presume that the present distinguished chairman of our committee and the distinguished Republicans upon that committee would consent to a report which declared and laid down distinctly a wrong principle of law simply because it would keep a Republican in his seat. I will not consent to that conclusion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here are the authorities. The other day the supreme court of Kentucky, a State which has a similar provision of law, I may say the exact statute as Illinois, with reference to how illiterate voters shall be assisted, decided that voters who had their ballots marked for them without having first taken the oath, should not have their ballots counted. Here are the cases. Here is an apparently unanimous report in the Fifty-third Congress. Here is the position of the supreme court of Kentucky deciding this question, which I will furnish to my friends on the other side. Here are the reports of decisions of other States, Minnesota and Wisconsin, to the same effect, and if the report of the majority of this committee shall be adopted, if it shall be declared that that is not the law, then his case will stand out in bold relief as the only authority, and that an authority made for this occasion, which can be cited to sustain its doctrine.

Whatever is done in contested election cases, surely the plain and admitted propositions of law should not be changed to suit partisan purposes or needs. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

Under the leave granted me by the House, I append to my remarks the following, submitted by me to the Committee on Elections No. 1 on this case:

MR. BARTLETT, of the subcommittee, submits to the committee the following views:

The undersigned submits to the committee, and to each individual member thereof, the following statement in the above-entitled case, as an expression of his views concerning the same, and as indicative of the very strong impression which he has received from a careful study of the testimony, the briefs of counsel, the authorities cited, and the argument submitted orally.

In the first place, this is a case based upon the results of an election held in the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois on the 6th day of November, 1894, for Representative in Congress, under the Australian ballot-system law of Illinois, and in connection with the regular general State and county elections, at which candidates for all the State and county offices appear upon their respective party tickets in connection with the candidates for Representative in Congress. The Australian ballot law of Illinois is, it will be seen, peculiar in some respects, and contains mandatory provisions intended to enforce the fundamental principle of that law, which, it has been declared by the supreme court of the State, is the secrecy, purity, and integrity of the ballot. As all the party tickets and the candidates of each party for the various offices to be filled at that election are printed in parallel columns upon a single ticket, commonly called a "blanket ticket," being approximately 10 inches long by 20 inches wide, and as the voter is required to indicate by making a cross in the circle to the left of and immediately preceding the party title at the head of the ticket he wishes to vote straight, or in the square at the left of and immediately preceding the name of the candidate upon any other ticket which he desires to vote for instead of the candidate which is printed upon his own ticket, it results that at every voting precinct, and owing to the varying degrees of education or intelligence of the voters, who are required to mark the official ballot delivered to them in a voting place in a booth provided for that purpose separate and apart from the election officers or any other person in order that their ballot may be absolutely secret, and necessarily, as all the voters do not fully and clearly comprehend the instructions which are given and provided for their benefit, and which would result in absolute uniformity in the marking of the ballots, there have been peculiarities in the manner of marking ballots amounting in many instances to such a mutilation as to destroy the expression of the intention of the voter and to so confuse the mind of the election officers that they find it impossible to count them.

These ballots, it will be found from the record, furnished to a large extent the basis or grounds upon which the contestant in this case has staked his right to the seat now held by Mr. Downing, the contestee.

And it also appears that the errors which he complains of, which have, he asserts, deprived him of the official certificate, are the errors of judgment, honestly made by sworn officials, against whom there is not the slightest allegation or evidence of wrongdoing or fraudulent intention. A careful analysis of all the scratched ballots above alluded to, which appears in the evidence of this case, would seem to indicate that the aforesaid honest mistakes of election officers, in deciding whether they should be counted or not, as if counted, for whom, have been made as largely upon one side as the other, with the exception, however, of one class of marked or scratched ballots, being such as have been marked by the voter with a cross in both Republican and the Independent Republican party ticket circles, there being no candidate upon the Independent Republican party ticket for Representative in Congress. The same kind of double markings, it appears, were made in case of the Democratic ticket and the People's Silver party ticket, in a few instances, but more of them occurred in the former than in the latter case, and consequently, as the larger part of tickets marked in this manner were rejected by the election officers, and, as in accordance with the opinion of the supreme court, subsequently rendered and not then published for the guidance of election officers, it was held inter alia that tickets marked in such a manner ought to be counted for the candidates upon the ticket first marked, where there was no candidate for the same office upon the ticket last marked, and consequently it follows that in considering these peculiarly marked ballots we find that a few more of the same must be counted for Rinaker than for Downing.

It, however, appears that in the County of Macoupin, during the progress of a recount of the ballots had in pursuance of lawful authority, and in the mode prescribed by the statutes of Illinois, for the purpose of determining a contested election case between the rival candidates for the office of county treasurer, a private and unauthorized recount was made on Congressman at the instance and request of the contestant in this case, and was made by his son, assisted by one Murphy and another, who were employed so to do by the contestant, and who kept an account of some 35 precincts out of 37 in the said county, the recount having been abandoned in the county contest case, as the charges and variations from the official count were of such an immaterial amount as to have no effect whatever upon the result as declared by the official returns.

It seems, however, that the result of this private and unofficial recount of the first 11 precincts on Congressman, thus made by the son of the contestant and the person assisting him, neither of whom was under oath or otherwise specially qualified, has not been made known to this committee, either in the testimony or in the briefs of contestant's counsel, so far as the result of the same related to the parties in this contest; but it does appear, from an examination of the table made by the officers who did conduct the county contest and the recount of the ballots in that proceeding of the aforesaid 11 precincts, that, so far as the results could be obtained, the errors and mistakes so discovered were in favor of and increased the vote of the Democratic candidate by 16. It is, however, brought out prominently in the record by the contestant that, so far as the remaining 25 precincts were concerned, which were those recounted privately and unofficially by the said Murphy, in the interest of said contestant and purely ex parte, there were discovered errors and mistakes as concerned the "objected to" and "rejected" ballots which had theretofore not been counted by the various precinct election officers, in official count and otherwise, to the extent of increasing the vote of Rinaker 35 net. It is but fair, however, to the contestee in this case to say that he was no party to and had no knowledge of, nor did he consent to, the aforesaid unofficial recount, and that he protests against its being received by this committee as of any value whatever as regards his right to the seat he now holds.

But it should be borne in mind that the result of the private recount made by the contestant in the first 11 precincts, which showed a net Democratic gain of 16, would have shown, if the same had been testified to by the persons who made it (as was done in the case of the last 25 precincts), a gain to the contestee equal to that found in favor of the candidate of his party over the official returns for county treasurer, which, if it had been made to appear in the record of this case, as we insist it should have been done in all fairness and justice, and if the contestant had desired to have acted fairly and honorably by his opponent, the net gain by the discovered errors and mistakes testified to by said Murphy of 35 for contestant (discovered in his private recount of the last 25 precincts of the county), would have reduced the claim of the contestant in this case with regard to the total vote in Macoupin County accordingly, and he then could have claimed, by reason of his private and ex parte recount above alluded to, a gain of but 19; but it must be taken into account, and be borne in mind by this committee, and as it will appear by an analysis of the testimony, that a part of even the aforesaid 19 alleged gain for contestant in Macoupin County were made up of scratched or irregularly marked ballots which had been excluded from the official count, but which the said Murphy assumed to decide should be so counted, notwithstanding the sworn officers of election had returned them as "objected to" or "rejected" ballots, and made them parts of their records, in order that any tribunal of competent jurisdiction trying a contested election case in which they became material might determine judicially as to whether or not they should be counted for one or the other of the candidates. And it is upon this assumption of a judicial function by the said Murphy, who was acting in a private capacity as the paid agent of the contestant in this case, and in an ex parte manner, and who assumed to decide that certain of these "objected to" and "rejected" ballots ought to have been counted for Rinaker, that this committee is asked to deprive the contestee in this case of his seat in Congress, based upon the verity of the official returns, not only of that county, but of all the counties in the district, the integrity and accuracy of which have not been impeached or contradicted in any manner, and of which it has not been and can not be, I assume, asserted that they were procured by fraud or collusion of the contestee, or based upon errors made in his interest, with intent to defraud the contestant of any of his rights.

It is also to be observed in the testimony that the aforesaid so-called "recount of ballots" in Macoupin County was made under such circumstances and with such surroundings and in such a manner as to impart no verity whatever to the results testified to by contestant's witnesses as compared with the official returns made under circumstances of official sanctity, and by officers whose integrity and honesty have not been impugned or called in question in this case. And we assert that in all the history of contested election cases before Congress there will not be found a single case where upon testimony of this character or upon a recount of ballots made under such questionable circumstances and under such surroundings as in this case has any sitting member ever been deprived of his seat in Congress. To establish such a precedent at this time and upon such testimony as is adduced for our consideration in the record of this case would be to establish a most dangerous and destructive precedent, and one which would subject this committee to the just criticism of the House and of all succeeding Congresses.

It would be a reversal of the time-honored doctrines of the law, which have prevailed in this Congress since its institution, and which are expressed in section 440 of the second edition of McCreary on Elections, and in section 538 of the third edition of the same author, wherein he states the doctrine to be that "a return can not be set aside upon proof that a recount made by unauthorized persons, some time after the official count has been made, showed a different result from the official count." This doctrine was also asserted in the case of Gooding vs. Wilson, Forty-second Congress, and to the same effect are all the books upon contested elections. A reversal of this doctrine at this time can not but be disastrous. I am unwilling to agree that any cloud upon the title of contestee in this case to his seat shall be predicated upon the testimony of an unofficial recount made by an unauthorized person, at least so long as the ballots themselves, of and concerning which the said unlawful recount has been made, are in existence and in a condition, as it is stipulated they are in the record, to be examined and recounted by this committee, and their exact result learned by us from a recount made by ourselves.

But I wish also to call attention to the fact that contestant, in his claims, in order to increase the apparent gain which he hopes the committee will allow him, and by reason of which he hopes to overcome the narrow majority of the contestee, has sought to include, and in his summary has insisted that, in addition to the apparent gain resulting from the testimony of Murphy aforesaid in the county of Macoupin, there shall be counted for him a second time certain scratched or irregularly marked ballots, which themselves furnish the material and were included by the said Murphy in his alleged recount showing apparent gains for contestant. Murphy includes in his statement of gain for contestant 14 of these "objected to" or "rejected" ballots. Aside from this demonstration that contestant has thus attempted to secure an unjust advantage by counting for himself twice the same irregularly marked or scratched ballots, I insist that this committee could under no circumstances concur with Murphy in that decision, after examining the decision of the supreme court of the State in the case of Parker vs. Orr, and assuming that the description of such marked or scratched ballots, as testified to by the son of the contestant, is correct. Under no circumstances and under no construction of the law or the rule laid down in the said decision of the supreme court could there be counted for the contestant of those 14 irregularly marked ballots more than 5; much less should Murphy be allowed to credit Rinaker with the whole 14. But there should be, I insist, 4—at least 3—of the same counted for the contestee.

My position with regard to this county, however, is that there can be no other result accepted as the true result of the election in that county by this committee than that which is expressed and appears in the officially announced result, made up and canvassed by the State officials from the returns as certified to them. From any evidence which has been adduced in this case, or brought to the attention of the committee, the most that could be justly and properly admitted by the committee would be that the testimony of Murphy and Rinaker, and others, tends to show that there have possibly been some slight errors committed in matters of judgment and decision, upon irregularly marked ballots, and possibly in actual tallying and count in Macoupin County, which would justify this committee in demanding and having brought before it, for its personal and actual inspection, the ballots themselves and all the records and papers pertaining thereto, upon inspection of which and upon the recount of the same, made by the committee, we shall be able to arrive at the exact and true result. It can be done in no other way.

The following tables contain a careful analysis of the testimony as to "scratched" or "informally" marked ballots in the counties of Macoupin, Cass, Pike, Morgan, Greene, Scott, and Calhoun.

GREENE COUNTY.

I am of opinion that an unbiased and honest consideration of the testimony in the record relating to Greene County will admit of no other construction or conclusion than that the clerical error of 14 votes, which was made honestly, I believe, but which resulted in depriving Downing in the official count of 14 votes in Patterson precinct, should be corrected by this committee, and that number of votes restored to Downing's vote in the district. I base my conclusions that this should be done upon the testimony of County Clerk Carmody, found in the printed record, page 145, where he states, in answer to the question:

"Q. Did you assist in the canvassing of the vote?

"A. In the first canvass, with the justice of the peace, I did not assist. Mr. Short, my deputy, did that, but the next morning after that we heard about the Rinaker and Downing vote being so close, and I went to one of the judges, a Republican, who had served in town here at elections, and suggested that we go through them again so as to be sure.

"Q. What did you go through?

"A. Went through the vote for Congressman.

"Q. Went through what?

"A. The tally sheets and certificates.

"Q. It was from the tally sheets that you made the calculation, was it not?

"A. Yes, sir; and the certificate on the back of the tally sheets. We got to talking about it one day, Mr. Jones and I, and I went in there (in the closet where the returns were kept, previously testified to). I wanted to show him that in Patterson township, on the tally sheet, they had marked 114 votes for Mr. Downing, and on the back of the tally sheet in the certificate they had only written out 100, and I told him I thought there was a mistake there; that they ought to have given Downing 114 votes, as the tally sheet showed that many for him."

(On page 147:)

"Q. And they discovered that the votes as tallied up on the tally sheet did not correspond with the certificate made by the judges on the back of the tally sheet in one township?

"A. Yes, sir; Patterson Township.

"Q. I will ask you to state again, Mr. Carmody, what difference, if any, you discovered in the number of votes certified to by the judges, and the number of votes tallied up?

"A. After the election it was reported around here that first one was elected and then the other, and the next morning, after the canvass was made with the justices of the peace, I called Harry Moore in; he was a Republican and also one of the judges in that township, and I told him there was liable to be a contest and I wanted to go over the canvass again, and we took the tally sheets and certificates and went over them again. We discovered when we got to Patterson township that they had tallied 114 for Downing on the tally sheets and on the back of the certificate it was written out 100 votes.

"Q. The majority of Downing in this county, was it based on the certificate of the judges on the back of the tally sheet?

"A. Yes, sir; we counted 100 votes for him as certified by the judges of election.

"Q. What is the law in this State, Mr. Carmody, with reference to certifying the vote to the secretary of state?

"A. We canvass the votes and take the certificates of the various judges of election as the basis.

"Q. In certifying the number of votes to the secretary of state cast for Mr. Downing in Greene County, did you in making up your estimate take into consideration the number of votes tallied up for him on the tally sheet in Patterson Township, or the number of votes specified in the certificate of the judges on the back of the tally sheet?

"A. We took the number of votes certified to in the certificate on the back of the tally sheet."

(On page 148:)

"Q. Then, as a matter of fact, if the number of votes tallied up for Mr. Downing in Patterson Township is the correct number that he received in that township, Mr. Downing received 14 more votes in Greene County than he got credit for in the returns sent by the county clerk to the secretary of state. Is not that correct?

"A. Yes; that is correct."

(On page 149:)

"Q. Did you examine any other tally sheets than that of Patterson?

"A. We examined them all, but found but two townships in which changes should have been made; one was in Woodville. The writing was so poor that we could hardly tell what it was intended for, but there was a difference of 2 or 3 votes, probably 10 votes, and they wrote 67 when it should have been 57; it showed a difference there. By comparing them we could see that it was intended for a 57 instead of a 67, or a 67 instead of a 57, and I don't remember which now.

"Q. When you made out your certificate and sent it to the secretary of state did you make it conform to the number of votes indorsed on the back of the tally sheets?"

(On page 180:)

"A. Yes, sir; after we found the mistakes we sent for Squire Heron and Squire Connole, and pointed out to them the two mistakes I have mentioned. One was at Woodville, where they were giving Downing too many votes. We sent for Heron and Cannole and showed it to them, and they saw that they had made a mistake, and corrected the Woodville mistake.

"Q. I understand you to say that you sent for the canvassers, the two justices of the peace, and they corrected the mistake in the Woodville vote?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And deducted that from whose vote?

"A. From Downing's vote.

"Q. What did you do with the vote in Patterson township?

"A. We had to leave that as it was because they certified he only got 100 votes, although the tally sheet showed they counted him 114 votes. Taking 114 votes, the number of votes Downing got, and the number of votes the other candidates got, the vote showed it was the proper number of votes. To only count 100 votes for Downing would show about 14 votes that were not cast for anybody for that office.

"Q. Why was not the vote for Woodville certified the same way?

"A. It was certified, but it was certified properly. In reading on the back the number of votes they did not read it right. They called it 57 when it should have been 67, or 67 when it should have been 57. The writing was so poor that it looked as much like one as it did like the other.

"Q. The returns certified by you to the secretary of state show the number of votes in the respective voting districts as certified to by the judges and clerks of the election on the back of the tally sheets?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Counting in the number of votes the tally sheets showed tallied up for Downing, what sort of a result would that make, added to the number of votes tallied up and certified to for other candidates, with reference to the whole number of votes cast?

"A. That would be about right. I do not know whether it tallied just the number of votes cast or not, but it was about right."

C. A. Henshaw, one of the judges of election, Patterson Township, testifies on page 534. In answer to a question of counsel as to what discrepancy appeared upon the tally sheet referred to, how it happened, etc., he says: "The discrepancy between the tally sheet and the certificate I think was a clerical error on the part of the parties who wrote it out. The votes were counted, and then we found some discrepancy in the legislative ticket, and we counted the ballots over again. We counted them all, for we thought if an error had been made there there might have been one made some place else also. We counted the tickets a second time, and there was an understanding between the judges, and I think we all understood it the same, that, as the tally sheet shows, that was the correct count; if my recollection serves me right, it was 114 votes for Mr. Downing. We did not notice that error there, but my understanding was at the time, and always has been, that the vote for Downing should have been 114 votes instead of 100."

Again, W. C. Linder, another of the judges of election in Patterson Township, testifies, on page 537 of the record, in answer to questions of counsel as to what was his recollection with reference to the discrepancy in the tally sheet in Patterson precinct:

"My recollection in that there were 114 votes counted for Downing.

"Q. What is your recollection as to how many votes were cast for Mr. Downing at that election?

"A. One hundred and fourteen is my recollection.

"Q. Your recollection now is that that was the number of votes Mr. Downing received in that township at that election?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How can you state that Downing got 114 votes?

"A. I remember it that way. I don't know how I can state it. I think what makes me remember it was that I heard that there was an error somewhere, but I did not hear the nature of it. I heard there was an error in our count, and that put me to thinking in regard to that one thing, and I remember it by that, and then I went to my ballot that I had and looked at that, and that showed 114 votes.

"You say that you have not that memoranda now?

"A. No, sir; I have not. I did not know that I was going to be called up here or I should have been careful to have preserved it. I was clearing out my desk, and I think I destroyed it with some papers not more than a month ago, I would say.

"Q. If the tally sheets show that Mr. Downing received a certain number of votes, and the certificate of the judges shows that he received a different number, which is correct, if you know?

"A. I would not swear positively, as I said before; but my recollection is that 114 is right. I have never seen the tally sheets since that night, but I think the tally sheets show 114."

Again, Mr. W. H. Dyer, who was a clerk at the said election in Patterson Township, being asked if there is any discrepancy between the tally sheet and the certificate made by the judges and clerks as to the votes cast for Downing for Congress, which was correct, and how he knew, answers, on page 538:

"A. It is my judgment that the tally sheet is correct. I aimed to count the votes just as they were given to me, and I think the tally sheet is correct."

A. J. Martin, another clerk, testifies on pages 539 and 540, to the same effect. The only other witness who testifies regarding this discrepancy, or clerical error, on the tally sheets of Patterson Township, is one Abraham Groce, who, in his examination in chief for the contestant, testifies as to the regular Democratic vote received by other candidates, and to the reception by Downing of 114, but which figures he states, without giving any adequate or satisfactory account of the reasons therefor, were changed to 100. All of his testimony, both in chief and upon cross-examination, and upon reexamination and recross-examination, is unsatisfactory, indefinite, and so evidently biased as to render it worthless and not to be regarded for an instant in comparison with the testimony of the other five witnesses who participated in the transaction and whose testimony we have quoted from as above.

There is no indication in the testimony of any of these witnesses, nor any intimation of any kind to be found in the printed testimony, or in the tabulated statement of the vote returned officially in the county, which would indicate that Mr. Downing did not receive his full party vote, while it would seem that, in some precincts, Rinaker received, in addition to his party vote, the votes of some Prohibitionists, and I am unwilling to believe, in the light of the above-quoted testimony, and in the absence of any official recount of the ballots of that county, that Mr. Downing should be deprived of the 14 votes in Patterson Township which were not included in the official returns, by reason of the clerical error so fully explained in the testimony. It is manifest that the error in Woodville precinct, by which, if it had remained unchanged, Downing would have received 10 more votes than he was lawfully entitled to, was corrected by the canvassers very properly, and the official certificate made to conform to the exact vote which he did receive.

We are at a loss, however, to understand why the same correction was not made with regard to the palpable clerical error of 14, made by the clerk or judge who indorsed the tally sheets, as was done in the Woodville case. It certainly is within the power of this committee and Congress to make this correction, and the 14 votes should be added to Downing's total. If the objection be made that the tally sheets are the best evidence, certified copies can easily be obtained.

CASS COUNTY.

With regard to the unofficial and private account of the ballots in Cass County, it appears from the evidence of John G. Pearn, page 104, record, who was a party in the county contested election case, that he kept a tally of the ballots in 5 out of the 16 precincts, and only of ballots called off in recounting for the contest purposes, so far as the same related to vote on Congressmen. He and his assistant, Mr. Dale, were also engaged, and their attention principally centered upon the result of the recount as to the office in which Pearn was interested, and their unofficial and unauthorized tally on the Congressional vote must be taken notice of with that understanding.

As has been shown in the table quoted hereafter, the count kept by Wilson, and the count kept by Pearn, and the count kept by the contestee himself differ in their results, owing no doubt to the different circumstances under which they were made. It is fair, however, to presume that, inasmuch as the attention of the contestee and Mr. Wilson was centered upon the Congressional vote alone, their results are far more likely to approximate the truth than that of the count kept by Mr. Pearn and Mr. Dale, whose principal interest in the recount was centered upon the result of the contest to which Mr. Pearn was a party. This only serves to emphasize what we have said hereinbefore; and that is, that inasmuch as the ballots are in the condition to render them competent as evidence, and are accessible to the process of this committee, and can be laid before it in the exact condition in which they were cast, together with all "objected to" and "rejected" ballots, and the record of the action thereon taken by the judges of election, it is the manifest duty of this committee, in view of the interests which the people of the district have in the result of this contest, as well as the parties thereto and Congress itself, to require the same to be laid before it, and to make such an official examination thereof in this case as will enable the committee, and each and every member thereof, to be convinced as to the true and exact result of the election in Cass County. The following tabulated statement by precincts shows the result of the three separate recounts alluded to as compared with the official returns:

ASSISTED UNSWORN VOTERS.

There is another feature in this case, however, which we believe should be regarded by this committee as res adjudicata. We refer to the disposition to be made of votes which the testimony shows have been cast by certain questionable electors for the respective parties to this contest, and to whom assistance in the making out or marking of their ballots was rendered by the officers of election in various precincts without the statutory condition precedent to the rendition of such assistance having been complied with on the part of the voter, namely, his oath taken, showing that he was legally entitled to such assistance. The statute upon the subject is, in my judgment, mandatory, and is found in chapter 46, paragraph 311, section 14, of the statutes of Illinois, and is in these words:

"Every voter who may declare upon oath that he can not read the English language, or that by reason of any physical disability he is unable to mark his ballot, shall, upon request, be assisted in marking his ballot by two of the election officers, of different political parties, to be selected from the judges and clerks of the precincts in which they are to act, to be designated by the judges of election of each precinct at the opening of the polls."

In the great majority of the voting precincts in the district it is to be presumed this law was strictly complied with and regarded as mandatory by the judges of election, as the legal presumption that such is the case must arise from the fact that nothing is shown to the contrary. In a few of the precincts, however, in the counties of Morgan, Cass, Pike, and Greene, there were instances proved in the record in which the statute above quoted was regarded by the election officers as directory only, and voters were assisted without the declaration upon oath of the voter that he was entitled under the statute to assistance in the marking of his ballot; and it is in these instances, it has been claimed by the contestant, that such assisted voters who had cast their votes for him should be allowed to stand as cast, and their votes, which I hold were illegal, be counted for him in the aggregate of his vote.

My opinion is founded upon the law itself, as above quoted, and the decision of the supreme court of the State of Illinois and the decision of the Fifty-third Congress, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections thereof, as shown in the officially published reports, being Report No. 1741, Fifty-third Congress, third session, in the case of Steward vs. Childs, under facts analogous to those in this case and arising identically under the same statute. And also as held under an analogous statute regarding the numbering of ballots and the indorsing of initials of election judges on the back thereof, in the case of O'Neill vs. Joy, Report No. 268, Fifty-third Congress, second session. In the supreme court of the State of Illinois, in the case of Parker vs. Orr, rendered November 10, 1895, extracts from which, as reported in the Northwestern Reporter, have been set out by the contestee in his supplemental statement of claims filed with this committee since the hearing. In the full text of that opinion will be found this language concerning the provisions of this mandatory statute:

"The statute being directory and not mandatory as to the manner of voting prescribed in section 23" (which relates to the marking of the ballot) "it remains to be determined what is the proper construction in settling this question. Two objects must be kept in view, viz, the secrecy of the ballot and the intention of the voter."

And concludes its opinion in this case with the following language:

"It may properly be added that it is the duty of every voter, under this law, to ascertain fully the provisions of the statute and the directions of the secretary of state in his instructions sent out with the ballots, and that whenever, either through negligence or willfulness, he disregards that duty, he does so at the peril of losing his vote."

The above language can not be misinterpreted. The clear and explicit provisions of section 14 above quoted, as construed by the above decision in Parker vs. Orr, leave no room for doubt that the chief purpose and intent of that law is to insure to the voter by every possible safeguard the absolute secrecy of his ballot; and also as a restraint upon bribery, as, without the safeguard provided by that section, any corrupt purchase and sale of votes might be given effect and the delivery rendered certain if an unrestrained license were afforded to the claiming and rendering of assistance to a voter who had not been required to declare under oath that he was entitled under the law to receive it. This proposition is so plain that I refrain from further argument to show that its provisions are clearly of the essense and substance of the election, and necessary to carry out its clear object and intent, and that disregard of the same by the voter is done at the peril of losing his vote.

There is no doubt in my mind but that the provisions of the law above alluded to, which require that before assistance may be rendered to a voter by the election officers he shall declare upon oath that he is disqualified from marking his ballot in the manner prescribed by law, was prompted by a sound public policy, is a wise and beneficial one, and is mandatory, and that violation of the same is fatal to the reception and counting of the vote of the person thus unlawfully assisted. It remains, therefore, but to ascertain from the evidence how many of this kind of voters have cast their ballots without making the aforesaid declaration under oath and, if possible, for whom said ballots were cast, to enable us to determine and find specifically how many votes should be deducted from the total of each party to this contest on account thereof. The following table presents what I believe to be the correct statement of this class of votes, at what precinct, for whom cast, and what deductions ought to be made on account thereof.

OTHER ILLEGAL VOTES.

For the purpose of this statement, it is sufficient to say with regard to the claims and concessions of the parties to this contest, of and concerning the votes of persons in the various precincts and counties of the district, which were illegally cast on account of the disqualifications of the voters by reason of nonresidence or otherwise, that in my judgment the voluminous evidence concerning them, which has been taken by both parties to the contest, results in a showing of about an equal number of votes to be deducted from each party on this ground. I prefer, therefore, to leave the further consideration of that feature of the case to a more careful and complete analysis of the same in a report of the committee should it become necessary, and I therefore dismiss this class of testimony and the results thereof, as regards illegal voters, from further consideration at this time. I will simply state that, in my judgment, the result of the most scrutinizing analysis of the law, and the facts developed and relied upon, would fail to show any material difference in the result as affecting the majority of the sitting member.

To summarize, therefore, the facts in this statement, it will be seen that, in my opinion, this is a case in which no claim is made that the sitting member has obtained the certificate upon which he has been given the seat in this House through any fraud or illegality, or that there has been any serious irregularity upon the part of any of the election officers, nor on the part of the contestee or his partisans or friends, but that the contestant relies solely and entirely upon evidence of honest mistakes and errors in judgment, by honest men acting as election officers, who have endeavored to discharge their sworn duty in strict compliance with the law. Such errors and mistakes are, he would have us believe, sufficient in number and importance to cause this committee to set aside the accredited and veritable official returns, duly certified to the secretary of state, upon which contestee's title rests to his seat, and he asks this practically upon the following grounds:

That by an ex parte, unauthorized, unofficial, and inaccurate recount of certain ballots in Macoupin County, by which after assuming to decide judicially upon the question as to whether or not ballots judicially and officially rejected or objected to, and not counted by the sworn election officers, who in the careful and deliberate discharge of their sworn duties had decided they ought not to be counted; and of a similar superficial and partial recount made in Cass County; and by reason of a clerical error in Patterson precinct, Greene County, by which contestee was deprived of 14 votes, to which he was legally entitled and which should have been counted for him in the total result; and by reason of what would amount to a reversal of the cases decided by this and preceding Congresses, and the adjudicated construction of the laws under which the election was held by the courts of Illinois, Mr. Downing should be deprived of his seat in Congress and Mr. Rinaker be declared duly elected thereto. In the present condition of the case and with means of absolute certainty easily within our reach, I can not under a sense of my duty to the House and to the people of the district consent to such a conclusion.

Much undue stress has been laid upon the proceeding and injunction obtained by contestee which appear in the record. In order that the ballots in the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois might be preserved for inspection by this committee and Congress in this case, should it desire to make such an examination thereof, and in order that they might not be destroyed, as would have been the case in many of the counties under the operation of law, and to insure their proper preservation and safe-keeping in order that their value as evidence in this case might be preserved, the contestee secured by due legal process and upon a proper showing made to a court of competent jurisdiction, an injunction or decree, which was duly served upon the custodian of said ballots in the various counties of the district, and which in its terms, among other things, declares as follows:

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged and decreed by the court that the said defendants, as county clerks of their respective counties, and each of them, and their successors in office, and their deputies, assistants, agents, and attorneys, and each of them, be, and they are hereby, enjoined and restrained from opening the ballots cast at the election held in their respective counties on the 8th day of November, A. D. 1894, and now in the custody or possession of said defendants, as county clerks of their respective counties, or from permitting the same to be opened or recounted, or from removing or from permitting said ballots to be removed, from the place where they are now kept, until the same are ordered to be opened or recounted by a court of competent jurisdiction of the State of Illinois, or of the United States, or by the House of Representatives in Congress of the United States, after the 3d day of March, 1895."

The grounds upon which the aforesaid decree was granted, being set out in full in the copy of his bill, in the printed record of this case, at page 212, and said decree, which was rendered after a full hearing in the presence of the parties, will be found on page 214 of said record. I am of opinion that in view of the peculiar provisions of the Illinois statute, this step was not the violation of any law on the part of the contestee, and that, so far from working any hardship or from being detrimental to the interests of the contestant or the contestee in this case, as is insisted by the contestant, the proceeding provided in the only possible manner in which the same could have been provided adequately, for the preservation of the ballots for the use of this committee in this investigation, and rendered it possible for this committee to ascertain with absolute exactness the true result in said district. I am also of the opinion that any partial or incomplete examination of said ballots which might have been had during the progress of the investigation by the parties and their counsel, would have been unsatisfactory and insufficient to advise the committee or House fully, as in by far the greater number of the counties comprising the district, there has been, as developed by the record, no prima facie case of fraud or mistake made out which would have justified the examination of the ballots during the taking of the testimony.

I therefore insist that the developments of the testimony in this case render it expedient and necessary, before the contestee shall be deprived of his seat upon the floor of the House of Representatives in this Congress, that we should avail ourselves of the opportunity afforded us, and should sustain the motion made by his counsel at the hearing of this cause, that this committee, upon proper directions from the House, by its own proper process should require the production of the ballots, either of the entire Congressional district and of each county and precinct therein or at least of the counties of Cass, Greene, and Macoupin, against the accuracy of the returns of which there is some testimony found in the record.

Congress has clothed this committee with abundant power, I believe, to take this action of its own motion and without further delay. But should it be thought otherwise the House has full power to direct this to be done.

I am firmly convinced that it is the duty of this committee to refrain from further action in this case and itself recount the ballots as aforesaid, and in the interest of the electors of the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois and in the interests of the parties to this contest and in justice to the House of Representatives that this course be taken without any further delay, and I trust that this will be done.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I think that in justice to my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE], it ought to be stated to the House that the very able report prepared by the majority of the committee was prepared and presented by him. By some error which has crept into the records of this House it would appear that the report had been prepared and presented by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS]. I do not intend, of course, to suggest for a moment that the report does not have the assent of the gentleman from New York, because I know that it does, but I want the credit for that very able report to fall where it is due.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY. I am very glad to receive the gentleman's thanks, but I do not wish to occupy much of my time receiving thanks. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I was simply going to add that it is a matter of no consequence to me, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. DANIELS. The mistake was made by the printer.

Mr. MOODY. Undoubtedly, and if anything that I have said can be construed into a reflection upon any member of the committee I desire that it shall be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker, it is a source of sincere regret to me that I have been unable to agree with the conclusions which were reached by the majority of the Republican members of the Committee on Elections; but I take it that in a matter of this kind, the decision of which will take a seat in this body from one man and give it to another, every man must be the keeper of his own conscience. I have examined this case with the utmost care and the utmost ability that I could bring to it, and the conclusion which I arrived at in the first place has been reenforced by further reflection. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if the decision of the majority of the committee is sustained by this House it will be an outrage upon the people of the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois and a stain upon the good name of the Fifty-fourth Congress. I make no imputation upon the motives of any man who may disagree with me, but I state to this House the deliberate conclusion at which I have arrived.

Mr. Speaker, I think we ought not to go much further in the consideration of this case without understanding exactly where we are. We throw aside all the minutiæ upon which we might disagree, and we come to the two main points upon which the two branches of the committee are at odds. Mr. Downing holds his seat in this Congress by a plurality of 40 votes. It is proposed to take it from him by a plurality of 30 votes. There is not a claim in the record, or made by counsel, or indulged in by any member of the committee, that from the beginning to the end of this election there was any fraudulent practice on the part of any man who had anything to do with it. It behooves the members of this House, before they reverse a plurality of 40 votes and turn it into a plurality of 30 votes, to examine with care the grounds upon which that is sought to be done.

There is one main branch of this case which has been largely discussed, and which I will restate to the House. There were about 38,000 or 39,000 votes cast in that election for Congress. A few more than 5,000 were recounted, and the errors which it is alleged were found in that recount were 39 in number in favor of the contestant, just 9 more than the plurality the report of the majority seeks to give him. It is perfectly clear, then, that unless you accept the results of the recount in the two counties—Macoupin and Cass—you can not upon this record seat the contestant. No matter what you may think about the other question—the question of assisted voters—if you decline to accept the results of that recount in those two counties, then that is an end of this case.

Now, let me say here, so that there can be no mistake about it, that the minority of this committee do not propose to settle this contest here; they propose to send it back to the committee with instructions to find the real truth, no matter what difficulties may lie in the way. I know—and I answer it now—it will be objected by and by that this delay will operate as a denial of justice. How great, Mr. Speaker, can be the detriment arising from this delay? We are approaching the closing day of this Congress. It will be of no great advantage to either of these gentlemen to occupy a seat in this hall for the few days that are left to us at this session. If a recount is had as we propose, when we come back here this contest can be determined in my opinion beyond all doubt, and the man who is honestly entitled to the seat can take it without any stain upon it or without any doubt hanging about his title.

Let us see what the recount is that it is proposed to substitute for the count of the honest election officials of the county of Macoupin. There was a recount of the vote for county treasurer of that county. That is the home county of General Rinaker, the contestant. It is there he proposes to make the gain which shall reverse the plurality shown by all the other seven counties of the district. The parties met, and they had a recount of the vote for treasurer in 36 of the 37 voting precincts of that county. The successful candidate for the office of treasurer had a plurality by the original returns of 39 votes. When the last precinct was reached the errors were so few and so balanced each other that the counsel concluded that the recount could not change the result, and that precinct was not counted. In the meantime, in the first 11 precincts of that county, an unofficial recount was made of the vote for Representative in Congress. The recount was made by representatives of General Rinaker—among others by his son, who was one of the counsel in that recount. We have never heard what the result of that recount in those 11 counties was. Nobody comes forward to tell us the result of that unofficial recount in those first 11 precincts. We may guess at the reason when we find that in the contest for treasurer those are the 11 precincts where the Democrats gained, while they lost in the precincts selected to be brought forward in this House to take the seat from the man who now holds it.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Would the gentleman consider it at all seemly or proper for counsel in a case to come forward and testify, especially where the client was his own father?

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I must let Mr. Thomas Rinaker, the son, settle that question for himself. He did come forward to testify in this case. He was the first counsel who did so; and he testified to this very recount in which he acted as counsel. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] can not have forgotten that circumstance.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Not so far as the result reported by Murphy is concerned, according to my recollection.

Mr. MOODY. "Not so far as the result reported by Murphy is considered." He could not testify to what Murphy knew; but he testified about other matters concerning that recount, which he deemed material to aid his father in this contest; and I say that when he withheld the information which he had with respect to the eleven counties where if there was to be a gain for the Democratic candidate that gain would be found, there is a significance in the matter which can not be denied.

Now, after that recount had gone on for two or three days Mr. Murphy steps in and takes part in it; and you must accept Mr. Murphy's recount as correct and reject the sworn returns or else you must leave Mr. Downing in his seat.

Before I come to the details of the recount I want to describe to this House the method in which it was conducted. There was a table 5 feet long and 2½ feet wide. Upon one end of the table sat the county judge, under whose direction the recount was proceeding. By the side of him were two tellers. On the two sides of the table sat the four counsel for the parties to the recount. Upon the other end of the table sat the deputy county clerk, Waggoner, who produced and opened the ballots which were to be recounted for the office of treasurer. Behind Waggoner, who was opening these ballots, laying them upon the table and announcing from each ballot whether the vote was for one or the other of the candidates for treasurer, sat on a high stool Mr. Murphy, the important witness in this case. All the information, gentlemen, which Mr. Murphy had about the true state of the ballot in that county he received while sitting on that high stool in the position I have named.

I have here one of the original ballots. [Exhibiting ballot.] Those ballots contained the names of 50 candidates. The county clerk took those ballots. He first turned them over and looked for any marks on the back that might invalidate them; then he uttered the name "Gleason," or whatever else may have been the name of the candidate for treasurer; passed the ballot to counsel for verification, and it was passed about the table. All the opportunity which Murphy had to ascertain the truth of the matter was while the ballot was in Waggoner's hands and before it was passed to anybody else. These ballots were counted, according to the testimony of the county judge, at a rate of not less than 6 per minute, and in some cases as high as 16 per minute. They regulated the speed with which the ballots were handled, not to conform to the convenience of Mr. Murphy, who was a spectator, but for the convenience of the count by the officers who were engaged in that business.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask him if during that count an announcement was made of the votes for Congressman?

Mr. MOODY. No; there was no such announcement.

These proceedings were not exactly secret, because it appeared to be generally known that Mr. Murphy was present and was making a count of the Congressional vote, yet he was not recognized as a party to the official count or as being there according to law. Mr. Murphy was a spectator, like many others who were present.

Mr. HOPKINS. But all know that he was keeping a count.

Mr. MOODY. I have already said that such was the case.

Mr. HOPKINS. And when the count was slow, at the rate of six ballots a minute, it was these ballots where there were many changes; that is to say, they were not the straight ballots?

Mr. MOODY. On the contrary, the sixteen-a-minute ballots were put all together as straight ballots, and were counted faster.

Mr. HOPKINS. But the rapidly counted ballots were the straight party ballots; that is what I mean.

Mr. MOODY. Unquestionably the gentleman is correct in that.

Now, remember, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Murphy was unquestionably in the employ of General Rinaker, which fact appears in the testimony, and which is not disputed. It is shown that he was employed at the instance of Thomas Rinaker, the contestant's son and counsel. There was no concealment about it and no dispute of the facts. Nobody represented the other side there. Mr. Murphy thought he could keep the count accurately under the circumstances I have tried to recite to you——

Mr. HOPKINS. If it will not interrupt the gentleman——

Mr. MOODY. I welcome interruptions, especially interruptions that I know are intended only to elucidate facts in the case.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it not true that Bell and Anderson were attorneys in the case also for the contestee? Were they not sitting at the table looking at the ballots as the contestee's counsel?

Mr. MOODY. It does not appear whether they were attorneys for Downing or not. There is nothing in the record to indicate that fact.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think that is admitted.

Mr. MOODY. Whether they were or not, at that time the evidence does not disclose, but there is no evidence that they kept count upon the votes for Congressman.

Now, Mr. Murphy thought he could keep the count accurately, and Mr. Waggoner, whose back was turned to Murphy all the time, also thought Mr. Murphy could keep the count accurately; but everybody else who testified in the case and give their opinion of the value of Mr. Murphy's count say that it would not be possible to keep an accurate count under the circumstances.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not rely too much on the opinion of people on such subjects. Too much depends on the differences in men; and Mr. Murphy appears to have been an accurate man, as far as it would have been possible for a man to be accurate under the existing conditions. But I appeal to every man in this House within the sound of my voice to say if it is possible, under the circumstances, that any man could keep an account of the ballots accurately, or whether it would be possible for such a man to keep such a count more accurately than the sworn officers of the law, who had every facility afforded to them for performing their duties? Why contrast Mr. Murphy's recount with the official recount going on? He was alone, endeavoring to keep this count under difficult circumstances.

On the other hand, in the official recount there was the judge of the court to decide questions in dispute about the law; there was a teller for each party to the contest; there were counsel present on each side of the controversy, and the deputy county clerk, acting under the responsibilities of his office, who counted out the ballots in the presence of all of the others. The testimony shows all that, and yet with all of these precautions again and again a mistake was made. Something on the ballot escaped the scrutiny of the first man, passed the second, the third, and the fourth man, until finally it reached the last man before the error was detected. So that, as a matter of fact, the judgment and the eyesight of one man was corrected by another and another and another still, each one verifying the count of his predecessor, until the result of the final count was as accurate as such a proceeding could possibly be.

Mr. HENDERSON. After the ballots had gone the rounds of those whose duty it was to inspect them, were they put in a pile near where Mr. Murphy sat?

Mr. MOODY. They were not; they were folded and strung again. Mr. Murphy had no opportunity—and if I am wrong about it I should be glad to be corrected——

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I know my friend does not wish to misstate the case in the slightest degree. I should like to answer the gentleman from Iowa by saying that Mr. Waggoner, who sat at the head of the table, and by whose shoulder Mr. Murphy sat, was the deputy clerk who opened the ballots, and he, having the ballots there open before him, read the result aloud to those assembled, and then the ballots were passed around.

Mr. MOODY. I stated that, I think. If I did not, I am very much mistaken.

A MEMBER. You did state it.

Mr. HENDERSON. When this deputy clerk opened the ballot, he was doing that, I suppose, while the inspection of the last preceding ballot was being had?

Mr. MOODY. No; he took the ballot, opened it, made the announcement as soon as he inspected it, reading the name of either one candidate or the other for county treasurer, and then immediately passed it away from Mr. Murphy.

Mr. HENDERSON. And then took out another ballot and prepared to do the same thing, and hence the ballot would lie there some time—until the inspection of the next preceding one was completed by the other officers?

Mr. MOODY. I can only answer that the uncontradicted testimony shows that the ballots were counted, as the county judge said, between the extremes of 6 a minute and 16 a minute, and Mr. Murphy had what chance he could have under those circumstances.

Mr. HENDERSON. The object of my first question was to know whether at the end or the beginning there was a period of rest for the ballot, when Mr. Murphy was situated so that he could take advantage of that period of rest.

Mr. MOODY. Undoubtedly there was a period of rest, of greater or less extent, when Mr. Murphy could see the ballot. No one disputes the fact that he had some chance. Our point is that he had not a chance to be more accurate than the precinct officers themselves, who could take all the time they pleased. And let me again, at the expense of repetition, say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] that the speed with which these ballots were handled was made to conform to the recount upon treasurer and not to the requirements of the recount upon Congress. That is an extremely important matter.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. As I understand, this matter was going on in a contested election case for treasurer?

Mr. MOODY. That is true.

Mr. BRUMM. That the question as to who or who was not elected to Congress was not at issue?

Mr. MOODY. Not at all.

Mr. BRUMM. While these ballots were being counted, or being examined with reference to one contest, a gentleman by the name of Murphy was sitting where he could see those ballots; and he swears, as I understand it, that he discovered that among those ballots there were a certain number that had been declared by this investigation to be illegal, and that there were a certain number of those that had upon them the name of one or the other of the Congressional candidates. Is not that the truth?

Mr. MOODY. I understand, if the gentleman will permit me to explain in detail, that he counted every ballot that was recounted; that he looked over the shoulder of those who were counting for treasurer. He had a pad on his knee and a pencil in his hand, and he made a tally for each ballot that passed; and I do not deny——

Mr. BRUMM. That does not answer the question. The information I want is this: You say this testimony conflicts with the recount for treasurer.

Mr. MOODY. I do not. I mean to say that, as you will see later, there is a difference between the results of the two recounts, but I do not consider that very material, because General Rinaker was running ahead of his ticket, and very greatly ahead of his ticket.

Mr. BRUMM. Then there is really no conflict, and there is no denial, so far as the testimony goes to show, of what Mr. Murphy swore to?

Mr. MOODY. There is no denial and can be no denial of the fact that Mr. Murphy made that recount. We all know that he did.

Mr. BRUMM. I understood you to say that there was a conflict with the official returns.

Mr. MOODY. Oh, with the official returns made by the election officers when they made their original count.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; but here is the point I want to get at. Of course that conflicted with the official returns, because the official returns gave so many votes to one and so many to the other.

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. BRUMM. If, however, the ballots that Murphy said were illegal are in reality illegal, then that would reverse the official returns, without charging the officials with fraud or with anything more than error.

Mr. MOODY. I see what is in the gentleman's mind. The gentleman has made an error of fact in reference to the illegality, and if he will permit me to go on and speak for a few moments longer, perhaps I shall explain what is in his mind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to know whether the testimony discloses that when Mr. Murphy sat behind this man, when he found there was a mistake made in any ballot, whether he called the attention of any one to it?

Mr. MOODY. The evidence shows that he did not. He made his count entirely independent of every other human being in the world, and upon that I want to call the attention of the members of this House, as men who love justice and fair play, to what the Republican judge of that county who presided at that recount said—a man who was elected upon this very ticket at this very election, who was friendly, as everybody was and everybody is here, to General Rinaker. In answer to this question:

Would you like to undertake to have your count, made under the circumstances that Mr. Murphy made that, considered strictly accurate?

He replied:

If I was contesting an election, I should want the ballots counted a little more accurately than they were counted. Of course I should want somebody watching the other side as well.

And that answers the question of the gentleman better than I can answer it.

Mr. DANIELS. Now I ask the gentleman whether the evidence of the deputy county clerk did not show that the process when this counting was done was that the ballots were opened and laid flat on the table?

Mr. MOODY. I have so stated by illustration. If I have not so stated I desire to do so, for I do not desire to misrepresent, and if I do misrepresent I beg gentlemen to correct me. But all the ballots were, as has been suggested, spread upon the table. The announcement was made and they were passed along with the speed which I have described.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to make one further inquiry of my friend, and then I will not disturb him further.

Mr. MOODY. I yield cheerfully.

Mr. HENDERSON. And if he is going to cover the point he need not pay any attention to it.

Mr. MOODY. I will pay attention to the gentleman always.

Mr. HENDERSON. You are very kind to all of us. It seems, according to the argument, that the rights of the defendant depend upon the secondary evidence. Now, what I would like to hear is the views of the gentleman on this point. Was it within his power to get the primary evidence?

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will discuss that later in my argument, without any evasion whatever.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to see if he could get the primary evidence.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly; if it is not on the question of injunction.

Mr. CANNON. It is not, except incidentally. It is upon another point. In fact, were the attorneys of the sitting member present at this recount, one or both?

Mr. MOODY. The gentlemen who subsequently appeared in the record as attorneys, or some of the gentlemen who subsequently appeared in the record as attorneys for the contestee, and some who subsequently appeared as attorneys for the contestant, were present at this recount. They were attorneys in the recount; they were not acting for the contestee. No attorney was acting in regard to the Congressional election. Murphy was the only man who officiated.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman one or two more questions. Within a few days, as I understand from a hasty reading of the report, after this recount on the local contest the subpœna duces tecum to bring these ballots was issued by the notary public under the Federal law.

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, is it or is it not true that the sitting member had then applied to the State courts?

Mr. MOODY. Of course it is true.

Mr. CANNON. To my friend's mind, is it significant that those attorneys of the sitting member got enough information to know that they did not want these ballots counted under the Federal process?

Mr. MOODY. I do not think these attorneys appeared for the sitting member at that time. I do not think they appeared at this recount. That fact has never assumed any significance in my mind.

Now, I want to call your attention and weary your patience, perhaps, by a table which I have prepared for use in my argument, and lest I fall into the lot of my friend from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] I ask consent of the House to print this table instead of reading it, and then I shall refer to it in detail.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

The table is as follows:

Gains and losses in recounts, including "objected to" ballots.

	By Murphy's recount for Congress.		By official recount for treasurer.
	R.	D.	R.	D.
Carlinville	2, + 1
Western	+ 1	− 2		+ 1
South Otter	+ 1		+ 2	− 3
Shipman	+ 4	− 1		− 1
North Palmyra	+ 1	− 2	+ 2	− 3
Scottsville	+ 3	− 3	+ 1	− 1
Gillespie	+ 2	− 1		− 1
North Otter	+ 3	− 3
Bunker Hill	2,	+ 2	− 1	+ 2
Chesterfield	+ 1			+ 1
Polk		+ 1
Carlinville	1, + 1
Do	4,	− 1
Mount Olive	1, + 2	− 1	+ 3
Bunker Hill	3, + 2	− 1
Do	1, + 1		+ 1
Staunton	2,	− 1
Total	+ 23	− 13 net.	+ 8 net.	− 4 net.

Mr. MOODY. There were 25 precincts counted by Murphy, and in 8 of them he purports to find no change. In the other 17 precincts he finds the change indicated here upon this table. That column which I point to shows the gain for each precinct that he found for Rinaker; that [indicating] shows the loss or gain which he found for Downing, and these figures in red are corresponding losses and gains on the recount for treasurer in the same precincts.

Now, gentlemen will observe that this gain of 35 votes net in this recount of 17 precincts in the contestant's home county is made up of little odds and ends picked up in the different precincts. In only one case are there as many as 4—the precinct of Shipman. In only two precincts are there as many as 3. In most cases there are only 1 or 2. Now, I do not dispute Murphy's honesty. There is nothing in the record which permits me to do that. I do not dispute his accuracy. I have no right to do so on this testimony. But I do say that when it comes to the matter of picking up, out of 200 or 300 votes in a precinct, 1 or 2 or 3 or even 4 votes, we can not trust to that process if we seek to do justice between man and man.

I say again that these changes may have been, and undoubtedly largely were, the result of different views of the law between Murphy and the precinct officers, and who is to tell us which view was right? To illustrate this point, in the precinct of North Palmyra there is a gain of 1 for Rinaker. It is shown without contradiction that in North Palmyra Mr. Murphy said to a bystander that there was a gain of 1 on account of a ballot which was marked in this way: "This is the ballot of J. C. Hamilton," he claiming that that was a legal ballot and ought to have been counted. That testimony is not contradicted. That was the claim of the contestant in his brief. But the supreme court of Illinois since that time has decided that such a ballot can not be counted.

Now, I say that the consideration of this illustration which I have given to the House may account for the difference that there is between the official count and the recount of Murphy. And I say that, without knowing on what grounds he proceeded, we ought not to take the judgment of a man about whom we know nothing, except that he is accurate in figures and that he is honest, as against the count of men who were sworn officials under the law and against whose integrity not one word has been uttered.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman whether the very fact which he presents here so clearly, showing that these changes are but few in number in the various precincts, is not the highest evidence that could be brought here to show the accuracy and reliability of Mr. Murphy's work? In other words, if there had been a change of 6 or 8 or 10 shown in one precinct and only 1 in another, and 7 or 8 or 9 in another precinct and only 1 or 2 in still another, would not that indicate a hop-skip-and-a-jump method of counting, which could not be so accurate as the one embodied in this table?

Mr. MOODY. My colleague upon the committee appears to test the value and the accuracy of Mr. Murphy's testimony by the closeness with which it conforms to the original count. I accept that standard. [Laughter.] The original count is the thing that is ultimately authoritative in this case until, in a legal manner, some other state of facts is shown.

Mr. REEVES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. REEVES. The county judge sat at the end of his table, and was it not his duty to pass, and was he not in fact passing, upon the validity of those ballots?

Mr. MOODY. It was his duty to pass upon the validity of the ballots, but in point of fact he did not. My friend is mistaken, and I hope to convert the whole Illinois delegation before I get through if they keep on asking questions. [Laughter.] It was his duty to pass upon those questions, but wherever there was any objection made to a ballot, judgment was reserved; so the court never did pass upon these questions. Nobody under God's heavens ever passed upon them except Murphy, and what we ask is that before we take away this man's right, before we take away the rights of the people of this district, this House shall pass upon these questions.

Mr. HOPKINS. This evidence of Murphy was offered by the contestant during the forty days allowed him by law to take his testimony, was it not?

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, what prevented Mr. Downing from having the ballots counted to verify or to defeat this evidence during the forty days allowed him for the taking of testimony?

Mr. MOODY. Nothing occurs to me now.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Downing did not do it, did he?

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Downing did not do it. We want to do it now. If Mr. Downing made a mistake, do not visit it upon the people of Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. But if there was fraud, we do not want the gentleman from Massachusetts to sustain it.

Mr. MOODY. Fraud! If I did not misunderstand the gentleman's word, this is the first time that any man has alleged fraud against anybody in connection with this case, and it shows that the gentlemen who are supporting the majority report are being driven to extremities to do it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been described how the ballots have been preserved. I would like to call attention to the law, because I know that gentlemen want to follow it. The law as laid down by McCrary is this—I will not weary the House by reading very much. McCrary states the law in these words:

> The official acts of sworn officers are presumed to be honest and correct until the contrary is made to appear. It has accordingly been held that a return can not be set aside upon proof that a recount made by unauthorized persons some time after the official count has been made showed a different result from the official count. This was upon the ground that the count made by sworn officers immediately upon the close of the polls was better evidence of the true result than a count made by interested parties not sworn at a subsequent period and after the result of the official count had been made known. Such evidence comes far short of establishing either fraud or mistake in the official count.

I commend that last statement to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

He cites Gooding vs. Wilson, Forty-second Congress, in which case the report was unanimously made by a very able committee, of which Mr. McCrary himself was chairman.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Will my friend permit me another interruption?

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. The count relied on by the contestant is the count of Mr. Murphy?

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. And that contradicts the count of the election officers?

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Now, how many different election officers were there who were contradicted by Mr. Murphy?

Mr. MOODY. I think somewhere about 75. I can not tell the exact number. And I beg you to remember, gentlemen, that they are representatives of different parties.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman does not mean that the "count" is contradicted. As I understand, the question is as to the legality or illegality of certain votes.

Mr. MOODY. No; there is also a question of errors in counting. How much of the controversy in this case turns upon a difference of opinion as to the legality or illegality of votes and how much upon the question of actual errors in the count no man can tell. But I say, where the question is as to the legality or illegality of votes, this House ought not to proceed on Mr. Murphy's judgment, and where the question is upon errors in the actual count this House ought not to proceed upon Mr. Murphy's judgment, against that of 75 honest Republican and Democratic election officials of the State of Illinois.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Does the gentleman mean to say that Mr. Murphy passed upon any alleged illegal votes or upon any irregularly marked ballots?

Mr. MOODY. I mean just this: Mr. Murphy said that whenever either party to the recount on the treasurership objected to a ticket he marked it "objected to" and claimed it for Rinaker or for Downing, as the case might be, and then he put those votes into the statement which he made of the gain of 36 votes.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. That is to say, in the contest going on over the other offices he paid no attention to the objections of counsel pro and con, but treated as regular the ballots that had been returned as regular, in accordance with the returns; but such ballots as had been returned by the election officers as "rejected" or "objected to," and not counted—those he did not include in his count.

Mr. MOODY. It is not clear whether he did or not.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Certainly my statement is correct.

Mr. MOODY. The fact is not to my mind clear; and I make no such claim.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I listened to see whether any precedent could be produced for conduct of this kind. I observe that my friends on the other side have not as yet produced a precedent. There is one, Mr. Speaker; and I want to call the attention of the House to it, especially the attention of some members of the Illinois delegation. It is the case of English vs. Peelle, in the Forty-eighth Congress. If gentlemen think that that is a proper precedent to follow, they will support the majority report in this case; if they doubt it, they will vote with the minority in this case.

In the Forty-eighth Congress the Democrats had a plurality of 42 votes. Mr. Peelle held a seat from the State of Indiana by a plurality of 88 votes, and the Democrats undertook to get the seat from him. Mr. English, who had the advantage of having a very powerful and very rich father, undertook to steal that seat away from Mr. Peelle. He came here with a contest in order to do so. Among other things he had this testimony: A recount was going on in the county of Marion, in the State of Indiana, for the office of county sheriff—not county treasurer, as in this case. One of the men engaged in that recount was employed by Mr. English's father—just as Mr. Murphy was employed in this case by General Rinaker's son—to make a recount at the same time of the Congressional vote.

Now, sir, there are two things to distinguish that case from this. In the first place, the man who made the recount in that case, whose name was Brown, had two counts to attend to. On the other hand, those ballots went through his hands with just the speed that he let them go; he had all the time that he wanted. That goes the other way. I say that if there is any choice between these two recounts, as to the value to be given them as evidence, the choice is in favor of the gentleman in Indianapolis who made the recount in English vs. Peele. He was not plain Murphy, he was Hon. Austin H. Brown; and he brought the testimony of a Senator of the United States, Senator McDonald, to his good character. And he brought the testimony (it was in the record) of a judge of the supreme court of the State of Indiana, Judge Niblack, that he was a man of unquestioned character. He had been a Treasury clerk in Washington, an assistant clerk in the Sixth Auditor's Office; he had assisted (God forgive him for it) in the preparation of the report on the tariff of Robert J. Walker; he had been clerk of Marion County; he had been county commissioner, and State printer, and county auditor; he had been a member of the city council. He had every qualification in the world, besides the title of "honorable" to his name, and the certificate which he got from the gentleman to whom I have referred. And he made another convenient recount of the votes cast just about like the recount of this case. He testified that Mr. English thereby gained 99 votes, just enough to entitle him to a seat on this floor with 12 to spare.

The majority of the committee reported in favor of English, and the report came before the House. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER]—I do not know whether he is present now or not—was then chairman of the committee. To his eternal honor be it said he voted against the report of his committee and in favor of the Republican member, after a debate of unexampled bitterness and a long contest (the minority report being in favor of the Republican). Although that was a Democratic House, the minority report was substituted by a vote of 121 to 117. Then they adopted on the other side filibustering tactics. A motion to reconsider and a motion to lay on the table were made, and some gentleman on that side moved that the House adjourn, in order to secure reenforcements from outside, and carried the motion. The next day the motion to reconsider was defeated by a tie vote, 132 to 132; then a motion to reconsider was carried by 133 to 130, and a motion to recommit to the Committee on Elections was defeated by a vote of 133 to 134. Then, on reconsideration, the vote on the adoption of the minority report was defeated by 1 majority.

Now, there are gentlemen about me on this floor who can not fail to remember that contest, or the debate which took place at that time, or how they voted upon the question. It is precisely the same question that is presented in the pending case. This question of the injunction can not obscure the real question at issue here, nor can the question of how the evidence came into the case, or how the evidence was taken, or any other collateral question. It is simply a question of whether the testimony in the case is to be believed or rejected after it is in the case. It is not a question of the reception of the testimony. Nothing that was done a month later could possibly affect the weight of evidence, and in that case to which I have just referred, the whole Republican side of the House, with the minority of the Democrats, were against accepting the unofficial count, and my friend from Illinois

[Mr. CANNON], who now rises to question me, voted all the way through against accepting the last recount. I hope he will be consistent now, if it is not too much to expect consistency of any man who has served so long in Congress as my distinguished friend from Illinois. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], who sits just before me, voted against accepting the report of the committee; the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], who sits near me, voted not to accept it; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] not only voted against it, but was on the committee which reported against it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] voted against it, and I have reason to believe that he at least intends to be consistent and to make his action square to his own conscience and not to partisan ends. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] was also against it——

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit me, he is mistaken. I was not a member of that Congress.

Mr. MOODY. Then there was another gentleman of the same name.

Mr. LACEY. There was a member from Michigan of the same name.

Mr. MOODY. Well, all gentlemen of that name appear to be right in their opinions on the question of recounts. [Laughter].

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a precedent. It is for this Republican House to say whether we shall follow it. Are we enough in need of Republican votes here in this Congress to stultify every word spoken by the Republicans and every vote cast by them in a precisely similar case in the Forty-eighth Congress?

Mr. Speaker, if it were not that somebody might stretch my words into a reflection upon some one with whom I differ on this question which I do not intend, I would adopt as my own language the words spoken on that occasion by a member from Massachusetts [Mr. Long], who closed his address with this language:

Mr. Speaker, this whole case as presented in the majority report is an insult to common intelligence. If it is a joke, then it is time to end it. If not, then this House in the dignity of its own self-respect, rising above all partisanship, ought to tramp such infamy under foot. I would like nothing better than to leave it to you, Mr. Speaker; I would like to see what quiet but quick work you would make of the miserable sophistry which seeks to rob the member from Indiana of the seat which he is so justly and clearly entitled to hold on this floor.

Now I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I have a general recollection——

Mr. MOODY. Well, the gentleman had better get a special recollection.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, very well, I will. I wish to ask the gentleman, as he is familiar with the case, this question: Was there evidence taken touching the ballots in that election?

Mr. MOODY. No.

Mr. CANNON. Was any effort made to take the evidence?

Mr. MOODY. No; the Democrats complained because the Republicans did not make an effort to do it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, neither Democrats nor Republicans made an effort to get the primary evidence?

Mr. MOODY. They did not.

Mr. CANNON. They did not?

Mr. MOODY. No; and the secondary evidence was in, and the House would not believe it.

Mr. CANNON. This was mere secondary evidence, then, that was acted upon, with no effort having been made to get the primary evidence?

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. I want to know that as a fact.

Mr. MOODY. Let me answer. The words "secondary evidence" were not used in the debate in that case from beginning to end, according to my memory. The evidence was in the case, just as the evidence is in this case before you here to-day. The only thing the Republicans said was, "We will not believe it. We will not take that evidence of an unofficial recount against the sworn return of the precinct officer." And that is what we do here.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. But let me ask the gentleman this further question, if he claims now that these two cases are upon all fours.

Mr. MOODY. Oh, no two cases, Mr. Speaker, are upon all fours——

Mr. CANNON. But in principle?

Mr. MOODY. In principle I do say so, according to my conscience.

Mr. CANNON. One further question now. I want to ask my friend if he parades this case here, in the exhortation to myself and others, as an appeal to the Democrats who are in this Congress who were in that Congress, who voted to unseat Mr. Peele, to vote consistently?

Mr. MOODY. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker; I do not do anything of that kind. I want this side of the House to be better than the Democrats. That is the reason I belong to the Republican party. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I approach the question of the injunction. Let there be no mistake about this. I am not going to undertake to announce any decision upon the question as to whether that injunction was well founded or not as a matter of law——

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Before the gentleman proceeds to that branch of the case I should like to ask him if the testimony of Mr. Murphy is all the testimony there is as to the recount?

Mr. MOODY. Absolutely all, except that in one other county there was a gain of 4 votes, upon the same sort of testimony by another man, which testimony was contradicted, by the way, but we do not make any point about that. There was a gain of 4 votes in Cass County, but that gain of 4 votes depended upon the testimony of one man, whose testimony was contradicted. The gain of 35 votes in Macoupin County, which is conclusive in this case, depends absolutely and solely upon the testimony of Murphy. The only possible corroboration is the fact that Waggoner, who sat with his back to Murphy all the time, gave it as his opinion that Murphy could count accurately. That is all there is in the case.

Now I want to come to the question of this injunction. I believe every lawyer in this House will agree with me that the question of the injunction is not free from difficulty. That is all I say, that it is not free from difficulty. It is by no means sure how that question would be decided if it came to the Supreme Court of the United States. Let us see what it was. It was an injunction against opening these ballots except by Congress or by a court of record of the State of Illinois or by a judge of a United States court.

Now, I agree that we will eliminate the State court, for reasons that I have already stated to the House; but the statute under which contests are tried confers jurisdiction upon a judge of the United States court to issue his subpœna and take the evidence in this case, and there is no question about it. Gentlemen say it did not belong to the jurisdiction before this act of Congress was passed. That is true; but all jurisdiction, if I am not mistaken, in the courts of the United States depends upon some statutory enactment. It is given by one statute or by another statute; and by this statute under which contests are tried the courts of the United States have the power to issue a subpœna and take the evidence. Now, this injunction was issued upon the 17th day of January——

Mr. HOPKINS. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him, under the statute the district judge must live in the district?

Mr. MOODY. Yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. HOPKINS. And he has no more power than a notary public for that purpose?

Mr. MOODY. No; I think not. I think the jurisdiction is limited by the statute itself. I think the statement of the gentleman is correct; but we know that there is a difference——

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow a question? Is this jurisdiction conferred upon the court or upon the judge?

Mr. MOODY. Upon the judge.

Mr. HEPBURN. Who might be sitting as an officer taking the testimony in the case?

Mr. MOODY. It is conferred upon any judge of a United States court who resides in the district.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; but would he not have to be sitting as a notary public would?

Mr. MOODY. Oh, yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Or as that officer would who was taking the testimony in this particular case?

Mr. MOODY. Oh, yes; certainly he would.

Mr. HEPBURN. And if he was not selected for that purpose, then he would have no power whatever.

Mr. MOODY. The jurisdiction is invoked by act of the party.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is there any further jurisdiction or authority reposed in the judge of a circuit court under the Federal statutes than there is in a notary public that may be selected?

Mr. MOODY. No; not as I understand it.

Now I will talk about the effect of the injunction, which is claimed to be a suppression of the evidence in this case. I say that if it held these ballots until Congress met, it is a perversion of terms to speak of it as a "suppression of evidence." "A preservation of evidence"—"a suppression of evidence." But the injunction expressly exempts the United States courts. The injunction was had on the 19th of January, and of the forty days allowed to the contestant for taking evidence only three days had passed away. He could have had one day, or ten days, or a dozen days if necessary, to go to a judge of the United States court to have escaped the terms of this injunction. He could have had his subpœna issued from the court, and there would not have been any conflict between the United States courts and the courts of Illinois; and he could have taken testimony if he wanted to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I take issue with the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY. My friend can do that. I am stating my position. The real fact was that they thought they had maneuvered Mr. Downing into a corner, so that they could get this court of highest jurisdiction to accept that recount of Murphy's.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. You spoke about the injunction conferring power upon the United States courts.

Mr. MOODY. I did not say any such absurd thing as that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Did not you read the injunction, and argue that it was competent to have these ballots counted by the United States court and by authority of this Congress?

Mr. MOODY. That is true.

Mr. HOPKINS. I say to the gentleman that the United States has no jurisdiction in these matters aside from the very counting of the ballots which comes under its authority the same as the notary public.

Mr. MOODY. The United States courts do have the fullest authority that any court can have in the performance of its duties in the authority to take evidence, which the statutes gives them.

Mr. HOPKINS. What authority has the United States court to determine a contested election case?

Mr. MOODY. The United States court has just the same authority as the notary public had, no more and no less—the authority conferred by the statute.

Mr. HOPKINS. Simply acting under this authority that is given to the notary public to take evidence.

Mr. MOODY. Oh, no; acting under the authority given by statute. Just let my friend look at the old cases when we had the Federal election laws. Jurisdiction was conferred upon the United States courts by statute, and they could act anywhere upon the subject-matter under statutory authority. Under the authority conferred upon the circuit and district judges of the courts of the United States there is no power given to determine contested election cases. The only power given is the power of a judge who resides in the district to take the evidence. Nobody has power to decide an election case except the House of Representatives; and all I ask is that the members of the House, who are listening to me to an extent which I deeply appreciate, will act upon this question upon their individual responsibility and according to their consciences.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. The language of the injunction is as follows:

> Until the same is ordered to be opened and recounted by a court of competent jurisdiction of the State of Illinois, or of the United States, or by the House of Representatives in Congress of the United States after the 3d day of March, A. D. 1895.

The question I want to ask is this: Supposing that a judge of the Federal court had been selected as an officer to take this testimony, does the gentleman contend that that court would be a court of competent jurisdiction of the United States, such as referred to in this language of the injunction?

Mr. MOODY. That certainly, Mr. Speaker, was my understanding.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then there is no distinction in the mind of the gentleman between a court of competent jurisdiction of the United States and a judge of the United States in a Federal court taking depositions?

Mr. MOODY. Oh, yes; there is a distinction. There is a distinction in the duties between the judge trying a case in equity and trying a case under an indictment, or between the differing jurisdictions that statutes repose in that judge.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman think that the court issuing this injunction, when it used that language, then contemplated a district judge, we will say, taking depositions in an election case?

Mr. MOODY. I am not in the confidence of the court in Illinois, and I can not say.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is scarcely fair in answering in that way.

Mr. MOODY. I do not intend to be unfair. I stated my belief that it would have been possible for the contestant to have gone to the United States court and continued taking testimony there. I may be wrong. But that is not a vital part of the case.

Mr. HEPBURN. But could he have done it under the injunction?

Mr. MOODY. Yes, sir; under the injunction. I think the injunction would not have prevented him. In respect of any subject-matter, a court is a court of competent jurisdiction which has jurisdiction of that particular matter.

Mr. BRUMM. I wish to ask whether under that jurisdiction the judge of the district court would have had power to enforce the production of the ballot box for the purpose of investigation?

Mr. MOODY. Oh, yes; I think so. My position is that he would have had.

Mr. BRUMM. What process do you think he would have pursued?

Mr. MOODY. His subœpna. It would have been yielded to.

Mr. BRUMM. Suppose that the clerk had refused to comply with the subpœna?

Mr. MOODY. My point is that he would not. My point is that the injunction excepts a subpœna issuing from a judge of a court of the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman has spoken of the right of the contestant to go into the United States court. I want to ask him whether, as a matter of fact, the record does not show that there is no United States judge living in that district?

Mr. MOODY. I can not tell.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the record show that fact?

Mr. MOODY. If it does, it has escaped my attention.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am informed that the record shows there is no judge living in that district.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman may be correct in his information.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then, assuming that to be correct, the contestant could not under the law go into the United States court, could he?

Mr. MOODY. Well, if he could not, he could not, of course. These questions of law can not be determined by the accidental residence of a judge in one place or another. We are determining questions of law.

Mr. HOPKINS. But whether the legal right which the gentleman claims to exist could be exercised depends upon that matter of fact entirely.

Mr. BRUMM (to Mr. MOODY). Would not the notary public have had the same jurisdiction which the judge would have had?

Mr. MOODY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BRUMM. So that the question as to whether the judge lived in the district is not material.

Mr. MOODY. Of course not.

Mr. LACEY. Is it not the fact that the injunction simply copies the language of the statute of Illinois?

Mr. MOODY. That is true.

Mr. LACEY. The injunction uses the identical language of the statute; and if there was any violation of the proprieties of the occasion, it arose from simply copying the statute.

Mr. MOODY. This leads me to ask this House to consider this question—a question of constitutional law as to the relative rights of the States and the United States. What is the provision of the Constitution with reference to this subject? I read from Article I, section 4:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Now, there is no question that under the Constitution of the United States the State of Illinois has the right to regulate its own elections; to determine whether voters shall vote viva voce, by open or secret ballot; whether the ballot shall be destroyed as soon as it is cast and counted or whether it shall be preserved for one month or six months; whether it shall be preserved for a recount or not. All that is within the control of the legislature of Illinois under the Constitution of the United States. Do gentlemen forget that we had an elaborate system of Federal election laws which has all been swept from the statute book? Under that system of Federal laws the case of Ex parte Siebold arose, which is quoted here—a case which decides nothing material to this case except what I will read. Mr. Justice Bradley, on page 388, said:

> The State laws, which Congress has seen no occasion to alter, but which it allows to stand, are in effect adopted by Congress.

What, then, is the law of the State of Illinois which Congress has not seen fit to alter? The law of that State is this:

> In all cases of contested elections the parties contesting the same shall have the right to have the package of ballots cast at such election opened, and to have all errors of the judges in counting or refusing to count any ballot corrected by the court or body trying such contest, but such ballots shall be opened only in open court, or in open session of such body, and in the presence of the officer having the custody thereof.

Now, the question is whether the State of Illinois had not the right to say to Congress, "You may look to these ballots; but when you look to them you must look to them under conditions which we under the constitution prescribe in our laws until Congress sees fit to alter them."

Why, Mr. Speaker, the State of Illinois had 46 candidates on these very ballots for State officers in this election. It might well—and we can see the reason for the objection—it might well object to having these ballots taken out of the custody of the proper officer and put into the possession of some notary public or other officials for the purpose of making a recount. But until Congress makes it clear that it intends to override any provision concerning the preservation of ballots which the State chooses to make, the man who acts on that view is not to be treated as a criminal, and have his rights taken away from him because it is claimed that he made a mistake on a mere question of law.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then if the tatute is plain that these ballots can not be taken from the officers in whose custody they now are, would the committee, as suggested by the gentleman, have any right to make a recount or to examine them in any way?

Mr. MOODY. Unquestionably they would.

Mr. HOPKINS. How would that be possible, if they can only be recounted according to the provisions of the statute of the State of Illinois, which does not provide for the recount in the manner suggested by the gentleman? In other words, the committee does not meet the requirements of the statute of the State.

Mr. MOODY. This meets the requirements of that injunction, which is enough for the present consideration of the case.

Mr. HOPKINS. But it does not meet the point the gentleman makes himself.

Mr. CONNOLLY. And it does not meet the requirements of the injunction, either, that required it to be in open session.

Mr. HOPKINS. Your argument, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit me, would lead to the conclusion that these ballots can not be opened at all.

Mr. MOODY. The terms of the injunction are until some order be taken by the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDERSON. And a committee would have to be sent out for the purpose of making the examination?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly; but, gentlemen, do not let that be an obstacle in the pathway of justice.

Mr. HOPKINS. But, as I understand your point, it is that the statute of the State of Illinois is supreme, and the statute of the State of Illinois does not provide for such a count at all.

Mr. MOODY. I am not asserting that the statutes of the State of Illinois are supreme. I am asserting that the question is so doubtful that any man who acts honestly, under the advice of counsel, and procures an injunction from a court of competent jurisdiction, ought not to be treated like a criminal, and ought not to be forbidden to inquire into the true state of a controversy with a view to determining exactly what his rights are under it.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Will the gentleman not admit that the Federal statute, where it speaks plainly upon the right of a contestant and contestee to have all of the papers relating to the election produced, is supreme over the law of the State?

Mr. MOODY. Well, that is a question of construction. The only question here is whether there is a conflict or not. Where there is a conflict—a well-defined conflict—the statute of the United States is undoubtedly supreme. But I can not stop to answer questions about the plain language and powers that arise under the Constitution of the United States, or the authority which is given to Congress by the Constitution.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Then will the gentleman please explain to the House why, if the Federal law is supreme, the injunction is to be excused?

Mr. MOODY. Well, if I have not made myself plain to the gentleman from Illinois I certainly can not hope to do so by continuing this controversy. I can not pursue this branch of the subject further. I do not wish to use up too much of the time of the House. I might state the position, however, by a familiar illustration from criminal law: A man takes a piece of property without right, but under a claim of right; the law will not convict him as a thief.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. But will not the gentleman recognize the difference——

Mr. MOODY. My friend must excuse me. I decline to yield further.

I am going to call the attention of the House, because it is an essential element in this case, to the assisted vote. It is a material point, because you have got to take Murphy's count and also retain the assisted votes to unseat Downing.

The Illinois statute upon the subject has been read. I will not undertake to read it again. It is not necessary. We say it is mandatory according to every authority that can be produced. The gentlemen on the other side will not, I venture to assert, show authorities to the contrary. They will confine themselves to assailing the authorities that I produce, but will give none in support of their own position. This question could not have arisen except under the Australian-ballot system, which has been adopted in the State of Illinois. It was raised first in a case that originated in Michigan. The court there decided the precise question at issue. The statute there is substantially similar to that of the State of Illinois. Any attempts to distinguish it do not reach the substance. The Michigan court held that the ballot of an assisted voter, who did not take the oath as to his disability, ought to be rejected. The precise question was decided unanimously by the supreme court of Minnesota. The question was before this House in the last Congress, and was decided by a Democratic House in favor of a Republican. There are three authorities upon that question. Some reason is given why each one of them should not be accepted by the House but nothing is substituted in their place.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] says that the decision of the committee in the last Congress was not a carefully considered one, and that there is not anything to show that the minority did not dissent from that conclusion. Why, there is something to show. The gentleman from New York is here himself. If he dissented from it, I invite him to say so now. The gentleman from Massachusetts, my colleague [Mr. MCCALL], who is chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 3, and who joined in that decision, did not dissent from it. If there was any dissent, I call on him to state it now.

I say in all justice and fairness that we ought not to reverse the decision of the last Congress in this case.

Now, we wrote this report and submitted it to the House on the 28th day of April. On that day, without our knowledge, this question received a solution by the supreme court of the State of Kentucky. It is not in the report, but I want to call the attention of gentlemen to it. I have it here; it was handed down the very day we filed this report.

Remember, Michigan has decided it as we claim. Minnesota has decided it as we claim. The Congress of the United States has decided it as we claim, and no other court or tribunal on the face of the earth, to my knowledge, has decided it otherwise. On the day that we filed this report the supreme court of Kentucky, upon a statute that can not be distinguished from the one under discussion by any fair use of words, handed down this decision. The section of the Kentucky statute is as follows:

SEC. 1475. Illiterate, blind, and disabled persons; penalty for false declaration.—Any elector who declares on oath that, by reason of inability to read the English language, he is unable to mark his ballot may declare his choice of candidates or party ticket to the clerk, who, in the presence of the judges, sheriff, and challengers, and the elector, shall, with his pencil, mark a dot in the appropriate place for the cross mark to indicate the choice of the elector. The clerk shall then fold and deliver the ballot to the elector, and instruct him to retire to the booth and there mark his ballot by making a cross mark either in the squares showing dots or any other squares he may desire. In all other respects he shall vote as is required of other electors. In case any person applying to vote is blind, and shall so declare on oath, the clerk shall be allowed to mark his ballot for him in the presence of the other officers of election and the challengers allowed by law; or in case any person shall be so physically disabled as to be unable to mark his ballot, and shall so declare on oath, the clerk shall have the right to mark his ballot, as in the case of a blind person applying to vote. Anyone making a false declaration under this provision of this section shall, upon conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $50 and be disfranchised for a period of two years, and any clerk who shall willfully deceive any elector in marking any ballot or willfully mark the same in any other way than as requested by said elector shall be guilty of felony, and upon conviction shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than two nor more than five years.

The decision is as follows:

First. The officers of election permitted the ballots of four voters to be stamped openly on the table of the clerk of election without requiring them to state under oath any disability which prevented them from marking their own ballots, and all of these ballots were so marked as to be counted, and were counted for appellee.

Second. The clerk at that precinct accompanied 18 voters into the voting booths, and stamped or assisted those voters in stamping their ballots so that they should be counted for appellee.

Third. * * * Upon the first ground stated, we are of opinion that the court should have sustained the contention of appellant, and excluded from count the ballots which were marked openly by the clerk of the election without the statement under oath of disability required by the statute. (1475 Ky. Statute.)

In our view the statute imperatively requires that the voter shall declare his disability, on oath, before his ballot can be marked for him by the clerk, and to permit the officers to assume, either from the voter's appearance or from their own alleged personal knowledge, that he is so disabled as to be unable to mark his own ballot would be to open a door for wholesale evasion of the requirements of secrecy in the ballots. This rule may result in hardship to the individual voter in cases where the officers are neglectful of their duty in requiring the oath of disability to be made, but the requirement that the voter shall take the oath before his ballot can be marked and deposited in order that he may be punished if he make a false declaration is, in our judgment, mandatory to the voter.

The statutes are alike in substance. There is no prohibition in the Illinois statute, and there is no prohibition in the Kentucky statute against counting ballots that are voted without the voter taking this oath. In each case there is a penalty for a man who makes a false oath. It is called a "false declaration" in the Kentucky statute. It is called a "false statement" in the Illinois statute. The sections are on all fours. I commend this decision to the examination of any man who desires to do justice; and we add Kentucky to Michigan, to Minnesota, and to the House of Representatives in favor of our side of this question. When we ask what there is against it, the answer must be: Nothing, nothing, nothing!

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the counting of these ballots essential to the seating of Mr. Rinaker?

Mr. MOODY. It is absolutely essential. There is no dispute about that. All agree to it. Each question must be decided in favor of the contestant in order to enable him to take his seat.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS], for whose attainments we all have the greatest respect, says that the case of O'Neill vs. Joy was contrary to this. Why, gentlemen, the case of O'Neill vs. Joy was nothing of the kind. The case of O'Neill vs. Joy was this: The voter in that case had prepared his ballot in accordance with the statute. He had done everything under heaven that he could do, and he passed the ballot to the election officers, and they failed to put their initials upon it. He could not help that. It was not an act of his that failed. It was an act of a person over whom he had no control, and there can be no question about this. I do not know whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] wrote the report in that case or not, but whoever wrote it understood it, because in that report it is said:

> Prohibition [of depositing such ballots], it will be seen from the language of the section, is directed to the judges themselves and not to the voter. When he passed back his ballot to the judges as the ballot he intended to vote, all had been done by him which the statute required from him to have his vote deposited and counted.

The default was neither his default nor the default of anyone over whom he had any control. In the case of the voter who does not take the oath, the default is his own act. He may tender the oath. What would happen if they declined to receive it is another question. No such question arises in this case. He has the control over his own actions. He may either take the oath or not. He is presumed to know the law. If he does not know the law, I commend to him the words of the suprome court of Illinois in the late decision:

> It may properly be added that it is the duty of every voter under this law to ascertain and follow the provisions of the statute and the directions of the secretary of state in his instructions sent out with the ballots, and that whenever, through negligence or willfulness, he disregards that duty, he does so at the peril of losing his vote.

Now, I say the Illinois case which is in our report—and I want to appeal to the House for a consideration of it—goes to show, to my mind, that when this question arises before the supreme court of Illinois they will decide it in the way we contend for. They will follow the case in Michigan, they will follow the cases in Minnesota and in Kentucky. All the courts agree that the very essence of the Australian system of voting is the compulsory secrecy of the ballot, and that any construction of the statutes which tends to impair that secrecy is to be avoided. If you once allow an election officer not to take the ballot and count it without the oath of disability from the illiterate voter, the door to fraud is open, and will be entered. If you decide against our contention, you are providing a weapon for the hands of the enemies of the purity of the ballot box.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Will the gentleman point out the particular section and the language of the Illinois statute which he holds as mandatory?

Mr. MOODY. Why, it has been read a good many times. Why should I read it again?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Point out the section and state where is the mandatory language.

Mr. MOODY. I will answer the gentleman. The Illinois statute is entitled, among other things, "An act to enforce the secrecy of the ballot."

Mr. COOKE of Illinois rose.

Mr. MOODY. Let me get through. The State of Illinois has a system of voting where, in an election in cities and towns, a man has the right to write his name upon the ballot for the purpose of identification. The Australian ballot law did not give him the right to do this, nor did it deny it to him. The law was silent on the matter. The man might go into the ballot box and vote for a mayor of a town and mark his ballot so that it might be identified. As I say, the Australian ballot law was silent on that question, and he might assume that he could do the same thing under that law. But the supreme court of Illinois, although that act does not deny him the right to write his name on the ballot, and says nothing about it, has decided that if he so does he forfeits his ballot and it can not be counted—

> Because—

To use the language of the court, in substance, for it is important—

> Because it might lead to the destruction of the secrecy of the ballot, and furnish means to designing persons to evade the law as to secrecy.

That is where I find the mandatory power. The principle of that decision enforces the views I have submitted, and if you hold any other way you furnish means to destroy the secrecy of the ballot.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these courts I have referred to in these three great States arrived at their decisions independently. The court in Kentucky, which sent down an opinion on the 28th day of April, does not cite the decision in the Michigan case, and it does not cite the decision in the Minnesota case, and it does not cite the decision of this House. These three courts, reasoning upon the imperative necessity for the secrecy of the ballot, have all come to the conclusion that if a man seeks to take advantage of this provision, having some such inability to vote as shall require assistance, he must do so in accordance with the statute at the peril of losing his vote.

Mr. DANIELS. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in the Minnesota case it was stated by the court that every one of these ballots that was contested under that provision of the law of Minnesota had been sworn to. They had sworn every voter. Is not this the language: "The oath was orally administered and informally taken, and held to be a compliance of the statute of the State"?

Mr. MOODY. I know what the gentleman is aiming at. He suggests the language presented in the report is in the nature of an obiter dictum.

Mr. DANIELS. I ask you simply the question whether all the votes in controversy in that case were not sworn to personally?

Mr. MOODY. The court held that what they did amounted to an oath.

Mr. DANIELS. And that ended the controversy.

Mr. MOODY. It did not end the controversy by any means. When the question of the construction of this section of the statute came before the court of Minnesota they discussed and disposed of the whole question. Now, I suppose a court knows what it decides and what it does not decide. And when you have a syllabus prepared by the court you have something pretty near to what the court decides. I hold in my hand the report of the decision, which shows in some place here that the syllabus was prepared by the court. I can not find it.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is right. That is the rule, and the law requires it.

Mr. MOODY. Here is the syllabus of the supreme court. I find it stated here that the syllabus is by the court. I read it:

> The requirement found in section 57 of the same chapter, that an oath must be administered to an alleged illiterate or physically disabled elector before he can have the aid of another person in the marking of his ballot, held mandatory. And the elector who requests such aid must, under oath, bring himself strictly within the terms of the statute as to his inability to mark his own ballot. He can not avail himself of aid upon the ground that he usually uses glasses, but has not brought them with him.

That is what the court decided.

Mr. DANIELS. Was not that statement made after the court had decided that every one of those contested voters had been properly sworn?

Mr. MOODY. No, sir; it was made while deciding the whole question.

Mr. DANIELS. No, sir.

Mr. MOODY. I have cited to the House what the court itself said that it decided.

Mr. DANIELS. Let me read what the court said as to the extent of its decision on the subject of these votes:

> We also wish to say in this connection that the provision of the law requiring the administration of an oath to such persons as claim the right to have their ballots marked is mandatory, and must be strictly observed.

That was after they had decided the whole case and decided that these votes were properly in.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman from New York gets any comfort from the language used by the court of Minnesota and the order in which it is uttered, he is welcome to it. I have stated what was decided. I do not care whether you call it dictum or not; the court said that they decided that question.

This is an example which I commend to the attention of the House as to the manner in which these authorities will be treated by gentlemen on the other side. They will not bring anything against them. They can not bring anything against them. They will go back to old authorities under an open-ballot system, which have nothing to do with the secret-ballot system—a system which makes secrecy compulsory. They will seek to find in minute differences in the language of statutes distinction in substance. They will say that in the case of Steward vs. Childs in the last Congress the Committee on Elections did not pay enough attention to the question which they then decided. But that is all they will or can say.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to prolong this discussion further. It has been desultory, I know, on account of the interruptions which I have welcomed and of which I do not complain. The record in this case shows that the ballots were preserved down to the time of the injunction—preserved from the time they came from the hands of the election officers, who were honest election officers; that those ballots were sealed up, strung on a wire, and the wire itself sealed. The injunction of the court has held those ballots subject to the disposition of this Congress; there is no question about that. After the recount in the county which is principally in dispute, the ballots (as the testimony affirmatively shows) were restrung. They were put back into their cases; they were put into a trunk; the trunk was sealed with the seal of the county clerk; and his name written across a paper which was sealed over; the trunk was locked; the key was put in an envelope; the envelope was sealed; and the sealed envelope was put in the safe of the county clerk; and there it stays today.

I hold in my hand the certificate of every county clerk in that district. I will read only one of the certificates—the certificate of the clerk of the county which is principally in dispute—the county of Macoupin. I will read the certificate, and I wish gentlemen to observe that this officer is a Republican:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Macoupin County, ss:

I, Fred. G. Oeltjen, clerk of the county court in and for the county and State aforesaid, do hereby certify that the tickets or ballots cast at the general election of 1894, together with all the election papers pertaining to said election, in said county aforesaid, have been preserved and are now in the same condition that they were when I testified concerning them in the contested election of John I. Rinaker vs. Finis E. Downing. I further certify that I shall continue to preserve said ballots and papers of said election until the said election contest of Rinaker vs. Downing is finally determined.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of said court this 24th day of April, A. D. 1896.

[SEAL.] FRED. G. OELTJEN,
County Clerk.

Mr. LACEY. What is the date of that certificate?

Mr. MOODY. April 24, 1896.

There, Mr. Speaker, in the safes of the county clerks of that district in Illinois lies the real truth in this controversy. We can have it if we want it. We can go there and get it. The minority of the committee recommend that we shall go there and find out the truth between these men—the truth that concerns the rights of the people who chose one or the other as their Representative here. It is our duty before God to do this, and not to take away this man's seat upon the record that is in the case before us. You have the power to do it. You have the might, but not the right. Before I would hold up my hand to take away this man's seat upon this testimony I would let it wither and fall to the ground. Before I would let my tongue utter the words that should take his seat from him I would let it rot and drop from between my teeth. The gentleman from Illinois smiles at my earnestness. He has the power, as others have, to do this. We have the majority to do it. But if we do it we shall only add one more to that long list of unjust and partisan decisions which deface the history of Congress. I trust that this Congress will not bring that disgrace upon itself in these closing days of its sitting. [Applause.]

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have not the physical strength at the present time to continue upon my feet to answer in detail all that has been said by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. I regret exceedingly to be compelled to say that during the last three weeks I have been ill most of the time, and that I am not able to continue the discussion of this case with that vigor and comprehensiveness of treatment which I would like to bestow upon it. But I believe that the nature of the case is such, and that the record which has been made is so clear upon the questions at issue, that it will not require any considerable time on my part to make the statement which it is my duty to make.

I need not say that I appreciate the solemn sense of responsibility which has been expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts as he approaches and contemplates the proposition or the duty of expelling from this floor one of our associates. There is no legislative duty which I could be brought to perform which would be more distasteful than that of serving upon an elections committee. The duty is an invidious one, and one from which a frank and generous mind naturally shrinks. But there is a law to be observed and a duty to be performed; and as members of this august assembly we may not shrink from the duty, nor may we disobey the law.

The questions in this case are: What is the law? What are the issues of fact which arise upon the record? And what is the conclusion to which we should come as conscientious, fairminded men, in the performance of the high duty which has been intrusted to us under the Constitution of the United States of determining who shall sit here to participate in making the laws for a great people?

I return with the greatest pleasure the compliment which my friend from Massachusetts was kind enough to bestow upon me, by saying that which is far more to his honor than any poor merit I have displayed in this case. The report which he prepared on behalf of the minority in this case displays a breadth of candor, a clearness of judgment, and a fairness of conclusion upon many propositions which have troubled this committee for many long months, and upon which points a minority report, if it had been prepared in any captious disposition or form, would have thrown an obscurity upon the consideration of the questions now before this House, and would have made it much more difficult for us to have come to a fair and impartial decision of the case. I refer to the entire elimination from the consideration of the House of all questions which relate to the irregularly marked ballots, of which there were in this case nearly 60.

I refer further to the elimination from the consideration by this body of all questions pertaining to the alleged illegal voters, some 57 to 60 in number. Upon those two branches of the case members of the committee, especially of the subcommittee, were required to spend a large amount of time, a very great amount of labor, and a very considerable amount of patient investigation. By the candor of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has drawn the minority report in this case, all those questions and some others, too, are happily removed and eliminated entirely from our consideration. They need not bother or worry us at all in our attempt to reach the real merits of this controversy.

The manner in which the minority report is drawn, the creditable position taken by the minority in this respect, as I assume and maintain, leaves only two questions in the case upon which there may exist some doubt in the minds of members of this House who sit here as the judges to determine finally the right to the seat which is here in controversy. Those two questions I will state in their inverse order. First, there is the question as to the assisted voters—those voters who were in the various precincts of the Congressional district, before casting their votes, assisted by the judges of the elections in marking their ballots without having first taken the oath prescribed by the statute setting forth that they needed or were entitled to have such assistance. Quite a large number of such voters voted without having taken that oath prior to being assisted by the various judges in the different precincts.

I merely state that question. The other great question in the case is that which arises from the fact that after it had been discovered in two of the counties of this district that large errors had been made in the counts by the regular officers of elections the contestee in this case, instead of allowing the law to take its course as prescribed by the Federal statute, which required and allowed the ballots to be produced before a notary public, to be there introduced in evidence and counted, went into one of the State circuit courts in one of the eight counties in the district and there filed a bill asking for an injunction to prevent such production of the ballots and such recount from being had. Those are the two great leading questions in this case, and all other questions are so far eliminated or dwarfed into insignificance that they amount to nothing in comparison with the determination of those two points.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that there is, or was, in this case another large question of vital importance to the final conclusion by this body upon the merits of the controversy. That question arose from the fact that the Australian-ballot law of Illinois, adopted in 1891, provided by a clearly mandatory section that the ballots should be printed with a heading or party appellation at the top of each party ticket in letters of a specific size. The law required that that heading should consist of letters at least one-fourth of an inch in height; and by a clearly mandatory provision it was declared that none but ballots prepared in accordance with the provisions of the act should be received or counted.

It appears from the evidence in this case that in two of the counties in that district the ballots were printed and furnished to the electors in disregard of that provision. Instead of one of the party appellations or headings being in letters one-quarter of an inch in height, the word "Independent" in the phrase "Independent Republican" was printed upon the ballot in letters only one-eighth of an inch in height—a clear infraction of the language of the statute.

It was claimed on the part of the contestant that if the committee or the House should hold that the law of Illinois with reference to the assisted voters was and is mandatory, though no words of the statute are mandatory on that point, that then the clearly mandatory language of the statute with reference to the printing of the ballots with letters of a certain size should receive full force and effect, the result of which would be that all of the ballots in Cass and Pike counties would be thrown out, whereby the sitting member would lose 280 of the plurality returned in his favor upon the face of the returns. But the majority of the committee, of which majority I have the honor to be a member, were not able to find anywhere in the reports of the supreme court of the State of Illinois any decision which would warrant them, notwithstanding the apparently clear mandatory provision of the statute in this respect, in casting out and rejecting entirely the votes of the two counties of Pike and Cass in this Congressional district. The law is too well settled in Illinois on the question of mandatory and directory provisions of election statutes to allow the majority of the committee to adopt such a narrow construction of the provision as to the printing of the ballots as would cast out all the votes of Pike and Cass counties, and thus disfranchise all of such voters.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these, then, are three great points at issue, the question as to the injunction, the question as to the assisted voters—those who voted without having taken the oath provided for by the statute—and the question as to the throwing out of the votes of Pike and Cass counties. And in this connection let me say that the gentleman from Massachusetts, in the report signed by the minority of the committee, has been exceedingly candid in every other respect, except in regard to these two points to which I am now about to refer. Every text writer, every decision of the courts passing upon statutes which are to be strictly construed, and upon those which are held not to be essential to the validity of the election, classifies the different provisions of statutes of that nature into those which are mandatory, as the law terms it, and those which are merely directory. The mandatory provision by no means must be omitted, but must be in every respect fulfilled and performed. The directory provisions, however, are not essential to the election. They do not go to the vital question of the legality of the election, and are construed to be mere directions to the officers who are in control of the election, and may be passed over and held not necessarily to be such as would vitiate or invalidate an election in the event that they are passed over.

I have looked carefully, Mr. Speaker, through the report by the minority of the committee in this case, and I have not been able anywhere to discover a single word in that report which classifies the Illinois statute in question either as a mandatory provision or as a merely directory one. I do not know but that gentlemen felt themselves deeply embarrassed when they approached that question, because if they held the statute with reference to the assisted voters to be mandatory, how could they escape from holding the provisions of the statute with reference to the printing of the ballots and the size of the heading upon them, to be mandatory? And yet see to what a conclusion it would lead them at once if they adopted that latter construction. See what a difference it would make in their case. We would not then need to go through all the trouble and labor involved in the consideration of all the minor questions at issue in the case. The contestant would have a plurality of 280 over and above all question should a strictly mandatory construction be placed on the provision of the Illinois statute with reference to the size of the letters to be used in printing the party appellations at the top of the ballots.

Each one of the accepted writers on the law of elections has devoted a great deal of care, and made extensive citations of authorities upon this very question of mandatory and directory provisions of statutes. I will refer to Paine on Elections, sections 497, 498, and 600, and to McCrary on Elections, sections 114, 126, 127, and 200. One of the best definitions as to the distinction which has been always made in these classes of statutes, as between directory and mandatory provisions found in the various State statutes, I find in the sixth volume of the American and English Encyclopedia of Law, page 325. It is very brief, very instructive, very clear, and bears so directly on the pending issue in this case that I will read it for the information of the House:

1. Directory and mandatory provisions.—Constitutional and statutory provisions for the conduct of elections are either mandatory or directory, and a violation of mandatory provisions will avoid the election, without regard to the motive of the persons guilty of the violation, and without any inquiry into the effect upon the result of the election; but in case of directory provisions the election will not be set aside, unless the disregard of the provisions has been such as to show a fraudulent intent, or uncertainty has been produced in the result of the election. When the election is fair and honest, courts will not disfranchise the voters, unless compelled to do so by the peremptory requirements of the law.

Directory provisions are such as are not of the essence of the election, but are enacted as a guide to the officers of the elections. As to what requirements are mandatory and what merely directory, the cases are not all in agreement, and it may be difficult in some cases to determine from the authorities into which class a provision falls; but it may be said that the tendency of the courts, and also of legislative bodies, is not to hold a provision mandatory unless it is clearly of such a character that its violation will tend to prevent a correct determination of the result of the election, unless it is declared in the law that its violation shall render the election void. This is true even if the language is prohibitory as to the officers, or even if its violation may subject the offending officer to penal liability. (Cases cited, note 2.)

2. Thus, in the case of Daly vs. Petroff (10 Phila., 389), it was said, the power to throw out the returns from a precinct is one which a court should only exercise as a last resort and only under circumstances which demonstrate that the disregard of the law has been so fundamental and continuous that it is impossible to determine what votes were lawful and what unlawful or arrive at any certain result, or unless the whole proceedings are shown, either by the face of the papers or aliunde, to be so tarnished by the fraudulent or criminally negligent conduct of the officers as to be altogether unreliable. (Barber, Re, 10 Phila., 579.)

Courts will not set aside an election unless it is clearly illegal, but will give effect to it if possible. (State vs. Board of Freeholders, 35 N. J. L., 299; Territory vs. Mohave County (Ariz.), 12 Pac. Rep., 730; Fowler vs. State (Tex.), 3 S. W. Rep., 255; Tarbox vs. Sughrue, 96 Kans., 225——

Mr. CANNON. Will it interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question just there?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Not at all.

Mr. CANNON. I hold in my hand a copy of the Illinois statutes. Let me read a line or two from it, speaking of the Australian ballot:

The party appellation or title shall be printed in capital letters not less than one-fourth of an inch in height.

Then, further:

And none but ballots provided in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be counted.

Now, I also see from the reports and the evidence that in two counties in Illinois in this district that law was not complied with; but instead of being in quarter-inch type, it was in eighth-inch type, and therefore, under the express provision of the law, it could not be counted if that provision of the law is mandatory. Now, if those two counties were rejected, the report and the evidence show that the contestant would be elected by 280 votes, without reference to any of these other questions.

Now, I have followed the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] about assisted voters. Under his contention, and under the decision of the Minnesota court (and I understand under the decision of the New York court of appeals), this same law would elect the contestant by 280 votes.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Unquestionably so; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will bear with me a moment while I call his attention to the fact that the supreme court of Illinois has also passed upon such questions, and has often held that it will not lay its hand upon the ballots of the voters and disfranchise them, except where it appears that some fraudulent result was intended, or followed from the allowing of the vote, as against some such statute. I could quote from the decision of the supreme court of the State of Illinois in Clark vs. Robinson made as long ago as the 88th Illinois, page 500. The court quoted a prior section of our election law which expressly provided as follows:

No vote shall be received at any State election in this State if the name of the person offering to vote be not on the said register * * * unless the person offering to vote shall furnish to the judges of election his affidavit in writing, stating therein that he is an inhabitant of said district * * * entitled to vote therein at said election, and prove by the oath of a householder and registered voter of the district in which he offers to vote that he knows such person to be an inhabitant of the district.

Now listen, and hear how the supreme court of Illinois passed upon a question that arose upon a statute of that mandatory character, where votes had been received and counted, and the question arose as to whether they were rightfully received and lawfully counted. I quote from the decision in the case of Clark vs. Robinson, 88 Illinois, page 500. The court said:

The words of the statute are express. * * * The presumption of the legality of a vote * * * arises from the fact of the deposition of the ballot in the ballot box. A vote so deposited is presumed to be a legal vote until there is evidence to the contrary. * * * Failure of observance of this direction would not invalidate a vote that had been received by the judges of election and deposited in the ballot box, but once there the presumption would be that it was a legal vote, notwithstanding the express prohibitory words of the statute against receiving the vote. We find no error in counting these votes.

The ballot should be liberally construed and the intendments should be in favor of a reading and construction which will render the ballot effective rather than in favor of a conclusion which will, on some technical ground, render it ineffective. At the same time it is not admissible to say that something was intended which is contradictory of what was done, and if the ballot is so defective as to fail to show any intention whatever it must be disregarded.

The principle that controls in such cases which touch the recording and return of the votes received and the mode and manner of conducting an election in detail are to be regarded as directory to the officer. And while such officer may be liable to punishment for willful failure to discharge the duties imposed by the statute the citizen is not thereby to be disfranchised.

Such is the language of the supreme court of Illinois upon that class of cases; and my distinguished colleague [Mr. CANNON] will understand how a majority of this committee, coming against the decisions of the supreme court of Illinois in such classes of cases, did not feel themselves authorized or justified to seize hold of this technical difficulty which existed in the case of Cass County and Pike County and throw out the votes of those two entire counties. The majority of the committee thought they would be going beyond any decision that had ever been made in the State of Illinois if they came to any such conclusion.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me at that point——

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. But I should like to say that all that reasoning and those decisions of the supreme court of Illinois leave literally nothing of the claim which is made here on the part of the contestee that the language of the statute with reference to assisted voters is mandatory. There is not a thread or a patch upon which you can rest any such claim. There is no mandatory provision whatever of the statute to be found bearing upon that question. Neither is there any directory provision, except that which is directory to the officers that they shall administer the oath to those who wish to take the oath that they require assistance.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I want to see if I understand my friend. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] contended that the assisted voters who did not take the oath that they were disabled from marking their tickets were assisted without taking the oath, and then cited the Minnesota decision to show that those votes ought not to be counted. Now, then, when I turn to the Illinois statutes, as to the assisted voters, I find that there is no law in Illinois saying that the votes shall not be counted, and I agree with my friend they ought to be counted; but when I turn over and look at these ballots, 320 in number, that were not printed as the statute provides, and find that the law expressly provides that they shall not be counted, I would like to know what kind of a fix the gentleman from Massachusetts is in, if my friend can tell me, because if his doctrine is applied to these illegally printed ballots that he has applied to the assisted voters, then Rinaker is seated by 280 votes.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, as to the predicament that my friend from Massachusetts is in as to this particular subject, I asked him in the midst of his eloquent imprecation upon this subject to point to the section of the Illinois law which contained any mandatory language upon this point, and he immediately, with a versatility that I admire and with a lucidity that is beyond all expression of compliment, proceeded to an argument that it ought to be so; that there ought to be such a provision; but he nowhere found it; he did not read it; he could not find it; it is not in the law. These decisions from the other States, Mr. Speaker, are decisions which proceeded upon the statutes of other States, which the courts of those several States held to be mandatory statutes, and being mandatory statutes, when the cases came to the various supreme courts of those States involving an alleged infraction of the mandatory law, the supreme courts in those States held the statutes to be mandatory.

But I call attention to the fact that in Illinois there is no such provision, no such decision; but the entire current of our authorities since the admission of the State into the Union has been to the contrary; in other words, they have held always to this exceedingly liberal construction of the law with reference to giving force, effect, and conclusiveness to the ballots and the choice of the suffrage of the people; and I hold that that is a pretty good line of decision for any court or any legislative body to hold to, because it respects the majesty of the sovereign people, who rule in this Government, and the sacredness of the ballot should everywhere be admitted and its security should always be carefully guarded. The only complaint that could be made against this committee, and the friendly complaint made by our friends here, is that the majority of the committee have not gone far enough and taken hold of the radical provisions which we find in this statute which would cast out, exclude, and throw aside entirely all of the ballots in the counties of Cass and Pike, because the election law there was clearly violated in terms.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question at this point?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. You are now discussing the matter of the mandatory or directory provision of the law, and then you say you could have thrown a number of these ballots out because the ballot is not printed on the inside in the size of type in which it should have been printed?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. The large heading on the top of the Australian ballot?

Mr. BRUMM. Exactly; on the inside.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. It is only printed on one side.

Mr. BRUMM. It is that part which is for the information of the election officers and the voter.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. All the voters would cast their votes on a big sheet like this, the Australian ballot.

Mr. BRUMM. I understand; but the point of my question about that is this, whether this is directed to be printed on the outside of the ballot or simply on the inside.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. On the inside, what I call the face of the ballot.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; this is simply as to the method, as I understand.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, then, as to the secret use. The provision requires of each voter to swear that he is unable to mark his own ballot. You contend that this is merely directory also.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNOLLY. There is no provision of that kind in the law.

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, yes; there is no question about that.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I think not.

Mr. BRUMM. If I am not mistaken. I want to get at the facts.

Mr. CONNOLLY. You are mistaken.

Mr. BRUMM. I first want to know whether there is any provision requiring them to swear—that they shall first swear—that they are unable to mark their ballots. Am I wrong?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Your language is perhaps incorrect, but in substance I think that is so.

Mr. BRUMM. The question I now want to ask is, if it be shown after an investigation that these people who did not swear that they all voted for the contesting member, do you still contend that that would have no effect upon the general result, or that it should have no effect on the general result?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. The gentleman has misapprehended my argument.

Mr. BRUMM. Why not answer the question? What is the position of the committee in reference to this matter? Do you now contend that this is improperly done, simply because the act is not mandatory but only directory?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I find it difficult to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because I do not clearly apprehend what he means. I will only say this: I am simply discussing one branch of the case; that is, as to what the law of Illinois provides with reference to voters who are assisted by the election officers before they have first taken the oath that they require the assistance of such officers.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion? He is evidently weary; and as we know, he has not been in good health recently. If it would be agreeable to him to pause in his argument now and resume it when the House shall again take up this question, I will move that the House adjourn. I desire to consult entirely the wishes of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I thank the gentleman from Maine for his suggestion; it is most agreeable to me. I will not consume much more time upon resuming the case to-morrow.

Mr. BLUE. To-morrow is set apart for pension business.

Mr. DINGLEY. At the suggestion of the gentleman who has been occupying the floor, and who is somewhat weary, I will now, as it is past 5 o'clock, move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman withhold that proposition for a moment? I wish to make a personal request of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Go ahead.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent that I may put in my published remarks some statements I did not have time to bring before the House in this case.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is all right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOLLIVER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5481) to restore the lands embraced in the Fort Lewis Military Reservation, in the State of Colorado, to the public domain;

A bill (H. R. 7865) to allow the return free of duty of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1020) granting an increase of pension to Gilman Williams;

A bill (H. R. 1980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. 3046) for the relief of Frederick Van Gilder;

A bill (H. R. 6104) for the relief of Anton Gloetzner;

A bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 175) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain uses of national military parks;

A bill (H. R. 3606) granting a pension to French W. Thornhill;

A bill (H. R. 6431) to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 167) authorizing foreign exhibitors at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition, to be held in Nashville, Tenn., in 1897, to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits, and allowing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury;

A bill (S. 3790) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell;

A bill (S. 2870) to permit Rene C. Baughman to lay pipes in a certain street in the city of Washington;

A bill (S. 2843) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Boonville, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 981) relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will withdraw for a moment the motion to adjourn.

COURT-HOUSE AND JAIL, NAVAJO COUNTY, ARIZ.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a bill returned from the Senate with amendments.

The bill (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house and jail at the county seat thereof, was read, with the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Gentlemen interested in the pending election case desire to conclude it to-morrow. In order that this may be done without interfering with the special order providing for the hearing of pension cases, I ask that Thursday, the 14th instant, be substituted for Wednesday, the 13th instant, in the order with reference to the consideration of pension business, so that those cases may be taken up on the day after to-morrow, instead of to-morrow, leaving to-morrow open for the conclusion of the election case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. One inquiry——

Mr. RICHARDSON. We did not hear the request.

The SPEAKER. The request is to change the special order in regard to pension cases from to-morrow (Wednesday) until the next day (Thursday).

Mr. PICKLER. Do gentlemen know whether there is any more probability of appropriation bills coming in on Thursday than on to-morrow?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; there will be no appropriation bills on Thursday to interfere; if there are, we will vote them down. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. The proposition is simply that the special order be postponed from to-morrow until Thursday, with the same privileges now obtaining.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is merely the substitution of one day for another. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

Mr. MOODY. I wish to inquire whether we can not now make some arrangement for the close of the debate on the election case.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that if this case does not take the whole of to-morrow, the Pension Committee may have the remainder of the day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has interrupted the regular course of business in order that the change of day might be made, and he does not feel at liberty to further interrupt the proceedings.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 13, 1896.

Prayer by Rev. HUGH JOHNSTON, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. FAULKNER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

DAYS OF GRACE ON PROMISSORY NOTES.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5105) to abolish days of grace on promissory notes, drafts, etc., in the District of Columbia. The bill has been read. It was objected to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but he told me afterwards that he had made a mistake, and saw no objection to its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The signature of the Vice-President was announced to the following bills and joint resolution, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (S. 981) relating to the testimony of physicians in the courts of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2790) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell;

A bill (S. 2870) to permit Rene C. Baughman to lay pipes in a certain street in the city of Washington;

A bill (S. 2843) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Boonville, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 175) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain uses of national military parks;

A bill (H. R. 1020) granting an increase of pension to Gilman Williams;

A bill (H. R. 1980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. 3046) for the relief of Frederick Van Gilder;

A bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 3606) granting a pension to French W. Thornhill;

A bill (H. R. 5481) to restore the lands embraced in the Fort Lewis Military Reservation, in the State of Colorado, to the public domain;

A bill (H. R. 6104) for the relief of Anton Gloetzner;

A bill (H. R. 6431) to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765;

A bill (H. R. 7865) to allow the return free of duty of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 167) authorizing foreign exhibitors at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition, to be held in Nashville, Tenn., in 1897, to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits, and allowing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 7469) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 8532) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game:

A bill (H. R. 7578) granting the Flagstaff and Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve in northern Arizona; and

A bill (H. R. 8590) granting to the Denver, Cripple Creek and Southwestern Railroad Company a right of way for a railroad through the South Platte and Plum Creek forest reserves, in the State of Colorado.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 8324) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate four pieces of condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the Grant County Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. 8495) granting to John Hill Post, No. 86, of Boonton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls.

The bill (H. R. 8167) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the river and harbor bill was to be laid before the Senate immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. LODGE. I desire——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. I am blind and deaf absolutely to all requests.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to make any request. I have morning business to present, which I supposed would be allowed.

Mr. FRYE. It was agreed that immediately after the reading of the Journal the river and harbor bill should be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Such was the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to submit a report from a committee, if that is to be allowed.

Mr. HILL. I merely wanted to move concurrence in the amendments of the House of Representatives to a Senate bill which the Chair is ready to lay before the Senate.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING REGATTAS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2642) to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers, which were, in line 4, after the word "steamers," to strike out the word "and" and insert the word "yachts"; in the same line, after the word "oarsmen," to insert the words "and all craft, whether as observers or participants"; in line 10, after the word "steamers," to strike out the words "and the" and insert the word "yachts"; also in the same line, after the word "oarsmen," to insert the words "and all craft whether as observers or participants."

Mr. HILL. In behalf of the Senator from Maine I will move to concur in those amendments.

Mr. FRYE. Those amendments are all right.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FRYE. I will yield ten minutes, Mr. President.

MRS. HELEN MORRELL CARROLL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 730) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Helen Morrell Carroll, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MOUNTAIN VIEW CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 15) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., certain cannon, etc., which was to strike out all after the word "California," in line 7, down to and including "salutes," in line 11, and insert in lieu thereof "six condemned cannon and six pyramids of condemned cannon balls for the purpose of decorating the Grand Army burial plat, reserved for the burial of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Union, and to be placed around and near the soldiers' monument already erected there."

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ADA J. SCHWATKA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, which was, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "seventeen."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SHOUP, and Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Balfe Musical Club, No. 1, of New York, praying for the passage of the so-called Phillips bill, authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commision to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FAULKNER presented a petition of Potomac Council, No. 104, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Gormania, W. Va., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CARTER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington, D. C., praying that an appropriation of $5,000 be made for grading and regulating Illinois avenue in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of Missoula Typographical Union, No. 277, of Missoula, Mont., and a petition of Federal Labor Union, No. 6512, of Belt, Mont., praying for the Government ownership and control of telegraphic lines; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Queenstown, Pa., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the introduction of military training in the public schools of the country; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Schuylkill County Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Pottsville, Pa., and a petition of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the free and unlimited coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry memorials of citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against placing the statue of Père Marquette in Statuary Hall; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Pleasantville, Pa., and a petition of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Oil City, Pa., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen of McKees Rocks, Pa., praying for the establishment of a board of arbitration to settle the differences between employees and railway companies; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Engineers' Club of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the adoption of a metric system of weights and measures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Scranton, Pa., praying for the establishment of a department of commerce and manufactures; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's New Century Club of West Chester, Pa., remonstrating against the payment of certain claims against the Indians, as proposed by the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of House bill No. 2626, providing for the protection of agricultural staples by an export bounty; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the United States who served in the military and naval service during the war of the rebellion, praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the pension of those who lost limbs; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Grand Army Association of Allegheny County, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation amending the pension laws; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRICE presented a petition of the Otis Steel Company, Limited, of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the adoption of a metric system of weights and measures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Elm Grove Grange, No. 644, Patrons of Husbandry, of Evansport, Ohio, praying for the passage of House bill No. 8008, regulating the manufacture of filled cheese; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Stonecutters' Association of Lancaster, Ohio, remonstrating against the employment of convict labor in the construction of public buildings, and praying for the enactment of legislation restricting second-class postal matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Stomps-Burkhardt Company, of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect free labor and industries in which it is employed from the injurious effect of convict labor by confining the selling of goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured by convict labor to the State in which they are produced; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the bill (H. R. 3279) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which is Order of Business 660 on the Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back the bill (H. R. 3279) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with amendments, and I ask that it take the place on the Calendar of the bill just recommitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 3131), to provide for a director in chief of scientific bureaus and investigations in the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PALMER, from the Joint Committee on the Dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8532) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia, to report it without amendment. I ask that it take the same place on the Calendar, being Order of Business 968, that is now occupied by the bill (S. 2987) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia, and that the latter bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2844) granting a pension to Martha McNeil, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition and papers in the claim of William B. Matchett against the Government of Venezuela, reported adversely thereon; and the subject was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 810) to amend the act entitled "An act granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes," approved January 29, 1887, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2754) granting a pension to Jerusha Hayward Brown, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2802) granting a pension to Margaret Rowsell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1660) to provide for the adjustment and payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia by drawback certificates, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VEST. I notice by the RECORD that yesterday the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] reported from the Finance Committee House bill 8008, what is known as the filled-cheese bill. My attention was called to something else at the time and I did not observe the report. On behalf of the minority of the committee, consisting of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and myself, I had leave from the committee to file the views of the minority. I should have stated yesterday that it was simply a majority report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Leave will be granted as requested.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8167) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. In behalf of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER], and myself, I submit the views of the minority of the Committee on the District of Columbia upon the bill (S. 3088) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Potomac Electric Power Company. I ask that the views of the minority be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. BRICE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2883) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Harbaugh, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SQUIRE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1338) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Durham, in the State of North Carolina, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2923) for the better improvement of the Government reservation at the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2967) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I desire to state that this is a report of the majority of the committee.

Mr. CHILTON. I dissent from the report of the majority, and will file a minority report at a later day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

CHARLES K. JENREE.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6298) to correct the military record of Charles K. Jenree, etc., to report it with an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senate to put the bill on its passage at this time. It will take but a moment. It is to correct the record of an officer.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 5, after the word "Company," to strike out "B, Twenty-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry," and insert "D, First New York Veteran Cavalry Volunteers"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles K. Jenree, late of Company D, First New York Veteran Cavalry Volunteers, and to issue to the said Charles K. Jenree an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall become due by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF B. H. HENRY AND OTHERS.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of January 7, 1896, report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying report of the special agent of the United States sent to the Fiji Islands to investigate the claims of B. H. Henry and other American citizens, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution, which was placed upon the Calendar:

Be it resolved, That the President is hereby requested to continue the investigation and efforts hitherto made by the United States in the matter of the claims of B. H. Henry and other American citizens against the Government of Great Britain in regard to certain lands in the Fiji Islands, to the end that such an adjustment of such claims may be made as may be warranted by the facts and by the law applicable thereto.

VICTOR HUGO M'CORD.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the message from the President of the United States, received January 10, 1896, in relation to the arrest and imprisonment of Victor Hugo McCord at Arequipa, Peru, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 3132) to restore to the pension roll the name of Nathaniel W. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3133) granting an increase of pension to Betsey B. Olin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 3134) to restrict employment on public buildings and public works to citizens of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3135) for the relief of the heirs of James Glover; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KYLE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3136) for Sunday rest; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. KYLE. I have reintroduced the bill by request, as I introduce all bills and resolutions of which I am not the author, although I may be in sympathy with the provisions of such bills or resolutions. Looking over the list of bills introduced by myself I see that the words "by request" were left off of this bill two years ago. Probably my statement was not heard by the clerks. In looking over my bills I notice another measure which I introduced by request. This was Senate joint resolution 94, Fifty-third Congress, second session. The statement evidently was not heard at the desk. The joint resolution had been published in the journals of the city several days before. I presented it to the Senate by request of the Knights of Labor.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 3137) granting an increase of pension to Lambert L. Mulford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3138) to remove the charge of desertion against Israel Blessing; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3139) to amend chapter 67 of volume 23 of the Statutes at Large of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3140) to restore to the pension roll the name of John E. Watson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3141) granting a pension to Rachel Kern; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PUGH introduced a bill (S. 3142) to provide an American register for the barge Black Diamond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAFFERY introduced a bill (S. 3143) granting a pension to Sarah M. Spyker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRICE introduced a bill (S. 3144) granting a pension to Samuel Shaffer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3145) to increase the pension of William Hulsizer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GRAY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3146) to revise and amend and extend the act of Congress of August 15, 1876, to encourage and promote telegraphic communications between America and Asia across the Pacific Ocean from the western shores of the United States to the Hawaiian Islands, to Japan, and China; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEORGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON NATIONAL SANITARIUM IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Senate Report No. 771, from the Committee on Public Lands, on Senate bill 2593, be reprinted.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE SERVICE.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 1,000 additional copies of document No. 205, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, relating to a postal telegraph and telephone, be printed for the use of the Senate.

DIRECTOR IN CHIEF OF SCIENTIFIC BUREAUS.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the arguments before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in favor of the proposition for a director in chief of scientific bureaus in the Department of Agriculture, together with all the appendices accompanying the same as published for the use of said committee, 1,500 of which shall be for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture and 1,500 for the use of the Senate.

DENISON AND NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. CHILTON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the Senate (S. 2488) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes,'" by striking out the word "nine," in line 2 of said enrolled bill, and inserting "eight."

Mr. CHILTON. The object is to correct the numbering of a section in a bill that was passed a day or two ago. It is merely a formal correction, and I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. BACON. I desire to give notice that on Friday morning, after the conclusion of the routine business, I shall ask the consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 3101) to prohibit the issuance of bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the Government by the Secretary of the Treasury or other officer of the Government without the authority of Congress, in order that I may submit some remarks upon it.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 9th instant approved and signed the act (S. 661) to amend section 2880 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing time for vessels to unlade.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 11th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1872) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange on behalf of the United States the tract of land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., now belonging to the United States and held for light-house purposes, with the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company for any other tract or parcel of land in said county equally well or better adapted to use for light-house purposes.

BILL BECOMES A LAW.

The message further announced that the bill (S. 2557) granting a pension to Sarah A. Boyd was presented to the President April 29, 1896, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without his approval.

GUARDIAN FOR PENSIONERS.

Mr. FRYE. Now, I shall be obliged——

Mr. PEFFER. I ask the attention of the Senator from Maine. Some time ago I reported from the Committee on Pensions the bill (S. 2237) providing for the appointment of a committee or guardian for pensioners in certain cases in the District of Columbia. It is a bill that is applicable particularly to pensioners in the District of Columbia who squander their money through drunkenness, etc. I am quite sure that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill, and I should like to have it taken up and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to insert the following proviso at the end of section 1:

Provided, That the compensation of said guardian shall be fixed by the court, not to exceed 5 per cent of the funds so intrusted to his care.

So as to make the section read:

That any judge of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, upon the filing of a petition alleging that a United States pensioner residing in the said District is squandering pension money in drinking or by vicious habits of life, and after service of a copy of said petition on the pensioner, may, upon evidence satisfactory to him, appoint a guardian for said pensioner, and thereafter all payments on account of pensions due to said pensioner shall be made to said guardian, who shall expend the same under the direction of the said court: Provided, That the compensation of said guardian, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. What committee reported the bill?

Mr. PEFFER. It is from the Committee on Pensions.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the appointment of a guardian for pensioners in certain cases in the District of Columbia."

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the agreement of yesterday, the Chair lays the river and harbor bill before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. GORMAN.

Mr. VEST. I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending question.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me one moment? I wish to move one or two little amendments while they occur to me.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. On page 24, line 20, I am informed by authorities in interest who know all about it that $1,000,000 under the contract system will complete that contract. Therefore I move to strike out "$403,856," leaving the amount $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On pages 114 and 115, under the subhead of New York, I move to insert:

New York Harbor, from the Narrows to the sea, with a view of obtaining 35 feet at mean low-water mark.

Buffalo, entrance to Erie Basin and Black Rock Harbor.

East Chester Creek, with a view to extending improvement to head of tide water.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Maryland. I must confess my astonishment upon yesterday at the result in the Senate upon the motion I had the honor to make to lay the pending amendment upon the table. Unless I am egregiously mistaken as to the effect of it, I think the Senate will reconsider that action. If Senators will give some attention to the wording of the amendment they will see that it is exceedingly far-reaching and has an effect which I hardly think the Senator from Maryland himself intends, with great deference to him. The amendment reads:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall so adjust the contracts herein authorized to be made by apportioning them in such way as not to obligate the Government under this act and all prior acts providing for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which provide for contracts beyond appropriations made, for a sum exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000 in any one fiscal year for such materials and work authorized to be contracted for in all of said acts.

I take it for granted that there can be no contention as to the meaning of this amendment in so far as it is limited to the work and materials to be done and purchased under contract. It is exclusively intended to apply to the contract expenditures under this bill.

I will say, in passing, to the Senator from Maryland that his calculation as to the amount of the contract sums to be expended is very erroneous. I have not gone through all of them, but my knowledge of the bill is such as to enable me to say that the estimate is erroneous in regard to some States. I think if he will turn to the State of Washington, conspicuously, he will find an error as to the amount of the contract sums to be expended in that

State, and so as to my own State, to which my attention was particularly called.

But returning to the amendment, the plain meaning of the amendment is that under no circumstances shall more than $10,000,000 be expended in any one fiscal year upon these contracts, leaving out of view the immediate and direct appropriations made by the bill. By whom is this apportionment to be made of the $10,000,000, and under what rule is it to be made? Under none except the will and discretion of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War absolutely under this amendment controls the apportionments.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the amendment not only applies to the pending bill, but it covers the contracts now in existence under former acts.

Mr. VEST. There is no question about it, and I am coming to that. But I am speaking now—and for the purposes of my argument that is sufficient—as to the bill pending in the Senate. It is hardly necessary for me to say that I am a member of the Democratic party, and that the Democratic Administration will be in power until the 4th of March next anyhow. But I would not give to any living man such power as is given by this amendment. I hardly think that there is a partisan in this Chamber, no matter how intense or extreme he may be, who will give such a power to a Cabinet officer. I have never known a Secretary of War (and there have been very eminent men, men beyond any suspicion as to motives, holding that high office) to whom I would give this power. It is an abuse of the meaning of governmental power. It is an invasion of the autonomy of the Government to put this absolute and despotic and autocratic power in the hands of any Cabinet officer of the Government.

Mr. President, look at the specific appropriations. What is the result? We have in the bill provided that certain appropriations should be given in the next fiscal year for the completion of great public improvements. If the amendment is adopted the Secretary of War can nullify those provisions of the bill. My friend from Maryland says no, but I say yes, because you can not, under the Procrustean rule of this amendment, go beyond $10,000,000; that is, the whole of the contracts in the aggregate shall not exceed $10,000,000 for the next fiscal year; and the Secretary of War then comes in and exercises his discretion and his pleasure as to how the $10,000,000 shall be adjusted and appropriated.

Take the Mississippi River, where we have made a continuing appropriation, and the Missouri River, and the improvement at Duluth and other important points, the most important named in the bill. The Secretary of War may, in his discretion, say: "I do not think that the improvement on the Mississippi River should have more than $1,000,000, or two million and a half dollars even, for the next fiscal year. I do not think Duluth should have more. In other words, I will put my discretion in lieu of that of Congress, and under this amendment will do as I please inside of the limit of $10,000,000." Is the Senate prepared for that? Is the Senate prepared now to surrender its judgment in regard to this important bill—the largest we have ever passed for the improvement of rivers and harbors—to any Cabinet officer, I do not care how distinguished he may be or how able he may be in the discharge of the duties of his office?

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me?

Mr. VEST. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Missouri I know, upon reflection, will admit that to-day we authorize continuing contracts to be made for improvements—it has been done for all the improvements made up to this time—and we have left it absolutely to the discretion of the Secretary of War and the Engineer Department to determine how much shall be expended each year. For instance, take Galveston, with an appropriation of $6,000,000 or $8,000,000, whatever was the amount; and in all the cases that is true. So there is nothing new in that feature. That is the rule.

Mr. VEST. The answer of the Senator does not meet the point I make at all. I should like to have him show me in any prior river and harbor bill where we have ever given to any Secretary of War the power to apportion our appropriations. I should like to have him show me any such provision. It is true we have said that the Secretary of War may make continuing contracts, which the courts have decided to be coercive, and that "may" means "shall." That has been repeatedly adjudicated by tribunals of highest authority; but we have never before—and I challenge my friend from Maryland to point me to an instance—undertaken to say to a Secretary of War that he shall take the aggregate of our appropriations, either immediate or under contract, and apportion them as he sees proper.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri excuse me for a moment?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly, under the practice and the construction that has been put upon the laws, the Secretary of War might expend a part of the appropriation, say, for Galveston Harbor, this year and a part of it next year; but we never have given and no one has ever thought of giving the Secretary of War the authority, when an appropriation has been deliberately made by Congress for Galveston Harbor, to say whether there shall be any expenditure at all. Under the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland, in the next twenty-five years it might be impossible to spend a cent of money for Galveston Harbor. You leave the matter entirely in his discretion, whether to spend the money upon improvements in the Delaware River or improvements in the Mississippi River, and whenever the time may come in the far distant future that there may be money available for Galveston Harbor, he will spend it there.

Mr. VEST. That is unquestionably my construction of the amendment, and I do not know how I could elaborate my meaning further than I have expressed it. If any Senator here, however astute or technical he may be as a lawyer, will convince me that we have not abdicated our legislative authority by giving this discretion to the Secretary of War, I shall be very much obliged to him for that information.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, only one word in answer to the Senator from Missouri, who is a very distinguished lawyer. Unfortunately I am one of the few members of this body who happen not to be lawyers, and I therefore have some hesitancy in controverting what the Senator has said.

The first suggestion the Senator made was that the statement I furnished, which is printed in the RECORD, of the amount of the continuing contracts, is inaccurate. It is true in one or two cases, though not in the aggregate, the clerks in making up the statement did leave out an amount for the State of Missouri and for the State of Washington, and those amounts were put under some other States; but I furnish to-day the correct statement as they have revised it, making the aggregate amount of the contracts contained in the bill $64,017,227.91. The amount that was placed to the State of Washington, $900,000, as it appears in the RECORD this morning, will now be found to be $2,380,000. That went into another item, but the aggregate amount is correct, so that in that particular the Senator is right. It was the fault of the clerks in making up the statement.

As to my amendment changing the rule and Congress abdicating its right to determine the amount of appropriations which shall be expended, it is exactly the reverse. Heretofore, as I stated a moment ago to the Senate, in every appropriation that has been made the appropriation for the harbor of Baltimore, for the harbor at Galveston, for all of the great harbors where contracts have been authorized to be made, the Secretary of War was authorized to make the contracts, and the Secretary of War absolutely determined the number of cubic yards that would be removed every year and the cost of that work, and at the end of the year reported to Congress the amount that he in his judgment thought ought to be expended, and Congress has made the appropriation. It is true that in no case heretofore has Congress limited the Secretary of War in the amount that he was to expend. He was at perfect liberty to make a contract and expend the entire amount of the appropriation in one year or two years or three years, the only reservation being that the contractor would look to Congress for appropriations at such time and in such amount as Congress might determine. But the power to obligate the Government for $1,000,000 or $10,000,000 we have always left absolutely to the Department.

All that the amendment provides is a restriction upon the Secretary of War that he shall not in the aggregate expend more than $10,000,000. The only reason for that is because for the first time in the history of the Government we have gone into the wholesale business of contracts, and it is only because of the conditions which surround us that I have offered this amendment, not with a view of impeding any of these works. I do not believe it will impede them. Leave this amendment out of the bill and the Secretary of War will have the absolute power to say what amount of money shall be expended in this year and in the next year. I say if I were Secretary of War or had control of the Treasury Department in the present condition of the Treasury I would apply the rule suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and which has been adopted by Secretary Carlisle. I would not enter into one of these contracts or obligate the Government for a dollar of money until Congress made provision for the Treasury.

I am anxious for the passage of the river and harbor bill. I have stated before during the present session that I regard it as the most important bill in the interest of the country that we have. I would not stay the improvement of the Mississippi River or any one of the great harbors, because that improvement means commerce and thrift for our people. I would be liberal with the appropriations for the improvements—I have always been liberal with them—but in the present condition I think it is wise to make this limitation. It is not abdicating anything. Congress ought to assert itself in this particular instance, in my judgment, by telling the executive officers our condition is such that you ought not to expend more than $10,000,000.

Mr. President, who upon earth has a right to complain of it? What will it do? It will give for the year ending June 30, 1897, $20,000,000 to be expended by the Secretary of War, and but once, if I remember correctly, certainly not more than twice, was there ever $20,000,000 expended in one year, and that included the Mississippi River, it included the great harbor of Galveston, and all those great works. It will give under that provision $19,000,000 to be expended for the year ending June 30, 1898. The Department has considered—and that has been the case in all recent Congresses, as the chairman of the committee, I think, will bear me out—that the river and harbor bill covers two years. They take the amount of $12,000,000, for instance, and they expect to expend $6,000,000 of it during the fiscal year for which we are appropriating, which is up to the 1st day of July, 1897. So there is $6,000,000 of cash available for the next fiscal year, and $10,000,000 under contracts, which will be $16,000,000, and $4,000,000 under contracts heretofore made; which makes practically $20,000,000 for the next year and $20,000,000 for the year following. It will take under that arrangement six years to complete the expenditures provided for in this bill. In addition to that, two years from now we shall have an appropriation of from fifteen to twenty million dollars—of course the exact amount can not be stated now——

Mr. WALTHALL. May I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. GORMAN. I yield with great pleasure.

Mr. WALTHALL. I only want to ask the Senator how his amendment affects the improvement as to the time within which the expenditure to be made is limited, as in the case of the Mississippi to three years?

Mr. GORMAN. There is no question, in my judgment, but that that is a specific appropriation and that the work is required to be completed. So far as that case is concerned, the provision is emphatic in the bill itself. As I understand, the amount would be expended as provided for in that particular section of the bill. I submit to the Senator that the bill as it came from the House, if I am not right in this, would have interfered with that provision.

Mr. WALTHALL. I would say to the Senator that if he is mistaken in that, then a very large proportion of the appropriations made for the Mississippi River improvement would be lost, and all that is not made prior to June 1, 1897, will lapse.

Mr. GORMAN. Let us see if I am right, or if the Senator is right. If I am wrong about it, then the bill as it came from the other House has practically the same provision, the only difference being in the amount. The provision for the Mississippi River is that $2,583,333 may be expended annually for three years. That is in the bill as it stands. Those are the contracts which are authorized to be made for the work. The bill came from the other House with that provision, and it has not been changed by the Senate a particle. If the Senator will turn to page 99 of the bill he will find this provision:

SEC. 5. That under the authority to make contracts for materials and work, under the provisions of this act, in addition to the sums appropriated herein, the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay, in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be let by any one of said contracts.

There is a limitation. If the Senator is right, and if my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is right, as to the effect of my amendment, the bill as it came from the other House made the same interference with this appropriation.

Mr. BERRY. That was corrected in the Senate, was it not? I ask the Senator.

Mr. GORMAN. I will tell the Senator in a moment. I am talking about the bill as it came from the other House. If the contention of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Mississippi is right, then the provision in the bill as it came from the other House would be limited to 25 per cent of the amount appropriated, and it would require four years to complete the improvement. I do not believe that contention is right, with all due deference to those Senators.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Twenty-five per cent, or one-fourth, so far as the Mississippi River contract is concerned, would exactly take up the appropriation within four years, even according to the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. GORMAN. The bill provides for three years—not four years.

Mr. BERRY. There is a provision for the first year and for three additional years. There is one provision made for this year and then for the three years beginning June 30, 1897. It is not a provision for three years. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. WALTHALL. Do I understand the Senator from Maryland that his amendment does not apply to the Mississippi River improvement at all?

Mr. GORMAN. I think so. I contend also that the bill as it came from the other House would not have applied to it, and that if the contention of my distinguished friend as to the effect of my amendment is good, then there would have remained the restriction of the Mississippi River improvement in the bill as it came from the other House. I do not believe it will bear that construction, however.

Mr. CAFFERY. May I interrupt the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator's amendment, as I understand, provides for continuing contracts not exceeding in any one year $10,000,000, at the will of the Department.

Mr. GORMAN. Not as to specific contracts.

Mr. CAFFERY. There is a specific appropriation for the Mississippi River for four years. The first appropriation is a cash appropriation of $1,250,000. Then there is an appropriation for three years after the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897—a continuing contract—for $2,583,000 per annum. Do I understand the Senator from Maryland to say that his general provision in the shape of an amendment, that the continuing contracts all together are not to exceed $10,000,000, does not apply to the specific appropriations made for the Mississippi River?

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator, as a rule of law, where there is a general provision such as is proposed, that not more than $10,000,000 shall be expended, and an executive officer, who is supposed to be a lawyer, taking up this bill, finds that it is required that in any one case $2,000,000 shall be expended, whether he would not first apply that amount? Would not that be the rule of law, and has it not always been the practice of the Department?

Mr. CAFFERY. As to the cash appropriations that might be so, but as to the continuing contracts I rather think it might be different under the Senator's amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. If that be so, this bill as it came from the other House with the 25 per cent limitation would unquestionably be the same.

Mr. WALTHALL. I will ask the Senator would he have any objection to putting in the amendment a provision in accordance with his statement of his own view of the meaning of the amendment, so that there will not be any question about it?

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to it. All I wish to accomplish is that when we meet here in December next we shall not be confronted with estimates based upon contracts made which would involve the expenditure of over $10,000,000 in the next fiscal year. That is all I desire to accomplish. I have no other desire.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. If I understand the design of the Senator from Maryland, it is that it is necessary to put something of a restrictive character in this bill, so that the Secretary of War may not go too far in the expenditure of public money. If that be the danger menacing us, I do not think that it amounts to a very great deal, because I think that that officer in the treatment of river and harbor matters has evinced a disposition to be economical. When his estimates were sent to Congress during the present session, instead of adopting the figures suggested by the local engineers, the Chief of Engineers, for the first time, I believe, in many years, cut the amount down so low that, according to his view, no smaller amount could possibly be successfully expended; and this he did, as I understand, under the direction of the Secretary of War. Feeling that that officer has been thus disposed to be careful with the public money, in some instances going further than some of us on the committee would have gone, it appears now rather unnecessary to put on this additional restriction.

Mr. GORMAN. I have, of course, great admiration for the present Secretary of War, and I believe he will do all the Senator from California indicates. It is not at all for want of confidence in the Secretary of War that I offer the amendment; but it is nothing new, I wish to say to my distinguished friend from California, to put such a restriction on the Secretary of War or on any other Secretary. We have authorized an expenditure of four or five million dollars for the construction of guns, and we have said that the Secretary of War must not exceed the expenditure of two millions of that money in one year. We have said to the Secretary of the Navy, "We will give you ten or twenty million dollars to construct your ships and your armor, but you must not expend more than a certain amount in any one year." So there is no unusual restriction on the War Department proposed by the amendment. On the contrary, this is a wise provision, which Congress has frequently made; and but for such provision the Treasury to-day would be in a worse condition than it is.

More than that, I desire the passage of this bill, and as a Senator representing a great State in this Union I have a duty to perform, and that is to try to keep these expenditures within reasonable limits. I can not afford to vote for any bill which will put it in the power of any one man in the present condition of affairs to force the expenditure of money which we have not.

Mr. MILLS. I want to ask the Senator from Maryland if this amendment of his gives the power to the Secretary of War in apportioning the $10,000,000 to leave out the contracts in the State of Texas? I wish to know whether that power is to be placed in his hands.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not believe, as I said a moment ago, that there has ever been a river and harbor bill where there was a contract authorized to be made that that power did not exist to the fullest extent, so that the Secretary of War could determine in each case, and has so determined in each case, the exact amount which he will expend at Galveston or Baltimore or upon the Pacific Coast; and there is no other way in which these contracts can be entered into.

I wish to insert in the RECORD a corrected statement of the continuing contracts contained in the bill, as there were one or two errors in the table I submitted yesterday.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland a question or two, as I desire to get as nearly as I can at what his amendment means.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to make a suggestion first, and perhaps it will anticipate what he is going to say? I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland—I am in entire sympathy with him—if he will not accept this addition to the amendment he proposes, which will probably meet the view which has been suggested.

Mr. CULLOM. I will hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he modify his amendment by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That this shall not relate to or affect the appropriations, or the special regulations for the expenditure thereof, hereinbefore made for the harbor of refuge in Delaware Bay, the harbor of Duluth, Minn., or the Mississippi River from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of said river.

Mr. MILLS. What becomes of Texas?

Mr. CULLOM. Is that the suggestion the Senator offers to do away with my desire to ask a question?

Mr. VILAS. I want to say there are special provisions made in this bill for those places, special directions in the expenditure. If those special directions for expenditure were excepted, the provision of the Senator from Maryland would apply equally to all others entitled to them.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not yield to the Senator to make a speech on the amendment.

Mr. VILAS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Maryland whether his amendment is proposed to cut out all the appropriations not under the general contract system?

Mr. GORMAN. As a matter of course not.

Mr. CULLOM. It does not refer to them?

Mr. GORMAN. It does not refer to them in the slightest.

Mr. CULLOM. Then it refers to those that are proposed to be put under continuous contracts only. Now, I desire to ask this other question: As I understand, we shall be compelled to appropriate $4,000,000 to carry out contracts heretofore made. That is true, is it not?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. Therefore we shall only have for the year 1897 $6,000,000 to apply to the continuous contract appropriations included in this bill. Is that right?

Mr. GORMAN. You will have $3,500,000, which is already appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation bill on the old contracts.

Mr. CULLOM. There will be $4,000,000 left, as I understand?

Mr. GORMAN. We have $3,500,000 appropriated now, and there will be $4,000,000 left for the next session of Congress. We shall have $6,000,000 direct appropriations under the river and harbor bill now pending.

Mr. CULLOM. Only $6,000,000.

Mr. GORMAN. That will give $9,500,000, and then $10,000,000 on contracts.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that the Senate just now is dealing with the river and harbor appropriations contained in the pending bill. As I understand it, we shall have but $6,000,000 which can be used during the next year which is appropriated for in this bill and under the general contract system. Therefore, if we vote for this amendment, we shall know exactly what we are going to get for the next year as applied to the contracts that are contained in this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Maryland has concluded or not.

Mr. GORMAN. I have not quite concluded, but I will give way to the Senator if he desires.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator concludes I should like to ask him a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is recognized.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall only occupy a few moments. On yesterday I stated that I favored a limitation upon this bill. Whether the amount suggested by the Senator from Maryland

[Mr. GORMAN] was the right one I was not prepared to say, but the amendment now suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] shows the situation in which this bill will be if there is no further limitation put upon it. The Senator from Wisconsin suggested certain exceptions, beginning with Delaware Bay. As this bill stands there is an appropriation of $5,000 for Delaware Bay, and there is authority to contract for four millions and a half. There is a limitation, then, upon that, that not more than one-quarter of it shall be expended in any one year. Therefore, when the Committee on Appropriations comes to consider this question next winter we shall find ourselves having an estimate before us of a million dollars for Delaware Bay. That is No. 1.

We shall find also before us an estimate for the Mississippi River from the Passes to Cairo for $2,500,000.

Mr. CULLOM. For that year?

Mr. ALLISON. For that year. I am speaking now in round numbers. That is three and a half million dollars. We shall find also an appropriation for Duluth Harbor, wherein the estimates for that year will be a million; that is, four and a half million dollars, and so on, running through a half dozen other appropriations in this bill, including the Mississippi River above Cairo, and including the Missouri River.

What I said yesterday I repeat to-day, and that is that this committee have not, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] said this morning, placed additional power in the hands of the Secretary of War, but they have limited his power, as the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is a limitation on his power. But for this limitation of one-quarter, as to Delaware Bay, it would be within the power of the Secretary of War under this bill to make a contract for the whole four and a half million dollars to be executed in a year and a half.

Mr. ELKINS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. The bill expressly provides that Congress may make appropriations from time to time.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; and that will be inserted in the contract; but suppose the contractor says, "I will finish this work in a year and a half, and I will take my chances of getting the appropriation."

Mr. ELKINS. He would be a good contractor, then.

Mr. ALLISON. He would be a good contractor; he would be a splendid contractor; and most likely he would do it, unless there was a limitation put upon him.

Mr. ELKINS. Here are two distinguished Senators and two great leaders, and I venture to say they both do not construe this amendment in the same way. There have been a dozen lawyers in this Senate on their feet who wanted to know what the amendment of the Senator from Maryland meant. It looks as if these two Senators, who are members of the great Appropriations Committee—and I want the Senate to take notice of that—are to exercise a sort of guardianship over the Committee on Commerce in this limitation—for that is what it means—after the Commerce Committee has carefully considered this bill and given three weeks to it; and now comes the Senator from Maryland, who is a distinguished member of that committee, but a greater member of the other committee, and with him the chairman of the great Appropriations Committee, and they say, "We want to guard against extravagance; we want to correct you; and we want to save the Treasury"; and I venture to say that no two Senators can take this amendment and read it for half an hour and agree upon what it does mean. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he knows what it does mean?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not intend to discuss this amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. I want to add that there are no accounting officers of the Treasury and there are no engineers in the United States who can properly construe this amendment. It will endanger this whole bill. We had better let it remain as it is; we had better follow the old beaten path, and take the river and harbor bill as we have worked it out, and follow the precedents of the Government.

I know it is easy to talk about putting restrictions in a bill, but these works pertain to commerce, and we want the Commerce Committee to have charge of them. This is a fight indirectly made at the Commerce Committee by the great Appropriations Committee. They have enough to do. Let them take care of the matters which are properly within their jurisdiction. The Commerce Committee are satisfied on this matter and now are unanimous that the bill is right. If the Senator from Iowa can construe what the proposed amendment means let him do so, so that any lawyer can understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad my friend finally reached his question. I do not intend to construe this amendment. I intend to make some suggestion by way of amendment to it.

Mr. ELKINS. I knew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I intended to make some suggestion by way of amendment before I got through. I had supposed that the object of bringing these bills into the Senate was to compare views of Senators here. I did not know that there was an omnipotence in any committee of this body. The Senator from Maryland offered the pending amendment, and I ventured some gentle criticisms last evening in a modest way respecting the limitation that was already in the bill as to the power of Congress. The Senator from Missouri comes in this morning and says that we are giving the Secretary of War power which he never had before.

The Secretary of War under this bill as it stands has unlimited power to contract, and but for the limitation which the Committee on Commerce itself has put in the bill, all the appropriations where contracts are authorized to be made could be executed in a single year, and I illustrated it by taking the Delaware Bay appropriation.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. VEST. Will the chairman of the Appropriations Committee point out one single river and harbor bill in which we have ever heretofore made a provision that the Secretary of War should apportion harbor appropriations, taking, if he pleases, as he could do under this amendment, all for one locality or putting that with another, provided he did it inside the limits of the $10,000,000? Will the Senator just point that out to me?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator first answer my question? What does the amendment mean?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment, as I construe it, means that there is a limitation upon the annual expenditures under postponed contracts for which no appropriations are made that are to be executed not for the fiscal year for which the appropriations are made, but in the next fiscal year. That is what it means—that the total appropriations shall not exceed $10,000,000. I do not know whether that is the exact sum that should be fixed. I do not know whether it should be ten or twelve or fifteen or twenty millions.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to complete what I was saying.

The limitation to which I have referred was in the bill. What other limitations are in this bill? The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] put clamps upon his own Mississippi River Commission by saying that they should not expend, between the Passes and Cairo, more than two and one-half million dollars a year. If he can do that, why can not we say to the Secretary of War: "You shall not expend, under this appropriation, more than $15,000,000 a year"?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. ELKINS. Now, let me ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia will please suspend a moment. The Chair understands that the Senate is proceeding under the five-minute rule. That being so, the time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Iowa, acting under their responsibility as members of the Committee on Appropriations and guardians of the Treasury, desire to limit the annual expenditures under this bill. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Iowa that not one single cent of money can be expended under the provisions of this bill until an appropriation shall first have been made by Congress; and whether we can limit the next Congress as to what appropriations they shall make is a question I do not care to discuss. I do not think we can do so by such legislation as this.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Whilst that is true, as the Senator from Rhode Island knows, when the Secretary of War makes an estimate under one of these contracts we are obliged in good faith to make the appropriation in order that the contract may be executed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why, Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me? I shall not occupy half a minute.

Mr. ALDRICH. Very well.

Mr. GRAY. All that this limitation would do would be to prevent the Secretary of War from incurring a debt which we would be in honor bound to provide for by appropriations.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, at the proper time, whenever that was, but not in any particular year.

The Senator from Iowa says if the Secretary of War makes an estimate for a contract we are bound in good faith to carry it out. The Senator knows a great deal better than I do what estimates are sent here by the Departments which they claim are necessary to be expended, and he knows how far short the aggregate appropriations every year fall below these estimates.

The fact is that this amendment can have but one purpose, and that is to tie the hands of future Congresses as to the amount of appropriations to be made, not as to the contracts to be made, because these contracts, as the Senator from Iowa well says, all contain a provision that they are to be proceeded with as fast as appropriations are made, and they can not be made in any other way; and every contractor who makes a contract under those provisions understands that as well as I or the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to ask the Senator why is it that the Committee on Commerce has put in a provision that contracts shall only be made, or obligations shall not be incurred, for more than one-quarter of the amount of the appropriation in any one year? Why is that limitation put upon these appropriations and not upon others?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is to put some kind of a restraint, if you please, upon the action of the Secretary of War; it is not mandatory, but it is a persuasive constraint upon the Secretary of War in the arrangement of these contracts. Are the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Maryland afraid of themselves next year? This question of appropriations under these acts is entirely in the hands, in the first instance, of the Committee on Appropriations, and in this case, as in all others, they pay attention to the estimates of the Departments or not just as they see fit. They are not obliged, because the Secretary of War shall put in his estimates for two millions and a half for work upon the Mississippi River, to insert in the sundry civil appropriation bill an appropriation for two millions and a half. Neither is Congress under any restraint to do that.

I am quite willing to trust to the good judgment of the Commerce Committee as to appropriations to be made under these contracts. I do not desire to put into the hands of an executive officer of this Government the decision of a question which must and ought to belong to the two Houses of Congress and the President. If any amendment is to be adopted of this nature it ought to be an amendment placing this matter squarely in the hands of the Secretary of War and making him responsible as to the relative merits of these propositions in regard to contracts.

If we are prepared to do that, if the Secretary of War is better to be trusted than the Appropriations Committee of this body and the body itself as to future appropriations for expenditures upon rivers and harbors, let us put the responsibility squarely in his hands and not try to give him responsibility which belongs to us. I assume that in the future the members of this body will be able to take care of the appropriations for these and all other purposes, governed by the revenue of the country and their responsibility as Senators.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I could not for the life of me get the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to say what the amendment means, nor can I get the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, if the Senator——

Mr. ELKINS. In one moment. As near as I can understand the Senator from Maryland, he says it does not apply. There is nothing in the language of the amendment, but he goes out and finds in his imagination as a lawyer, I suppose, that the Delaware Bay is not embraced in the amendment, that the Mississippi River is not in it, and that a lot of other public improvements are not included in the amendment. I do not know how that construction is arrived at, but if the author of the amendment construes his amendment properly it is an outrage upon the other public works, I submit to the Senate. If the amendment has concealed in it something we can not understand which exempts a great many other works, then it is a discrimination against and an outrage upon the rest of the public improvements of the country. I submit to the Senate that it is dangerous to pass an amendment the meaning of which nobody knows.

If the Senator from Maryland had said, "Be it enacted so and so, That $10,000,000 shall be the limit of the river and harbor bill this year," then we would have known what he meant; and if he means that, why not say it? I am afraid that that is what will be determined by the Attorney-General of the United States. When the Secretary of War looks at the bill he will say: "The Government is in great straits; we are selling bonds to keep going. I will send this provision over to the Attorney-General and ask him what it means." It will be very easy for the Attorney-General under this elastic amendment to say, "I do not think we get the Delaware breakwater matter in it, but it means you shall spend $10,000,000 this year and you can not spend any more." Congress can pass another river and harbor bill at its next session.

The amendment is mischievous. It is full of danger. It is full of doubt. Nobody knows what it means. As I said before, the Commerce Committee has given three weeks to the consideration of this bill. They have agreed upon it unanimously here. They had the engineers' estimates before them. They had before them the recommendations of the Secretary of War. They think just as much, I take it, of the Treasury and preserving it, and economy, as the Appropriations Committee. I say to the Senate that there is no Senator here who will attempt to state, nor will the Senator from Maryland attempt to state, what the amendment means. If Senators here, great lawyers, have different views upon the construction of the amendment, what are the Government officers going to do? What is the Secretary of War going to do? How are the accounting officers of the Government to proceed? How are the engineers to proceed? What works are the engineers to select out under the amendment? Then the board of engineers become supreme. They say, "We will expend it on the Illinois and Mississippi Canal." Then there will be a fight. Somebody will think they ought to expend it on his improvement. The amendment is so doubtful that I think it is safest simply to vote it down, and pass the river and harbor bill as it came from the House and as amended by the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I think I understand what the amendment means.

Mr. ELKINS. If the Senator does, it is a good thing.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It has been argued by the Senator who proposed the amendment and by some others as though the only effect of the proposed amendment is to limit the amount to be expended in the two fiscal years to which it applies.

The amendment does more than that. It absolutely prohibits the Secretary of War from obligating the Government under the proposed act and all prior acts providing for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which provide for contracts beyond appropriations made, for a sum exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000 in any one year. It is not merely that it shall not exceed $10,000,000 for any one year, but the Secretary of War is prohibited from entering into contracts by which the Government will be obligated to a further extent than $10,000,000. In other words, the bill provides in the body that the Secretary of War shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts to the extent of between sixty and seventy million dollars. Then comes in the amendment, and it undertakes to provide and does provide, if we pass it, that he shall only enter into contracts to the extent of $10,000,000.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, no.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It leaves, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] says, the discretion in him as to where the contracts shall be made. The effect of the amendment is to destroy the whole bill as framed by the committee.

There is another effect. Here you propose to limit the power of the Secretary to obligate the Government to enter into contracts exceeding $10,000,000, and yet you have provided for contracts that have run up to sixty or seventy million dollars. How is he to select? How is he to determine? Is he to take the Delaware breakwater for $4,000,000? Is he to take Duluth for another two or three million dollars; the Mississippi for two or three millions more? That makes up the $10,000,000. He can not contract beyond that sum. If the amendment is adopted, he can not obligate the Government beyond those three or four items; and what is the effect? All the other contracts provided for in the bill are at a standstill, and he can not contract at all in reference to any of them.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Senator from Oregon whether the language in the third line would not at least be plausibly construed thus: "He is not to obligate the Government to pay under this act."

Mr. GRAY. That is right.

Mr. CAFFERY. Would not that be the construction?

Mr. CULLOM. To pay in any one fiscal year.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is not the amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is what it means.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not at all. I think the provision is fairly susceptible of but one construction, and that is to place a limitation upon the power and jurisdiction of the Secretary of War to enter into any number of contracts that will exceed in all the sum of $10,000,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], that the Secretary of War does not make obligations on the part of the Government to pay in any fiscal year. That is left expressly to the power of Congress. It is in the contracts themselves. You do not agree to pay in any particular year and in any given amount. It is expressly provided in the contract that the work is to be paid for from time to time as the appropriations shall be made therefor by Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I wish to say one other word. What will be the effect of the amendment in the matter of securing contracts on proper terms for the execution of the work? Will a contractor, when he knows that he is limited in the amount that he is to receive in any one year, contract for a piece of work for the same amount he would if it were left open, to be paid as the work progresses?

The amendment, it appears to me, whatever view is taken of it, is pernicious, and the effect of it, and the only effect, is to destroy the bill. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, we might as well look upon this amendment in a business sort of way before we act upon it. The purpose of it, I understand, is to limit the appropriations on the continuing contracts to the sum of $10,000,000 a year. Yesterday when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] had the floor I asked him a question, suggesting that if the amendment were adopted the special amounts, for the first two years at all events, would absorb the whole amount appropriated for these purposes. I had not the figures then before me, but I have looked them up, and I find that the facts fully warrant the suggestion I made.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the aggregate?

Mr. PASCO. I will proceed to give the figures upon the different projects.

The table furnished us by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] yesterday shows that there is due upon the old contracts already authorized in previous years the sum of $8,225,033. It is proposed, I understand, to cover those in two years, and that would make $4,112,516 a year if equally divided. There are in the bill besides four contracts which are to be completed according to the intent of the bill in four years, and these special provisions, I take it, must be provided out of the $10,000,000 before any appropriations can be made for any other work. The four contracts that are to be completed in accordance with the plan contemplated in the bill are as follows:

Hennepin Canal	$1,427,240
Mississippi River	2,583,333
Duluth and Superior harbor	770,138
Delaware Bay harbor of refuge	1,165,000
Amounting in all to	5,945,711

These items, with the old contracts, will make $10,058,227 for the next two years, and more than the $10,000,000 will therefore be expended in carrying out these special exceptions in the bill, leaving nothing for any of the other continued contracts provided for in the bill.

After two years, when the former contracts are out of the way, there will then be in the neighborhood of $6,000,000 a year absorbed in these four improvements, so that every other continuing contract all over the country will be obliged to stand aside and wait until these special contracts are carried out and completed for two years at all events, and most of them for more than four years. So, notwithstanding the bill upon its face authorizes these contracts to be made now, it takes it out of the power of the Secretary of War to make provision for any payments upon any of them, with these four exceptions, until two years, and for the larger part of the amount until four years have elapsed. Therefore the bill virtually carries within itself a veto. You say it shall be done on the one hand, and you say practically it shall not be done on the other hand.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the Senator from Florida does not take into account that one-half of the $8,000,000 will be expended during the next fiscal year, and that it is already appropriated, or nearly so.

Mr. PASCO. I do not think that the table furnished by the Senator from Maryland quite bears out the statement made by the Senator from Iowa. I am not so familiar with these former contracts as are members of the Committee on Appropriations. [Examining table.] Yes; the Senator from Iowa is correct. The amount in the sundry civil bill for this year is $3,584,000; that is, for the coming year, closing in 1897.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. PASCO. Therefore it still carries the total of the figures I have stated for 1897 and for 1898, though the payments are not equally divided. That makes two years. That is the effect of it.

It does seem to me we had better strike out these continuing contracts altogether than to pretend to enact them and then put it beyond the power of the Secretary of War to enforce them.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I do not think the amendment ought to meet the sanction of the Senate. While I do not agree with the propositions advanced as to the construction of the amendment, I yet think that construing it as fair as it can be it works very injuriously to certain appropriations under the bill. My own construction, however, is first that the Secretary of War by the amendment is only obliged to contract for $10,000,000 per annum of the amount appropriated for these continuing contracts, and that all classes of appropriations are included within this general lowering.

Now, I desire to direct attention to the specific appropriation for the Mississippi River from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio at Cairo. That appropriation in round numbers is $9,000,000. It is a million dollars less than the river and harbor act of 1892 carried. That appropriation is apportioned thus: $1,250,000 as a cash appropriation and $2,583,000 for three years, commencing on the 30th of June, 1897.

This appropriation, although it is under the continuing-contract system for the three years from June, 1897, is not one that looks toward the completion of the work. In that respect the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River is different from an appropriation for the completion of a harbor. An appropriation for the completion of a harbor might as well be extended six years instead of four, even if the four-years plan were adopted under contracts made with the sanction of the Secretary of War. But as to the appropriation for the Mississippi River, construing the amendment to mean that all continuing contracts are to be razeed proportionately, it contemplates running the money for the Mississippi River over six years, thereby cutting off one-third of the amount appropriated for that river, because the sum appropriated was designed for four years, not to complete the improvement, because it will take many years to do that, but as a sum necessary for the next four years for the improvement of the river.

Therefore it is that the amendment would cut off the amount appropriated for the Mississippi River by two years and one-third the amount, and after having submitted to a 10 per cent reduction from the previous act, $1,000,000 (the appropriation was $10,000,000 before), I think the amendment would work peculiar hardship upon the Mississippi River. I therefore draw the attention of the mover of the amendment to this feature of his amendment, with a view to seeing whether or not his amendment can not be improved on by excepting the Mississippi River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. GRAY. I merely rise to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, which is to insert, in line 7, after "for," the words "the payment of"; and after the word "sum," the words "on account of any of said contracts."

Mr. GORMAN. How will the amendment then read?

Mr. GRAY. Then the amendment of the Senator from Maryland will read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall so adjust the contracts herein authorized to be made by apportioning them in such way as not to obligate the Government under this act and all prior acts providing for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which provide for contracts beyond appropriations made, for the payment of a sum on account of any of said contracts exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000 in any one fiscal year for such materials and work authorized to be contracted for in all of said acts.

I offer the amendment to the amendment because the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] rose in his place and made the argument that there is something more in the amendment than appears upon the surface; that it is made to limit the power of the Secretary of War to make any contract or any number of contracts the aggregate of which shall be for more than $10,000,000, whereas as I conceive the object of the Senator from Maryland it is to confine the payment in any one year on account of any of these contracts to the sum of $10,000,000. It is to make the amendment plain.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk may be read for information. I will offer it at the proper time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That this provision shall apply equally to all contracts authorized by this act without regard to any special terms to the contrary contained in the clauses providing for such contracts.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to have the Delaware Bay project and the Hennepin Canal and all the rest of these improvements stand upon the same basis.

Mr. MILLS. Why not say "all contracts and all appropriations"?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all right. I have no objection to it.

Mr. GRAY. I do not care.

Mr. ELKINS. It is getting worse and worse. Nobody can understand the amendment.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to remark that we could not have a much better illustration of the character of this general and comprehensive grab than was offered by the situation when I made the suggestion to amend the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] practically in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] yesterday evening. It was immediately cried out against by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and others, who altogether made a great outcry. But in point of fact the amendment did not withdraw any bone from the cage. It would not have shortened the rations. It would merely have prevented any misunderstanding in regard to the construction which was so well stated by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] a few moments ago. If he be right in that construction, then the amendment which the Senator from Maryland has offered might have embarrassed the appropriations seriously, as was suggested yesterday evening by the Senator from Iowa: and for that reason, in accordance with what the Senator from Maryland said in answer to the Senator from Mississippi, I thought it wise to inquire if the amendment might not be put on.

Of course, there was no purpose to secure any special advantage for any one of the appropriations. The bill has already done it beyond all question. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] is right in his construction. The bill has already secured to those several appropriations their special advantage. The Mississippi River is already taken care of, and we ought at all events as I think to vote down the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. It would destroy the special consideration which the Committee on Commerce have given to the Mississippi River and these particular improvements which need certain regulations. But it is highly important, as it seems to me, highly important to the success of this measure, highly useful to the interests of the country, that we shall provide, as has been argued by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Iowa, some proper limitation upon the amount for which the Secretary of War shall impose obligations upon the Government. Senators say——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. VILAS. I have but five minutes. Senators say that the contracts are to be made only for so much as shall be appropriated by Congress, but is not Congress going to appropriate what the Secretary of War obliges us to incur? Is Congress not going to appropriate what the obligations of the Government require in order to be properly discharged; and if it does not, then what is the value of making contracts if you are not going to give the contractor his specific time of payment and his certainty of receipt of money?

Mr. GORMAN. The only exception is that in the sundry civil bill another branch of the Government attempted to reduce the amount below the contract price and the Senate restored it.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Maryland illustrates it perfectly. The whole value of the system of contracts consists in the Secretary of War being able to make specific and definite terms with contractors.

Now, all that is provided in the amendment is simply that he shall extend the time of the completion of the work in certain cases, and the times of payment during a certain number of years, and if these special exceptions were eliminated from it the provision suggested by the Senator from Maryland would be ample to cover every case there is. As I said before, there is no occasion for any ravening, because no bone was really removed.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I wish to say in the first place that there has been some intimation that the committee have been extravagant in the make-up of the bill, and that, too, by some Senators who had come before that committee and urged increases in almost every case within their States.

Mr. ELKINS. That is right, precisely.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state in addition that the committee did after a desperate effort succeed in knocking out, I think, about three continuing contracts. It came down to the Senate and the Senate forced them back upon the bill, and the committee had to take them whether it wanted them or not. So much for the extravagance, if there has been any extravagance, in the bill.

I recognize that the bill carries a large amount of money. It carries a great deal more than any of us would like to have it carry, but it came from the other House with the continuing contracts on it, and it was impossible for the committee to get rid of them. Senators from all over the Chamber protested whenever an attempt was made to take out one of the contracts.

If the amendment of the Senator from Maryland would save the Government any considerable amount of money, or a single dollar, an argument might be made for it; but the Senator from Maryland himself admits that it will not save one solitary cent, but simply postpone the payment of it for two years probably over and above the part postponed in the bill.

Now, why should that be done? The Senator from Maryland says on account of the condition of the Treasury. There is $268,000,000 in the Treasury to-day. If the deficit continues at $25,000,000 a year we shall still have enough to pay for the river and harbor bill and the running expenses of the Government at the same rate that the receipts are coming in to-day. There is nothing in the amendment. It accomplishes nothing; it saves nothing; and it is not necessary on account of the condition of the Treasury, because there is $168,000,000 in the Treasury over and above the $100,000,000 of reserve. It is a great deal better that the surplus should not accumulate to a large extent in the Treasury. I do not mean to say that wrong appropriations should be made, but when the Senator from Maryland insists that this provision is necessary in order to save the Treasury for this year, the facts do not bear him out, because there is $268,000,000 in the Treasury as shown by the report of the Secretary.

Now, one other word, Mr. President. I do not know what the exact effect of the amendment would be on the Lower Mississippi River. There are better lawyers in the Senate than I am who think it would materially cripple that work and probably stop it altogether, and for that reason I am opposed to the amendment. If it were found necessary to reduce the total amount of the appropriation it could be done in a much better way than by putting an amendment on it, the precise effect of which no man here seems to understand, save and except that it would put it in the power of the Secretary of War to stop one work altogether as might suit him and put all the money upon some other and more valuable work.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What is the amount for the Mississippi River in the bill?

Mr. BERRY. There is an appropriation of about $9,000,000; I think something over that amount. It is $9,600,000 altogether—$2,500,000 after this year (I am not speaking accurately) for each of the succeeding three years, the entire amount to be expended in the contract in four years. The result would be, as I believe, that if the amendment were adopted a certain portion of that appropriation would be lost to the Mississippi River altogether, because it must be expended within four years, and this would stretch it out to six years and would thereby stop the contract.

Mr. WALTHALL. Any curtailment would be that much lost.

Mr. BERRY. Any curtailment would be that much lost. The plans were made by the Mississippi River Commission and by the Chief of Engineers, and this was the least amount upon which they could continue that great work for the next four years.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I am not a member of either committee that has had this matter of appropriation under consideration, and I would not venture to discuss it at this time except for the fact that I shall be called upon soon to vote upon it, and I desire that the reasons for the vote I am to cast may go upon the record.

I came into the Senate this morning favorable to the amendment, understanding nothing more of it than that it aimed to limit the expenditure of the money by the Government for river and harbor purposes. I am strongly impressed with the idea that a very great deal of unnecessary money is appropriated from time to time by the Congress of the United States for these improvements. I wish our Constitution permitted that the Executive might veto any particular item, for I believe that under a provision of that sort we could appropriate moneys actually needed, provide for improvements actually desired, and leave out those that in some years at least have aroused the criticism of the country.

But as I read the amendment and carefully consider its application to the provisions of the bill, I find myself bound to vote against it. I would very gladly join Senators upon this floor in limiting the appropriation or the contract obligation of each and every continuing contract so that the amount provided might be distributed through any number of years. I find that the bill as it came from the other House, on page 99, in line 18, provided that not more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be let by any one of the contracts for which provision is made in the bill shall be authorized or expended in any one year. But the Senate has stricken that out. I believe that a provision of that kind is proper. I believe that a provision as to each specific continuing contract which would adjust and apportion the entire amount of the authorized expenditure from year to year would be in the interest of wise legislation, and I would vote for any such amendment.

I would vote for any amendment which would limit the Secretary of War in his distribution under the contract plan to the expenditure of any certain per cent of a specific appropriation through a number of years. But the present amendment, as I read it and as I must understand it, places the power in the Secretary of War to authorize, first, the total expenditure under one item of appropriation for the next year to the full amount of the contract authorized; and if he does that upon a contract which would provide for an expenditure of $3,000,000 there would then be left to him only $7,000,000 to be distributed among the others. The Secretary of War, under the amendment, could authorize the performance of three contracts to the exclusion of the performance of all the other contracts in the bill.

Therefore, sir, it seems to me that the amendment is vicious and takes the power Congress should reserve to itself and gives it to the Secretary of War, where he may exercise the greatest favoritism and lavish the moneys of the Government upon one locality to the exclusion of all others.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that that is just what the Secretary of War can do now without the amendment, under the bill, except as to the points where they have limited it to one-fourth. I quite agree with the Senator from Nebraska that it would be a great deal better to restore the House provision which the Senate has stricken out as in Committee of the Whole. But I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is a pending amendment to the amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa can be read for information, but no further amendment can be received to the amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Maryland accept my amendment?

Mr. GORMAN. I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. I have no objection to it at all. So that will open the way for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Maryland will have no objection to accepting the amendment which I moved?

Mr. GORMAN. I have very decided objection to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I ask for a vote on it. I supposed that most of the amendments would be accepted by the Senators on the other side.

Mr. HILL. I should like to have read the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 of the amendment, after the word "for," insert the words "the payment of"; after the word "sum," in the same line, insert "on account of said contract"; so as to read:

Which provide for contracts beyond appropriations made for the payment of a sum on account of said contract exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000, etc.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, it seems to me that none of the amendments to the amendment meet the objection suggested by the Senator from Missouri, which is the largest, in my mind, and that is that the discretion is given in the amendment to the Secretary of War to select the work upon which the $10,000,000 is to be expended. If that be the case, we may as well turn over the whole thing to the Secretary of War, for the effect of the amendment is to give him $10,000,000 to expend as he pleases. He may put it on one work if the contract is sufficiently large for any one work to embrace it, or he may distribute it on three works and leave out the whole coast of the United States under his discretion.

I have always understood that it was the duty of the executive officers of the Government to execute the law as Congress makes it. Here a committee of this body have been working for months on the bill to distribute the appropriations around as they may be demanded in the different works, and after they have brought their bill into the Senate we propose to give the Secretary of War the power to annul all the work and to take the appropriations and give them to three works if he wants to do so, leaving out all the rest of us. Does the Senator from Maryland understand it so?

Mr. GORMAN. So far from understanding that to be the case, I understand just the opposite, that every work provided for in the bill the Secretary of War will be obligated to go on with, and the only limitation is that in the aggregate he shall not expend more than $10,000,000 in one year.

Mr. FAULKNER. May I ask the Senator from Texas a question? I am trying to get at the real meaning of the amendment. Does not the other amendment adopted by the Senate limit and control the Secretary so that he can not obligate the Government for over $400,000 in any one year as to any particular improvement?

Mr. MILLS. But under the amendment of the Senator from Maryland he has the power to select the work. That is the point I am on.

Mr. FAULKNER. To the extent of $400,000.

Mr. MILLS. Why would it not be better to say that he shall so adjust the contracts herein authorized to be made by apportioning to each work the amount which is to be expended; that a certain per cent of the appropriation in the bill shall be expended on each work? I do not want to give to any Secretary of War the discretion to select any work that he may please and expend the money on it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the pending amendment, the amendment I offered, may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island has heretofore been read for information. The Chair now understands the Senator to offer it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment add:

Provided, That this provision shall apply equally to the contracts authorized by this act without regard to any special terms to the contrary contained in the clauses providing for such contracts.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Maryland will not object to the amendment. Will he accept it? There certainly ought to be a spirit of fairness in this business.

Mr. VEST. I move to lay the amendment as amended on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. The whole business.

Mr. WALTHALL. The whole thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland on the table. It has not yet been formally amended, the Chair understands.

Mr. MILLS. An amendment to it was accepted by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. I modified the amendment. I had a right to modify it.

Mr. VEST. As modified, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. GORMAN. Let us have a direct vote on the proposition. We had one vote to lay on the table, and that was the last vote taken in the Senate. I suggest that we take a direct vote upon the proposition.

Mr. ELKINS. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri to move to lay the amendment and all the amendments thereto on the table?

Mr. VEST. Yes; the whole thing.

Mr. ELKINS. It will take them all.

Mr. BERRY. It will take them all.

Mr. ELKINS. Then, if the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is laid on the table, it will dispose of the whole brood and family of amendments, all of which obscure the case.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to get in an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. ELKINS. Let it come in and we will kill it with the rest. I am willing that that shall be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reception of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the amendment to the amendment will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the amendment will be read.

Mr. VEST. I am willing to hear it read, but I shall not withdraw my motion or lose my right to make it.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment of Mr. GORMAN as modified insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall so adjust the contracts authorized to be made beyond the appropriations made herein by apportioning them in such a way as not to obligate the Government to pay under said contracts a sum exceeding in the aggregate $12,000,000 in any one fiscal year for such materials and works authorized to be contracted for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Maryland as it has been modified, and all pending amendments to it, on the table.

Mr. VEST. That is the motion.

Mr. GORMAN. On that question let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], but as he and I agree upon this matter, I will record my vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], but my pair has been transferred, and I vote "yea."

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SQUIRE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. The Senator from New York is, I understand, in favor of the amendment, and the Senator from New Hampshire votes the same way.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not paired with the Senator from New York on this vote, not unless it is a party question.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the negative). I am requested by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] to pair with his colleague [Mr. BLANCHARD], and I therefore withdraw my vote and announce my pair.

Mr. CANNON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on this vote with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. He is not present, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to state that if my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] were here he would vote "nay" on the motion to lay the amendment on the table. He is in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SQUIRE (after having voted in the affirmative). Under the circumstances, if it is understood that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] can not be paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], I will withdraw my vote. I should like to exchange pairs; I should like to vote "yea" on the motion, but I understand that the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay" if present. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. I vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. I will pair my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and the Senator from Washington can vote.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Mills,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Elkins,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Shoup,

Daniel,	Irby,	Teller,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. LINDSAY. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, to take the place of the amendment just voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 10, page 100, insert:

Provided, That except where otherwise herein specifically authorized, the Secretary of War shall so adjust the contracts provided for by this act that not more than 20 per cent of any one of the appropriations to be expended under a continuing contract shall be expended in any one fiscal year.

Mr. FRYE. I think that there must be a misunderstanding about the limitation which has been proposed in the bill. I think the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] misunderstood it. The bill came from the House of Representatives with a provision only as to those continuing contracts where the sum to be in the end expended exceeded $500,000, that a 25 per cent limitation should be put on. Almost on the second or third page of the bill is a continuing contract for $517,000, and just before it comes one for $500,000. Under that limitation, the $500,000 contract could be completed in a year and paid for, and under the 25 per cent limitation the $517,000 contract would take four years. There is no justice in that; there is no propriety in it. The large majority of these contracts are between $500,000 and $900,000. There is not the slightest difficulty about completing these contracts in two years; and in these contracts time is just as important as money, and yet under the 25 per cent limitation, if it was an $800,000 contract, you would have to take four years about it; and if it was a $700,000 contract four years about it. At the same time, if it was a $4,000,000 contract you could expend $1,000,000 a year. There were several of those—the Hennepin Canal is for nearly $5,000,000, and you could expend a million and a quarter a year; in the Superior and Duluth, $4,000,000, you could spend a million a year. I could name several others where a million dollars a year could be expended, but if it happens to be a $517,000 contract, one very important, and just as important as any other, it would have taken four years to carry it out. There was no justice in that limitation, nor would there be any more justice in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. The committee considered that question and made a limitation on all these continuing contracts that no more than $400,000 a year should be expended on any one of them.

Mr. GORMAN. Except those stated in the bill.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator did not let me finish.

Then we excepted—not the Hennepin Canal, for the Senate excepted that—but we excepted Superior and Duluth. Nobody questions the importance of completing that contract at the earliest day possible. We excepted the Delaware harbor of refuge, where thousands and thousands of vessels will seek its shelter every year, because of its great importance, and we excepted the Mississippi River. You must make the appropriations for the Mississippi River annually if you are going to make them at all.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. According to the estimate furnished as to the amount carried by this bill between the continuous contracts and the money directly appropriated the sum total to be appropriated is about $72,000,000 in round numbers. Will the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, inform me as to how much of that money under this bill can be spent for the next fiscal year, provided the Secretary of War should make all the contracts for the amount of money appropriated and that the contractors should be able to perform the work?

Mr. FRYE. I have never figured that, but I imagine it would amount to $25,000,000.

Mr. SMITH. Then, as I understand it, the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], according to his statement, would make the amount to be expended $22,000,000. Do I understand, then, that the only difference between the amount of money under any circumstances that could be spent under the bill as it stands and under the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is $3,000,000?

Mr. FRYE. No. The Senator asked me under the continuing contracts. There is $12,000,000 appropriated here that can be expended.

Mr. SMITH. What I want to get at as near as I can is as to how much of the money, when this appropriation bill shall have been passed, will be called upon or could, under any circumstances, be called from the Treasury to be paid out during the coming year.

Mr. FRYE. I have never estimated it. I hold to a little different opinion from what has been expressed on this floor in relation to this bill. I have never known a time yet when the Secretary of War did not refrain from making an expenditure if he desired to do so, I do not care what the appropriation was nor where it was. Under the law, if he desires not to expend the money, he has the right to refuse, and he has refused to expend it. Take the case of Port Orford, which came up here the other day. There was an appropriation made ten years ago of $170,000 which has not yet been expended. Why? Because the Secretary of War used his discretion and refused to expend it.

I go one step further. I understand that in this bill it is in the discretion of the Secretary of War to make these contracts, or not to make them, and there is where I differ with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I know what the decisions of the courts have been; but heretofore, in nine cases out of ten at any rate, when we have made a continuing contract the language used was: "The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to make a contract"; and in every instance in this bill it is that he "may make a contract." I believe that that language was used by the House committee and by the House itself for the purpose of leaving in the hands of the Secretary of War a discretion as to what of these contracts he shall now enter into, what he shall enter into a year from now, and what he may enter into two years from now, or whether he shall enter into any of them or not. Therefore I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH. I am sorry to be obliged to interrupt the chairman of the committee for a moment longer. My object, Mr. President, in asking the question I have was simply that on the face of the bill which is now pending it will appear to the public, or it would at least to the ordinary mind, that the bill was carrying an expenditure of $70,000,000, or three or four times the amount ever heretofore appropriated in a similar bill. I think in justice to the members of this body that it should not go out in that form.

I am in favor of fair appropriation bills for river and harbor purposes. But with the present condition of the general business of this country and with the general condition of the receipts and disbursements of the Government Treasury, I say, notwithstanding some of our friends have refefred to the large amount which is now in the Treasury, partly there from the sale of bonds, that we are not justified in appropriating an amount of money greater than was ever heretofore appropriated by any Congress for this purpose. Now, if ever, is the time in the history of our country when we should show to the people, while they are in a state of distress, that we are not going to embarrass them either by additional taxation or by the sale of bonds, by the passage of any bill such as this, which is not necessary at this time.

I speak, Mr. President, on this question, not as I might as a partisan, glad to be able to see the majority of this Senate and of Congress passing a bill unprecedented in the history of this country, but I speak as a Senator, representing no party but the great American people; and I say here that when we undertake to go before the American people with a bill double that of any passed in the best times ever known in the history of our country, I doubt very much whether it will meet their approval.

I hope, if there is any question as to the amount the Treasury will be obliged to pay out on this account for the coming year, that some amendment may be offered to limit the expenditure. I do not care whether it is the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Treasury upon whom the limitation is placed; but I do feel that I should like to vote intelligently, and I should like to know how much I am going to vote shall be expended in this direction. Without that information I can not see how any Senator can properly be called upon to cast his vote for a measure as to which he is so largely in doubt as to the amount of money it carries.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether I understand him to say that so far as where direct appropriations are made this bill is mandatory upon the Secretary of War, but so far as appropriations are to be made under contemplated contracts the making of those contracts and consequent expenditure of the money under those contracts is merely permissive?

Mr. FRYE. I did not say so, Mr. President. I said that both were in the discretion of the Secretary of War and that he had always exercised that discretion.

Mr. LINDSAY. Then, Mr. President, when this bill becomes a law it will be nothing more than an enabling act, which may be carried out by the Secretary of War or suspended at his discretion. I do not believe that any Department of the Government will reach the conclusion that this is a mere enabling act, intended merely to empower the Secretary of War to make or to refuse to make these public improvements at his will or discretion. He will understand that it is his duty to carry out the expressed will of Congress as it appears in this bill, and the only discretion which he can properly exercise will be as to limiting the time within which the money shall be expended.

I think it is the duty of Congress, when it comes to authorize contracts to be made for the expenditure of $65,000,000, to indicate to the Secretary of War its opinion as to what this limitation ought to be; and it does seem to me if he be authorized to make contracts which will involve the expenditure of $13,000,000 a year under the contract system, with the knowledge that each succeeding year other appropriations will be made, Congress should say to the country that not exceeding twenty or twenty-five million dollars a year ought to be taken out of the public Treasury for the purpose of public improvements under existing conditions.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will ask the Senator from Kentucky to permit me to interrupt him. It may be that he has forgotten the limitation already in this bill. There is a limitation in the bill that the Secretary of War shall not contract, as I understand, with reference to any of these continuing contracts for an amount to be paid annually exceeding $400,000. That is a decided limitation; and I think that is in the bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. Is that now in the bill?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is in the bill now; and in the construction of these improvements there can not be expended in any one year an amount exceeding $400,000 on any one continuing contract.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask if any estimate has been made as to what the amount of the annual expenditure will be if the Secretary of War goes to the extent of $400,000 under these various appropriations?

Mr. FRYE. No estimate has been made.

Mr. LINDSAY. Then the Committee on Commerce can not tell whether the expenditure of the coming year will be fifteen, eighteen, or twenty-five million dollars under that limitation?

Mr. FRYE. I estimated it at $25,000,000; but it was not a careful estimate.

Mr. LINDSAY. For the first year?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is, including appropriations that are not to be expended?

Mr. FRYE. No; the second year the bill appropriates about twelve million two or three hundred thousand dollars. My own impression would be that if we made a contract in every single case, next year it would reach at any rate $25,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. How much expenditure of money would it require to fulfill the terms of the bill if all the contracts authorized to be made were made?

Mr. FRYE. There is a restriction, as the Senator knows, in the bill of $400,000—that in no one contract can there be over that sum expended.

Mr. ALLEN. But that is not the question I asked the Senator. Taking the appropriations altogether, with the money which will be necessary to discharge the obligations which may be incurred under the bill, the contracts which may be entered into, how much money, in round numbers, will it take to exhaust the bill?

Mr. FRYE. It takes about $64,000,000 in continuing contracts, and they all run over four years, and one of them probably will run eight years.

Mr. ALLEN. Is that in addition to the present appropriations?

Mr. FRYE. That is in addition to the appropriation of $12,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. So it will make about $76,000,000, all told?

Mr. FRYE. I should think so.

Mr. LINDSAY. I think $13,000,000 spent under the continuing-contract system is an excessive sum, after the Senate has decided against the limitation of $10,000,000. I shall therefore insist upon my amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to hear the amendment read.

Mr. FRYE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ELKINS. What is the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of line 10, on page 100, the following:

Provided, That, except where otherwise herein specifically authorized, the Secretary of War shall so adjust the contracts provided for by this act that not more than 20 per cent of any one of the appropriations to be expended under a continuing contract shall be expended in any one fiscal year.

Mr. ELKINS. There is the same objection to that amendment as to the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to lay the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but he and I agree on this question, and I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired generally with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], but I am assured by his colleague [Mr. BURROWS] that on this question he would vote "yea," if present, and as I vote the same way I will record my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARK] is absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. CANNON. On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to announce that on this vote my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who is paired generally with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. By this transfer of pairs the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] is at liberty to vote. My colleague would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand that the exchange of pairs as made is satisfactory, and so my vote in the affirmative may stand.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CALL] on this vote is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON. I understand my pair has been transferred, and I therefore vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Aldrich,	Elkins,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Vest,
Baker,	Frye,	Perkins,	Walthall,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Blackburn,	George,	Platt,	Wetmore,
Burrows,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,	White,
Butler,	Lodge,	Quay,	Wilson.
Caffery,	McBride,	Sewell,
Cameron,	Mills,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Squire,

NAYS—13.

Allen,	Gear,	Kyle,	Sherman,
Bate,	Gorman,	Lindsay,	Thurston,
Brown,	Harris,	Martin,	Vilas.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Mitchell, Wis.
Cockrell,	Hill,	Peffer,

NOT VOTING—34.

Allison,	Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Roach,
Blanchard,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Smith,
Brice,	Gibson,	Mantle,	Teller,
Call,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Gray,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Carter,	Hale,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Chilton,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Wolcott.
Clark,	Hoar,	Pritchard,
Daniel,	Irby,	Proctor,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. HILL. On page 14, line 14, in order that the item there may have further consideration in the conference committee, I move to strike out "five" and insert "ten."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, page 14, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "ten"; so as to read:

Improving harbor at Huntington, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BATE. In line 5, on page 65, in the clause relating to the improvement of Cumberland River below Nashville, Tenn., before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "eighty" and insert "two hundred and fifty"; so as to make the appropriation $250,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I beg to say that this amendment proposes to provide for a continuing contract for $250,000. The work can be completed, I think, within eighteen months or two years. It is for the removal of an obstacle in the Cumberland River.

It is a very small amount. Its friends went before the Committee on Commerce, but I regret to say they did not allow us but $80,000 for the continuing contract which was appropriated by the House. I trust the Senate will agree to make it $250,000. Though the appropriation involves but a small amount, it is of great interest to our people. The commercial organizations, the boards of trade, and the people generally are much interested in it and ask that I present the matter to the Senate. I do so, and I hope the Senate will accept the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 5, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "eighty" and insert "two hundred and fifty"; so as to to read:

Improving Cumberland River below Nashville, Tenn.: Continuing improvement, $250,000, etc.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am not at all surprised that Republican Senators should support this bill, as it authorizes the making of large contracts for the expenditure of money. I am surprised, however, that Democratic Senators should give aid and comfort to this seeming squandering of the public money. Of course these contracts will be made in the year 1897; they will be made evidently by a Republican Secretary of War, if the present prospects are realized, and no doubt these contracts will be made with a class of gentlemen who will be willing to contribute very largely and very liberally to the support of the Republican party in its campaigns. I can understand, therefore, from a mere party standpoint, why Republican Senators should support this measure. I can not understand, however, why Democrats should do so, nor why Populists should do so.

There is one matter about this bill that we ought to know, and I regret very much that the chairman of the committee has failed thus far to enlighten the country upon the prospect that we have in view at another Congress of appropriating money for the improvement of additional creeks. The bill itself carries an appropriation for the improvement of many creeks and one mill pond, as I recollect it. I do not recall any ditches. I think there is one ditch, however, in New York. But the bill requires estimates to be made for the improvement of 16 different creeks for the improvement of which appropriations have never been made heretofore. The first one is Five Mile Creek, in Alabama. The second is Petaluma Creek, in California. Then there are Cedar Creek, in Delaware; Suisun Creek, in California; Orange Creek, in the State of Florida; Oldmans Creek, Dividing Creek, and Tuckerton Creek, in New Jersey; Catskill Creek and Coney Island Creek, in the State of New York; Potecasi Creek, in North Carolina; Tonawanda Creek, in the State of Pennsylvania; Redwood Creek, California; Mantua Creek, New Jersey, and Whatcom Creek, in the State of Washington.

I think it is important that the country should know that the bill not only improves many creeks and obscure estuaries in the country that are of no earthly account for commercial purposes, but that the contemplated policy is that it will take in all the creeks in all the different States of the Union, especially those States lying along the Atlantic and Pacific Seaboard.

I think the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce did not do the country full justice when he failed to enlighten the taxpayers that the bill which carries with it something like seventy-six and a half million dollars of money, immediate and prospective, is to be supplemented by a bill in the Fifty-fifth Congress which shall take in all the creeks from Maine to Florida and from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. I think the people ought to be warned or ought to be informed of an appropriation policy upon the part of the incoming Administration which will take into consideration the creeks.

Let me say one thing more. I observe in the bill that we have made an appropriation to improve what is known as Yellow Mill Pond, in the State of New Hampshire. That is my recollection. It has been several days since I read it.

Mr. FRYE. Connecticut.

Mr. ALLEN. In Connecticut. It is all the same.

Mr. FRYE. Not quite.

Mr. ALLEN. The people can be informed and rest assured that as soon as we get through with the estuaries and the lagoons and the bayous and the creeks we will reach the ditches of the country, and then we will reach the mill ponds.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is talking about things that he knows nothing on earth about.

Mr. ALLEN. Thank you.

Mr. FRYE. He is talking about creeks as if a creek because it is called a creek has no navigation on it. I told the Senator the other day, when the same question was raised, that there is an appropriation here for Newtown Creek, and that there is $67,000,000 of commerce on Newtown Creek.

The play on the word "creek" is old. It smells of antiquity. It has been used over and over again. It is the old talk of running a ship on dew and all that sort of thing. Let me tell the Senator there is no creek appropriated for which has not received the approval of two engineers, first a preliminary examination, next a survey, and then a declaration that commerce requires it. Let me tell him that the farmers all through the South depend upon these very appropriations to get their products of cotton and tobacco to the markets.

Mr. GRAY. In competition with the railroads.

Mr. FRYE. These rivers and bayous and creeks are little arteries of commerce, to be sure; they require only small appropriations, but they go directly to the poor working people and the farmers of the country and not to the great commercial centers. The Senator had better investigate the bill before he undertakes to abuse it by talking about creeks.

Besides, I am sick of having Senators rise on this floor and object to the river and harbor bill when the same Senators come before the committee and demand at the hands of the committee increased appropriations.

Mr. ALLEN. I regret very much that the Senator from Maine should misconstrue my remarks. I am in hearty sympathy with the bill as it exists, of course, and the prospective appropriations, and I was simply saying that I thought the Senator from Maine had failed to discharge his duty only so far as he failed to call the attention of the country to the fact that all the creeks in the country and all the mill ponds after a time are to be improved.

I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall make appropriations to improve the creeks and rivers of the State which I have the honor in part to represent here. I shall not regard it as an offense if he does so, and I think the Senator is premature in his remarks that I am talking about something I know nothing about. I have seen some of the creeks in this country. It is in accordance with the policy of the bill, and I say this at the hazard of what little interest the State of Nebraska may have in it, whether the Senator from Maine may like it or not, to expend thousands and millions of dollars in worthless improvements of creeks and estuaries and bayous. The argument that the Senator from Maine makes here has been made a hundred times before. There never was a reckless and inexcusable expenditure of public money that an artful man could not conjure up a subterfuge or excuse for it.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I hope the heated forensic passage between the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] as to creeks and bayous will not divert the Senate from the simple proposition I have made, for it is a just and proper one. It is simply to increase the amount of the House appropriation from eighty thousand to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Upon the question of "creeks" I have no comment to make, except that my proposed amendment is not for a "creek," but for the Cumberland River, navigable 500 miles, and 200 miles of it between the city of Nashville and its mouth. Thousands of tons of freight annually go down its bosom to the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and is thus transferred around the country. There are two railroads down that river—one on either bank. They control the rate of transportation of the products grown in the fertile country drained by that river and its tributaries. I propose by the amendment at least to help to check the monopolistic tendency of the railroads that run down the banks of the river and bring them to a sense of propriety in regard to the amount they should charge for the transportation of the farm products raised in that immediate country.

I will not be driven from what I believe to be my duty by the idea that is thrown out by the Senator from Nebraska as to the course to be pursued by Democrats. Mr. President, I do not believe in these extravagant expenditures that increase the burden of taxes upon our already overburdened people. I do not approve of all or even half that is found in the pending bill, but because I do not shall I stand idly by and see others taking the loaf while I can not get even a slice on the meritorious amendment I offer in the interest of the people in my State? The cleaning out of the rivers and harbors is a great advantage to our country, for it brings about much-needed competition; but it should be done with moderation and propriety, and I do not myself approve of the extravagance that is in this bill, and I have voted every time an opportunity has been offered for the reduction of the amount of $70,000,000. I will do so again. But, sir, my proposition should not be defeated simply on account of the declamation of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] or the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. It should stand on its merits.

Mr. FRYE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BATE. I suppose the Senator from Maine will allow me to get through, certainly, before he moves to shelve my motion.

Mr. FRYE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I supposed he had concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Tennessee to yield the floor.

Mr. BATE. I want to have it understood that the Cumberland is not a creek, but a splendid and beautiful river. It is a stream which bears tons of commerce upon its bosom; one which contributes much to the advantage of a half million people who live upon its banks. The appropriation asked for by this amendment would relieve the chief obstruction to its navigation at the mouth of Harpeth River, between the city of Nashville and the Ohio River. It has no connection with the just and proper appropriation applied to this river above the city of Nashville.

Mr. FRYE. For this river there is one item in the bill for $80,000 and in another item there is a continuing contract for $600,000.

Mr. BATE. It is altogether a different proposition. That is above and this is below the city of Nashville. I tried to make it appear that at the mouth of the river, where this applies, there is an obstacle that should be removed, and with that obstacle removed we will have two months' additional regular navigation of the river and help the laborer and the producer transport their products at reasonable rates.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. FRYE. As chairman of the committee I feel that it is my duty to reply to a certain extent to what the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has said in relation to the bill, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that, representing the committee, I may occupy about fifteen minutes of the time of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, there never has been a time in my experience when there has been such a universal demand for river and harbor improvements as this very year. There is hardly a great harbor in this country hitherto regarded as ample for all requirements of commerce which has not been persistent in its demands for wider and deeper channels to accommodate the great freight ships of the world. It has come from away down in the magnificent harbor of Portland, from Boston, New York, all over the Great Western Lakes—the lakes 2 or 3 feet lower than usual and the ships twice as large as ever. From them this demand has come to Congress. It has been an irresistible demand, for it is the demand of the American people. It is in response to that demand that the bill has been reported by the two committees of the two Houses.

Mr. President, the commerce of this Republic in the last quarter of a century has increased so enormously that it is the marvel of the whole world. It is without parallel in all history. I have heard it estimated—I dare not myself make an estimate—that anywhere from twenty to forty billion dollars' worth of domestic commerce is transported every year over the 175,000 miles of our railroads and by over 8,000,000 tons of documented and undocumented vessels, a fleet three times greater than that of France and Germany and Italy and Spain and England combined engaged in the same business. It is, I say, the marvel of the age. Mr. Depew, in a speech only a short time ago—I remember seeing it in the press—declared that our commerce transported over our railroads 100 miles exceeded by 200,000,000 tons the commerce of the whole world. I take it there is no Senator here who will not be ready to admit that a great factor, a very valuable factor, in that immensely increasing commerce has been the constantly decreasing freight charges.

Twenty years ago we paid our railroads 3½ cents a ton-mile. It cost them 2½ cents a ton-mile. Last year we paid those same railroads seventy-eight one-hundredths of 1 cent a ton-mile, and the cost was about one-half of a cent. You take freights by steam on the ocean and they are only one-fifth of those by rail, while by sail they are only one-tenth. The voyage from California to Europe with a load of wheat is 15,000 miles. The charges of freight on that wheat are from $7.50 to $10 a ton. That is five one-hundredths of a cent a ton-mile up to sixty-seven one-thousandths of a cent.

The people of this country are not content. They are demanding that those freights shall still go down. How can they be further reduced? Can your railroads carry any more cheaply? I assert that they can not unless some new motive power is discovered which economizes in the matter of fuel. Where can you carry it more cheaply? On the water, and nowhere else; and for that reason the people of the United States to-day, the intelligent business men of the country, are everywhere demanding water improvements. Did you notice a few months ago that by an overwhelming vote the people of New York appropriated $9,000,000 to broaden and deepen the Erie Canal? What for? To decrease freight charges, and for nothing else. Have you noticed that there are demands to-day coming from great boards of trade that there shall be dams built to raise the water in the Lakes? What for? To accommodate the great freight ships of the Lakes and make freights cheaper. Have you noticed that the demands are coming from all over the country for great canals and waterways from the Lakes to the ocean? What for? To make freights cheaper. Have you noticed that the people are demanding the building of the Nicaragua Canal? What for? To bring the Pacific and the Atlantic 10,000 miles nearer to each other and to decrease the freights one-half at least and build up the commerce enormously, both domestic and foreign.

Sir, you can see, and if the Senators are in touch with the American people they will feel it, too, that the demand in this country is for accommodations on the water. How will the people get them? The United States has exclusive jurisdiction over navigable streams in this country. There is only one place to obtain those appropriations and to secure those improvements, and that is from Congress. We have been responding for the last ten years and we have been supposed to be responding with a reasonable degree of liberality. Have we been throwing away money? Have we been too extravagant? We have spent millions of dollars on the great Mississippi River. Is it money thrown away? Year before last it took 3,500,000 tons of documented and undocumented vessels to carry the freight on that river alone. I admit it is a vexatious and troublesome river, but can the United States refuse to make appropriations for it and let it become a useless one? We made heavy appropriations for a deep-water harbor at Galveston. Was it money thrown away? Such a harbor will accommodate a portion of this country greater than all the islands of Great Britain. Is that money thrown away? I picked up a moment ago the statement of the local engineer. Let me show you what he says. Colonel Miller says:

> The depth at Galveston March 2, 1893, 13 feet; March 2, 1894, 14 feet; March 2, 1895, 15 feet; March 2, 1896, 22 feet. From the date of my arrival here in March, 1893, to the present date the channel has deepened 8½ feet. There is no doubt that 25 feet of water will be obtained in a few months, and ultimately a depth of 30 feet.

Is it wasting the money of the people of the United States to obtain a deep-water harbor at Galveston, floating vessels of a draft of 30 feet and accommodating a third of this great Republic, and that third being the agriculturists of the country?

We have appropriated a large sum of money for a magnificent lock at the Soo. It was placed under a continuing contract. It has taken five or six hundred thousand dollars a year. Is it money wasted? Last year two and a half million of tonnage passed through the Soo Canal in eight months' time, more than passed through the Suez Canal, which carries the commerce of the world, in an entire year. We made great appropriations for a deep channel through the Lakes. Is there a Senator here who will say that money is thrown away to maintain a channel of 21 feet through those lakes and accommodate the magnificent commerce of that section of the country?

Mr. President, take the Alabama River. I see the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] sitting here. We placed the Alabama River under the continuing contract system, and the Savannah Harbor also, to obtain, I think, 24 feet of water and a channel 500 feet wide. It has been accomplished. How accomplished? At a cost of 7.7 cents a cubic yard, the lowest price ever paid by the United States for dredging. Now, what will it do? Take the Alabama River alone. You lay out $50,000 more on the Warrior and the Tombigbee rivers, and you will open up to the commerce of the world inexhaustible mines of the best coal on the globe, which can be landed on shipboard at Mobile for $1.25 a ton. One year's business will save the people every single dollar appropriated for that improvement. I might go on almost endlessly in this direction. But I will not trespass on the Senate.

The next question is, Why do you not finish some of these improvements and stop? Why does not commerce stop? We can not complete and stop, because the demands of the people for cheap freights have doubled the size of freight ships in the last ten years, and a channel 300 feet wide and 12 feet deep, ten years ago ample, will not permit the freight ships of to-day to turn around in it nor pass through unless they can walk on the bottom. Another thing, why do you have such large ships? Because small ships are eliminated to-day from the problem. They can not carry at a profit at present rates. It is utterly impossible. It is only the great ships that can be successfully run. Low freights have compelled great ships, and great ships are to-day demanding these improvements.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] talks about creeks and bayous. That has been the fashion with river and harbor critics for years. Such talk is stale and such fault-finders have not the facts. To-day under the law how are you to secure an improvement for a harbor? We will suppose the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] desires to have an improvement for a river in his State. What is the course to be pursued under the law? He comes to the Committee on Commerce and gets a preliminary survey in the bill. What is that? It requires an engineer officer to go to the locality, make a careful and thorough examination into the commerce, present and prospective, then to determine whether or not under all circumstances the locality is entitled to improvement, whether or not the interests of commerce will justify it. He makes his report. If unfavorable, that is the end of it. We hear no more about it. About a third of them are ended in that way.

If, on the contrary, he reports that it is worthy of improvement, then two years from that time there is an item in the next river and harbor bill, providing for a survey, an estimate, and a project. The local engineer makes his survey, his project, and his estimate, reports to the Chief of Engineers, the Chief examines carefully both reports, and then at the end of four years he sends them to Congress with his recommendation. Then the committees in both Houses make their careful examinations, and if they agree with those officers Congress makes an appropriation. Now, pray tell me how a miserable creek or a useless bayou can secure a place in the river and harbor bill through that devious route which it must travel? I say it is absolutely impossible.

There has been extravagance in the use of money for river and harbor improvements. I admit it. But what kind of an extravagance? Too small appropriations. Let me illustrate: The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] desires a harbor in his State improved. There is a project for dredging. It will cost a million dollars. It has been recommended by the Corps of Engineers, after the first and second examinations, and the local engineer estimates that $200,000 ought to be appropriated for the coming year; that that amount can be profitably expended. The Chief of Engineers looks it over and he finds that adding all the recommendations of the local engineers together will make a river and harbor bill of $70,000,000. So he cuts this item down one-half, and recommends $100,000. Then the two committees of Congress find that the aggregate of the Chief will reach $30,000,000, and they make another cut, and the result is that it gets, say, $50,000 that year. That must suffice for two years. Now, the contractor must bid on a fifty-thousand-dollar job only. It takes all the paraphernalia it would require if it were a million-dollar contract. So he charges double what he would if he had the entire contract.

The $50,000 is expended. The next year he gets nothing because we only have a river and harbor bill once in two years. At the end of the next year the currents, the storms, and the waves have swept away the $50,000, and that is repeated year after year. In twenty years that improvement would not be completed under our old plan of doing business, and every dollar thus appropriated in nine cases out of ten was wasted. We started with Galveston in just that way. We appropriated $500,000 year after year and made no headway at all.

I saw very plainly how that was an extravagance, and a few years ago proposed to the Senate Committee on Commerce that we try an experiment. I knew that in Europe where they wished to make an improvement of any importance they first appropriated the entire amount of money necessary, then made their contracts, and the contractors drew on the money so appropriated until completion was reached. I proposed that we select half a dozen important improvements and direct the Secretary of War to make contracts to complete them. It was done in several instances. We selected, first, Galveston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, St. Marys Lock, Hay Lake Channel. Nobody questions the importance of any of them. Nearly all of them are right on the ragged edge of completion to-day, and under the old plan they would not have been completed within ten years. How about the cost?

Mr. PASCO. Some of them are completed.

Mr. FRYE. Some of them are completed. How about the cost? Our improvements before that time had always cost us more than the estimates. How about it this time? We saved $900,000 on Galveston. I have read to you the result there. We saved on the lock at Sault Ste. Marie $768,000. We saved on Baltimore Channel 15 per cent, on Hay Lake Channel 34 per cent, and in all these cases we saved as much in time as in money. How about Philadelphia? The estimates at Philadelphia were $4,300,000. The entire contract was let for $2,000,000. We saved in that single contract $2,000,000; the work is nearly complete, and the Philadelphians are rejoicing in their great harbor.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator excuse me for a question?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator when he says "saved" does he mean to say that it would have cost that much more under other circumstances?

Mr. FRYE. I mean to say the engineers estimated the cost of removing the islands at Philadelphia at $4,300,000, and that it would have cost every dollar of that, and probably more, as is shown by our experience in the past. But being authorized to make a contract for the entire work, they actually let it for a good deal less than one-half the price the dredgers had ever offered to take it for before. That is what I mean.

Mr. SMITH. In other words, the difference between the estimate of the engineers and the price paid is the difference you claim was saved.

Mr. FRYE. That is a play on words. I do not care anything about that.

Mr. SMITH. It is not a play on words. It is a statement of fact.

Mr. FRYE. In the next bill we inserted the Hudson River; the Charleston Harbor, which has been completed, and is a perfect success; Savannah; St. Johns River; Mobile Harbor, completed, a success; Mobile Bay; the Cascades; ship channel through the lakes 21 feet deep. We saved all the way from 15 to 50 per cent on all of these contracts and saved more in time. Let me give you an illustration. The estimate for the lake ship channel was $3,340,000. We let it for $1,304,000 and the work is about done. We saved one-half the cost and more than one-half the time. Take Mobile Bay. I told you what the dredging was—7.7 cents a cubic yard. Never before have we had it done for less than 12 cents. Take Humboldt Bay, California. The estimate was $1,715,000. We let it for $750,000, a million dollars less than the estimate, and the other day a picture was sent to me which showed a steamer sailing right into the bay, the work being done.

Now, Mr. President, why has the other House provided for continuing contracts in the pending river and harbor bill to the amount of $64,000,000? Why has the Committee on Commerce on the part of the Senate approved of that action? There are items in the bill that I have been against and am against. Yet why am I able to assert in this presence that this bill is a good bill, promotive of the best interests both of commerce and of the working people of this Republic? I hesitate not to make such a declaration because of the lessons taught me during the experience of the last ten years, and he is a foolish man who reads history written and profits nothing from its teachings.

I thank the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SMITH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is necessarily absent. He and I agreeing upon this question, I record my vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but I am assured that if he were present, he would vote "yea," and I cast the same vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. Do I understand that the same transfer heretofore made applies to this vote?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Nebraska will make the same transfer made twice before to-day.

Mr. THURSTON. Then I transfer my pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under the transfer of pairs announced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] I vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I wish to pair him with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], so that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] can vote.

Mr. BRICE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. I wish to announce that if my colleague [Mr. CALL] were present, he would vote "yea." He is out of the city at the present time and is not paired.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is absent, but he is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—57.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Allison,	Dubois,	Martin,	Squire,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FRYE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask the consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Indian war veterans bill that we had up a few days ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was read.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It was read at that time. I do not think it will take long. Perhaps it can be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. VEST. I should be very glad if the Senator from Oregon would let me have a bill passed which has been read, in order to get it into conference. It will not take long, I presume.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Very well.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 2698. The bill was read the other day, and at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] the proceeding was suspended.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill was read in full.

Mr. VEST. Yes; it was read in full.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. By unanimous consent on a former day it was agreed that immediately upon the passage of the river and harbor bill, which has just been passed, the resolution in relation to seating Mr. Du Pont, of Delaware, should be taken up for consideration and be continued until a vote should be reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have read from the RECORD the agreement referred to by the Senator from Indiana.

The Secretary read as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland will restate his request.

Mr. GORMAN. It is that upon the passage of the river and harbor appropriation bill, the next morning, immediately after the routine business, the resolution proposing to seat Mr. Du Pont shall be taken up and continued under consideration, and that the vote shall be taken not later than 5 o'clock on the second day.—Congressional Record, page 4772.

Mr. TURPIE. I see that I had misapprehended the text of the unanimous-consent agreement. I thought it provided that the resolution should be taken up immediately after the passage of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state to the Senator from Indiana that I was under the same impression until a few moments ago, but in counseling with some gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber my attention was attracted to the RECORD, and I saw it was the unanimous agreement that the next morning after the conclusion of the river and harbor bill that resolution should be proceeded with. So the Du Pont case will come up to-morrow morning under the order heretofore made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to offer an amendment on the part of the minority of the committee in conformity with the precedents upon the subject. I move to insert "not" before "entitled."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask that the amendment be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to take up House bill 2698. It has been already read in full.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to act upon the committee amendments and we can take up the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois when that part of the bill is reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 1, to insert after line 25 the following proviso:

Provided also, That said proposed bridge shall not be located within one-half mile of any bridge already constructed across said river.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Illinois has an amendment to propose to the provision. He desires to strike out "one-half" and insert "three-fourths."

Mr. CULLOM. I move to strike out the words "one-half" and insert the words "three-fourths of 1"; so as to read "within three-fourths of 1 mile of any bridge."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 1, section 9, after the word "That," to insert "as"; so as to read:

That as a principal reason for giving authority to build the bridge herein contemplated is to secure reasonable rates and tolls to that class of traffic described in this act for passage over the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 8, after the word "The," where it first occurs, to strike out "said"; in the same line, after the word "corporation," to strike out "or individuals"; in line 11, after the word "directors," to strike out "or individuals owning" and insert "of the corporation owning or controlling"; so as to read:

That said corporation may transport on said bridge and approaches thereto persons and property of the class described in this act, and may allow others so to do; and said bridge and approaches may be used for the transportation of all that class of persons and property described in this act, under such regulations as the directors of said corporation or the parties owning the said bridge may prescribe. The corporation owning the said bridge may take, receive, and collect such rates and tolls for travel, passage, or transportation over said bridge and approaches as the directors of the corporation owning or controlling said bridge may from time to time fix and establish, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 31, after the word "said," to strike out "directors or individuals owning" and to insert "corporation owning or controlling"; in line 35, after the word "over," to strike out "the same" and insert "said bridge"; and in line 36, after the word "shall," to strike out "in either event"; so as to read:

In case said corporation owning or controlling said bridge shall operate a street-car line or permit any street-car company to operate a street-car line on said bridge and approaches, the fare for a single passenger over said bridge for persons over 5 years of age shall not exceed 5 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 11, in the following words:

SEC. 11. That said corporation shall have power to acquire title to lands, by condemnation or otherwise, as may be necessary for the construction of said bridge and approaches thereto, in accordance with the laws of the State or States wherein title to such property may be necessary to the construction of such bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 12, in the following words:

SEC. 12. That the said corporation, its assigns, successors, grantees, mortgagees, representatives, and successors in interest, may, from time to time, borrow money at any rate of interest and issue bonds or other evidences of indebtedness bearing such rate of interest and payable at such time and at such place or places as may thereby be deemed advisable or proper, and may secure such bonds or other indebtedness by mortgage of such bridge and approaches and such tolls and of the privileges, rights, and franchises given by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to amend by inserting at the end of line 20, in section 1, the words "or in the navigation of the river"; so as to read:

And it shall be the duty of the said board to give a public hearing in the city of St. Louis to all parties interested in the construction of said bridge or in the navigation of the river whenever the design and drawings of said bridge and maps of location shall have been submitted to the Secretary of War as herein provided.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to amend, on page 3, section 3, line 3, before the word "unbroken," by inserting the article "an."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. In line 4 of section 3 I move to insert the word "single" before the word "spans," and to change the word "spans" to "span," in the singular number; and in the same line I move to strike out all after the word "span" down to and including the word "water," in line 7, on page 4.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "spans" where it first occurs and insert "span"; before the word "span," to insert the word "single"; and in the same line, after the word "span," to strike out "and shall have at least two channel spans of not less than 750 feet clear width, each measured at right angles to the current at any and all stages of water"; so as to read:

SEC. 3. That in case the said bridge shall be built below the bridge heretofore constructed and known as the Eads Bridge, it shall be built with an unbroken and continuous single span, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. What does the Senator make the width of those spans?

Mr. GEORGE. We do not have two spans there. It is to be a single span.

In section 3, line 7, on page 4, I move to strike out the word "spans" and insert "span."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. VEST, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. JONES of Nevada were appointed.

PENSIONS TO INDIAN WAR VETERANS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I now ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of Senate bill 2281. The bill has already been read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me suggest to the Senator that we proceed for the remainder of the evening with the Calendar of unobjected cases.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope the Senator will allow me to have this bill considered and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the bill?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is the Indian war veterans' pension bill, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Pensions, through its chairman [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. COCKRELL. Then, I ask as soon as that bill shall have been disposed of that by unanimous consent we may proceed with the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that when the bill in charge of the Senator from Oregon is disposed of the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar. The only question is, whether we should proceed to the consideration of unobjected House cases or unobjected cases generally.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have one case that I shall ask to have taken up.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it a Senate bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it is a House bill of only four lines in length, which can be passed in a minute.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent, then, that we may dispose of unobjected House bills. ["No." "No."]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first ask if there be objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2281) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The bill has been read heretofore.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the bill has been heretofore read in full. It will be again read if any Senator desires.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. I do not ask for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Pensions will be stated.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions was, in line 19, after the words "Pacific Coast," to insert "the Florida wars with the Seminole Indians from 1842 to 1858."

Mr. PASCO. That amendment was heretofore agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That was agreed to the other day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, in line 32, after the words "record of," to strike out "enlisted" and insert "enlistment"; and in line 35, after the words "shall be," to strike out "acceptable" and insert "accepted"; so as to read:

And provided further, That where there is no record of enlistment or muster into service in any of the wars mentioned in this act, or the original act of which it is a supplement, the record of pay by the United States shall be accepted as evidence of said service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF CONNEAUT, OHIO.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4787) to establish the port of Conneaut, in the State of Ohio, as a subport of entry, in the district of Cuyahoga, in said State of Ohio.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NETTIE A. CHEEKS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask consent of the Senate to have taken up for consideration at this time Senate bill 2913, granting a pension of $20 a month to Nettie A. Cheeks.

Mr. COCKRELL. I give notice now that I shall object to any more pension bills being taken up until we take them up in regular order. There are a hundred of these cases on the Calendar, and they ought to be disposed of together.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure my friend from Missouri will allow me to remind him and the Senate that this is the first time I have ever asked such an indulgence.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2913) granting a pension to Nettie A. Cheeks, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Nettie A. Cheeks, widow of Peter O. Cheeks, late a private Company D, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and a private United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Nettie A. Cheeks."

CIRCUIT COURT AT HARTFORD, CONN.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Missouri. I desire to have a bill passed changing the time of holding the United States circuit court at Hartford, Conn. That court has to be held on the third Tuesday of September, and it is desired to change the time to October. If the bill is not passed now it will not get through the other House.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all right. I have no objection to the consideration of a bill of that kind.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2859) changing the time for holding circuit court of the United States at Hartford, in the district of Connecticut, which had been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That a term of the United States circuit court in the district of Connecticut shall be held at Hartford, in said district, on the second Tuesday of October, 1896, and thereafter in each year on the second Tuesday of October, and that after the third Tuesday of September, 1896, the term of said circuit court now by law provided to be held annually on the third Tuesday in September shall be discontinued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. VILAS. The Judiciary Committee have had under consideration for a considerable length of time, and finally reported, after a good deal of examination, a bill to amend the practice act which governs the court in the Indian Territory. Its passage is very much desired by the judges and the bar of that Territory, and there is really a necessity for some change in respect to the condition there. I ask that the bill may be considered. It is Senate bill 1833.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1833) to amend the act of March 1, 1895, and other acts relating to the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 2 of said act be further amended so as to provide as follows: The United States marshal in each of the three judicial districts in the Indian Territory may appoint one chief deputy marshal, who shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum, and each marshal may appoint six deputy marshals in his district, each of whom shall receive a salary of $1,200 per annum and his expenses as now provided by law; and each of said marshals may appoint as many other deputy marshals as he may deem necessary for the enforcement of law and the suppression of crime, and such deputies shall receive for their services the compensation allowed to United States marshals by sections 829 and 830 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, That no such deputy marshal shall receive a greater compensation than $1,200 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [4] 3, line 20, after the word "act," to strike out "be so" and insert "is"; and after the word "amendment," in the same line, to strike out "as to authorize each of the clerks of the United States court in the Indian Territory to appoint one deputy clerk for the courts held at Muscogee, South McAlester, and Ardmore, who shall receive a salary of $100 a month, and one other deputy clerk at each of said places, who shall receive a salary of $60 a month, each of whom shall perform the same duties and be subject to the same provisions of law as the other deputy clerks" and insert "by striking from the third sentence thereof the words 'where he himself does not reside'; so that said sentence will read: 'Each of said clerks shall appoint a deputy clerk for each court in his district'"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. [4] 3. That section 3 of said act is amended by striking from the third sentence thereof the words "where he himself does not reside"; so that said sentence will read: "Each of said clerks shall appoint a deputy clerk for each court in his district."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [5] 4, line 7, after the word "That," to strike out "section 4 of said act be so amended as to authorize" and insert "in addition to the number provided by section 4 of said act"; in line 9, after the word "judge," to strike out "of said court"; in line 10, after the word "district," to insert "is authorized"; and in line 16, after the word district," to strike out "so as to provide for eight districts in the manner required in this act" and insert "accordingly"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That in addition to the number provided by section 4 of said act, the judge for the northern district is authorized to appoint two additional United States commissioners, and two additional United States constables for said district, who shall receive the same salaries, have the same powers, and be subject to the same provisions of law as the commissioners and constables heretofore appointed; and said judge is authorized to re-form the commissioner's districts accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [6] 5, line 8, after the word "Territory," to strike out "(Indian)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That section 6 of said act be amended by adding thereto the following: "That nothing contained in any act of Congress heretofore passed applicable to the Indian Territory shall be construed so as to disqualify any member of any Indian tribe, whether by blood or adoption, otherwise qualified, from serving as a juror in any case, civil or criminal, in said Indian Territory, but no person shall be qualified to serve as a juror who does not understand the English language."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [9] 7, line 6, after the word "court," to insert "and in furtherance of justice"; and in line 8, after the word "district," to strike out "the place for trial to be fixed where the fairest and most impartial decision can be had and where it shall be most convenient for all concerned, to be determined by the judge"; in line 11, after the word "party," to strike out "to transfer the case from one place to another: Provided, That all applications for change of venue, or transfer of cases, both civil and criminal" and insert "which"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. [9] 7. That section 7 of said act be amended by striking out the last sentence of said section and by inserting in lieu of said sentence the following: "All cases shall be tried in the court to which the process is returnable unless a change of venue is allowed, in which case the court shall change the venue to the nearest place of holding court in another district; and any civil case may, in the discretion of the court, and in furtherance of justice, be removed for trial to another place of holding court in the same district on application of either party, which may be contested by the opposing party."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [10] 8, line 21, on page 5, after the word "prosecuted," to insert "the said court shall order"; in line 23, after the word "clerk," to strike out "of said court shall" and insert "to"; in line 23, after the word "court," to strike out "of appeals"; in line 25, after the word "and," to strike out "when said papers are so received by the circuit court of appeals they" and insert "the same"; in line 2, page 6, after the word "shall," to strike out "have the same jurisdiction and powers" and insert "proceed"; in line 3, after the word "error," to strike out "as" and insert "with the same powers"; in line 5, after the word "would," to insert "otherwise"; and in the same line, after the word "had," to strike out "said cause been determined therein"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That section 11 of said act of March 1, 1895, be amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That in any case in which for any reason a majority of the judges are disqualified from sitting in said court of appeals in the determination of any cause in which an appeal or writ of error has been taken or prosecuted, the said court shall order the clerk to transmit the record and all the papers filed in said court to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit of the United States, and the same shall be filed therein, and said court shall proceed to hear and determine said appeal or writ of error with the same powers the United States court of appeals in the Indian Territory would otherwise have had. The mandate from the circuit court of appeals in cases under this provision shall be to the court in the Indian Territory from which the appeal or writ of error was taken or prosecuted: And provided further, That no appeal or writ of error from the final decision of said appellate court shall be allowed in civil cases unless the value in controversy exceeds $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out sections 11 and 12, as follows:

SEC. 11. That section 11 of said act of March 1, 1895, be further amended so as to provide that writs of error and appeals from any judgment of the United States court in the Indian Territory shall be allowed, and may be taken to the court of appeals of said Indian Territory under the same form of procedure as appeals and writs of error are taken from the circuit courts of the United States in the eighth circuit to the United States circuit court of appeals for said circuit.

SEC. 12. That section 2348 of Mansfield's Digest of the Laws of Arkansas heretofore put in force in the Indian Territory, be so amended as to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, section 9, line 8, after the word "sureties," to strike out "to bind themselves"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That in all prosecutions in cases less than felony in the United States commissioners' courts in said Indian Territory the commissioner may, in his discretion, require the prosecutor, or some person for him, to enter into bond, with good and sufficient surety, for the payment of all costs which may accrue in said prosecution. Such bond shall be given to the United States, and shall require the principal and his surety to pay all costs in the case if defendant is acquitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [14] 11, page 8, line 9, after the word "required," to strike out "of the prosecuting witness"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That jurors in civil cases before United States commissioners' courts in the Indian Territory shall be entitled to a fee of 50 cents for each case in which they may serve. The amount required for their payment shall be advanced by the party to the suit who may demand the jury, and shall be taxed as a part of the costs in the case.

In all criminal cases before United States commissioners' courts in said Territory wherein a jury is impaneled at the demand of the defendant, each juror shall be entitled to 50 cents in each case, but not more than $1.50 shall be allowed to any juror for any day he may serve as a juror in said court. The commissioner shall issue certificates for such compensation as in the case of witnesses in felony cases, and if the defendant is found guilty, execution shall issue immediately for the fine and costs against the defendant, who shall stand committed until such fine and costs are paid, or discharged as provided by law; and if the defendant is acquitted and a cost bond has been required, judgment shall be entered on said bond for all costs in the case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out sections 16 and 17, as follows:

SEC. 16. That the United States commissioners and United States constables in the Indian Territory shall each receive and be allowed to retain, in addition to the salaries which they are allowed by law, all fees earned by them in civil cases cognizable before such commissioners, to be taxed in accordance with the Arkansas laws in force in the Indian Territory.

SEC. 17. That in every criminal case before United States commissioners' courts in the Indian Territory, wherein the defendant is represented by counsel and demands a trial by a jury, the commissioner may appoint any one of the licensed attorneys in the Indian Territory to represent the United States in the case, and may tax against the defendant, if he be found guilty, an attorney's fee of $10 as a part of the costs in the case, and when collected by the commissioner he shall pay the fee so charged to the attorney who represented the United States; but the United States shall not be liable for attorneys' fees in such cases except as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [18] 13, line 3, page 10, after the word "detainer," to strike out "and" and insert "or"; and in line 4, after the word "detainer," to insert "or of ejectment"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That concurrent jurisdiction with the United States court in the Indian Territory is hereby conferred upon the United States commissioners in their respective districts in said Territory to enforce the provisions of chapter 67, entitled "Forcible entry and retainer," of said Mansfield's Digest, heretofore put in force in said Territory, and as amended by this act, in all cases, regardless of the value of the property in controversy; and appeals shall be allowed in such cases to the United States court in said Territory as in other cases, upon executing a bond in a sum at least double the value of two years' rent or use of the property in controversy, and in double the amount of the judgment and costs in the case, conditioned as required by law. But appeals from United States commissioners in such cases to the United States court, and from that court in all cases of forcible entry and detainer or unlawful detainer, or of ejectment, to the court of appeals in the Indian Territory, shall not operate to supersede the judgment for the possession of the premises in question unless the judge of the United States court of the district shall so order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 19, as follows:

SEC. 19. That it shall not be necessary, in order to sustain an action for unlawful detainer in the Indian Territory, under the provisions of section 3348 of said Mansfield's Digest, heretofore put in force in the Indian Territory, for the plaintiff to prove the relation of landlord and tenant between him and the defendant, but it shall be sufficient to maintain such action if the plaintiff shall establish the fact that he is entitled to the possession of the premises in controversy and that demand was made in writing for the delivery of the possession thereof to him thirty days prior to the commencement of the suit. The bonds heretofore required by law to be given in the Indian Territory in actions of forcible entry and detainer and unlawful detainer shall hereafter be given in a sum at least double the value of two years' rent or use of the property specified in the writ, which value shall be ascertained as provided in said Mansfield's Digest. In all actions for forcible entry and detainer or for unlawful detainer in the Indian Territory in case the finding of the verdict is for the defendant, the court shall give judgment thereon with costs and for any damages that may be assessed in favor of the defendant, and shall also issue a writ of restitution, directed to the marshal, to cause the defendant to be repossessed, to which shall be added a clause commanding the marshal to levy of the goods, chattels, lands, and tenements, subject to execution of the plaintiff, the damages assessed in favor of the defendant, with costs. If the finding and judgment be in favor of the defendant, but from any cause he be not entitled to the repossession of the premises at the time of judgment, then the writ of execution shall only be for the damages and costs that may be awarded him, and in all cases where judgment is rendered, either against the plaintiff or defendant, for any amount of recovery, damages, or costs, judgment shall be rendered against his sureties in the bond given in the case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [21] 15, after line 4, page 12, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That where two or more defendants are joined in the same bill of indictment and tried without severance, the number of challenges shall be the same as if one defendant were upon trial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [22] 16, line 9, page 12, before the word "be," to strike out "should"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That if any judge of the United States court in said Territory be interested in any suit pending in the court over which he may preside, or be of counsel or akin to either of the parties to the suit, one of the other judges who may be qualified may preside at the trial of such case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [23] 17, line 16, page 12, after the word "crime," to strike out:

And no person other than a party to the suit or prosecution shall be competent to testify in any case, civil or criminal, in said Territory, who has been convicted in the courts of the United States or of any State or Territory of the crime of perjury, subornation of perjury, larceny, burglary, robbery, rape, or forgery; but no person shall be disqualified as a witness in said Territory who has been convicted of any other crime or misdemeanor.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 17. That in the courts of the Indian Territory no party to the suit or prosecution shall be excluded as a witness in the case on that account or on account of his conviction of any crime. In all cases the fact of conviction may be shown by the record of conviction or by oral evidences in order to affect the credibility of the witness.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [25] 19, line 7, page 13, after the word "may," to insert "by sentence"; so as make the section read:

SEC. 19. That the United States court in the Indian Territory may by sentence require persons convicted of crimes or misdemeanors and confined in the jails in their respective districts to perform manual labor, either within or without the prisons, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Attorney-General; but no expense which may accrue on this account shall be paid by the United States in excess of the fines which may be collected in each district, respectively, which fines may be used by the Attorney-General for this purpose, and any moneys which may be received for such labor shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [26] 20, line 6, page 14, after the word "thirteen," to strike out "conveyances of real estate, chapter 27"; in line 9, after the word "districts," to strike out "corporations, chapter 29"; and in line 11, after "seventy-one," to strike out "medicine and surgery, practices of, chapter 105"; so as to read:

SEC. 20. That in addition to the laws of the State of Arkansas heretofore put in force in the Indian Territory, the provisions of the following chapters and sections of the general laws of the State of Arkansas, in force at the close of the session of the general assembly of said State in 1883, published in 1884 in the volume known as Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas, which are not locally inapplicable or in conflict with any laws of Congress, are hereby extended over and put in force in the Indian Territory, and jurisdiction to enforce the provisions thereof is hereby conferred upon the United States court in said Territory, namely: Apprentices, chapter 4; arbitration and awards, chapter 5; bastardy, chapter 13; coroners, chapter 28, and the United States commissioners in said Territory shall be ex officio coroners in their respective districts; ejectment, chapter 55; estrays, chapter 58; garnishment, chapter 71; partnerships, limited, chapter 116; poisons, sale of, chapter 120, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 28, as follows:

SEC. 28. That all the provisions of chapter 9 of Mansfield's Digest, entitled "Attachment," heretofore put in force in the Indian Territory, which are in conflict with the provisions of chapter 71, entitled "Garnishment," put in force in said Territory by this act, are hereby repealed in so far as they apply in said Territory: Provided, however, That when the plaintiff has a debt or demand against the defendant which is due he may cause a writ of garnishment to be sued out and served as provided by law in such cases, upon the institution of suit by him to recover such debt or demand: And provided further, That a judgment shall be rendered in the garnishment proceedings against the garnishee at the same time that judgment is rendered against the defendant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [29] 22, line 13, page 16, after the word "be," to insert "so"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 22. That nothing in this act or in any previous acts of Congress in reference to the Indian Territory shall be so construed as to repeal or in any way modify section 1024 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and that said section is hereby declared to be in full force and effect in said Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out sections 30 and 31, as follows:

SEC. 30. That any person in the Indian Territory being in failing circumstances who shall make a general assignment for the benefit of all his creditors without preferences, conveying to his assignee all of his property save such as is exempt by law from execution under the laws in force therein, shall be released in full from the claims of all the creditors accepting the benefits of such assignment within six months after the filing and recording of such assignment whenever the proceeds of the assignment shall pay 40 cents on the dollar of the claims of such creditors: Provided, however, That this provision is not intended to affect the claims of those creditors who do not accept under such assignment.

SEC. 31. That any person who shall board any railway train in the Indian Territory, whether moving or standing, having no lawful business thereon and not intending in good faith to become a passenger thereon, but with intent to obtain a free ride on such train, however short the distance, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [32] 23, line 14, page 17, after the word "the," to strike out "United States court" and insert "courts created under act of Congress"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 23. That in all cases of conviction for crime in the courts created under act of Congress in the Indian Territory the judge of said court shall fix the punishment which may be imposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out 33, as follows:

SEC. 33. That if any officer in the Indian Territory shall fail to return an execution placed in his hands within the time required by law, he may, in a suit brought against him to recover the amount showed in the execution, show as a defense that the defendant in execution was insolvent at the time the execution was issued, and remained so up to the date of its return.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer as a proviso to the last section of this bill what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the last section of the bill the following:

Provided, That in all trials for contempt of court in any United States court, except the Supreme Court of the United States, the accused shall, on demand, be entitled to a trial by jury.

Mr. VILAS. I apprehend the Senator from Nebraska mistakes the bill which is under consideration. This is not the contempt bill which involves that subject and which has been considered, but is a bill relating entirely to the courts in the Indian Territory.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not misapprehend the bill at all. I understand what the bill is. I also understand what the amendment is. I hope the honorable Senator from Wisconsin will accede to the amendment.

Mr. VILAS. I certainly can not, because it is entirely foreign to the bill. I do not want to introduce into this bill, which is merely to regulate the practice of courts in the Indian Territory, a provision as to what shall be the law in cases of contempt. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that motion, and take snap judgment here without a statement in reference to the amendment.

Mr. VILAS. I shall not make the motion if the Senator wishes to address the Senate upon the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Wisconsin is undertaking to run away from the discharge of an unpleasant duty by assuming that my amendment is not germane to this bill. While I have not been a lawyer so many years as the Senator from Wisconsin, I have been a lawyer pretty nearly thirty years, and I know in a general way what pertains to the practice of courts, and I know a provision with reference to the trial of contempts is germane to a bill which provides for the practice in any court. The Presiding Officer of this body and every Senator in this Chamber knows that.

Mr. President, there is a disposition to shirk any Senatorial or Congressional responsibility with reference to the subject of contempts. It is true the Judiciary Committee have reported a bill which defines what constitutes a direct and also an indirect contempt, but it is no more than declaratory of the common law. There is not a thing in their definition which is new. It is simply an attempt to comply with the wishes of certain classes of citizens of the United States, which it does not comply with, and, in my judgment, a very feeble and ineffectual attempt on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary to escape any legislation on this subject.

A direct contempt of court is a contempt which is committed in the immediate presence of the court by loud and unusual noises, or by any other kind of disturbance which interferes with the orderly administration of justice. It may not be in the court room; it may be so immediately adjacent to the court room as to be a direct contempt. An indirect contempt is a contempt which is committed against the process of the court, and not in the presence of the court, as, for instance, the publication of an article in a newspaper that may undertake to influence the action of a judge or a jury or some officer of the court.

The Federal courts have carried the doctrine of contempt to the extent that they have in many cases stifled the constitutional right of free speech. I can understand quite well how gentlemen feel who are halting between two opinions; that is, between the opinion whether the common man of this country shall have his rights as completely as the most exalted citizen and the opinion whether they as politicians dare to encounter the active hostility of great corporations in the accomplishment of their political ambitions. I think I state it exactly as it is.

A few years ago, Mr. President, under the wise counsel of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] there was passed by Congress what is known to the country as the interstate commerce act, the sole purpose of which was to regulate the great corporations in their charges and in the conduct of their business, and to prevent pooling and those things which were hostile to the interests of the people. Yet the most effectual portion of that act, according to the strained judicial construction made in the State of Michigan by a Federal judge—Judge Ricks, I think his name is—was wrested from its primary purpose and applied to the case of men who were employed in the service of the companies. From that time until this moment it has been a common thing in the Federal courts to enjoin men engaged in the service of railroad companies from the commission of certain acts, and then, when the injunctions were violated, to call those men before a Federal court or judge, and without any formal accusation against them, without information or indictment, to try them by an ex parte proceeding, and condemn them to imprisonment. I apprehend the same rule will be followed in the Territory in which this bill is to operate.

This rule has been carried to the extent that it has stifled free speech. It has been carried to the extent that it has produced slavery. But a short time ago, less than three years ago, a Federal court held to the doctrine that it had jurisdiction to enjoin an employee of a railroad company from going to a coemployee in a peaceful and orderly manner and using his power of persuasion upon his neighbor to leave the service of that company.

What distinction is there between the law of injunction thus abused and thus wrested from its original purpose and that law which permits a citizen to put shackles or handcuffs upon the limbs of another man and take him into his own servitude involuntarily or the servitude of some corporation? There is no difference in principle—not the slightest—except that the slavery in the first instance is caused by the criminal use of the writ of injunction, and the slavery in the second case is caused by the brutal power of force. That is all. There is no difference between the chattel slavery which characterized this country thirty-five years ago and that slavery which characterizes it to-day in this respect except in the one instance that the slave answered to the lash of the master, and in this case he answers to the injunction of the court, the judge of which himself is the tool in many instances of the corporations which enforce this condition of affairs. That is all there is to it. It is apparent to everybody. No man will dispute this proposition when you talk with him in private conversation. He will admit it, and admit that it is deplorable; and yet so strong, so powerful, are these corporations in the politics of this country that few men will take the risk of calling up legislation to check them.

I certainly hope that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] will not insist on taking snap judgment upon us, and by that means run away from the proposition that these persons who are accused of contempt, like the most ordinary criminal, shall have a jury trial with proper restrictions and regulations.

Mr. VILAS. I shall not move to lay the amendment on the table, but will let a vote be taken. It has nothing to do with this bill. There is another bill on which it can be considered fully.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say just a word. I appeal to my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to withdraw the amendment at this time. I shall endeavor to cooperate with him in the passage of some such provision on the regular bill relating to contempts which has been reported from the Judiciary Committee. I hereby give notice that after the disposition of the joint resolution relating to the election of Senators by the people, of which notice has been given by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill relating to contempts and proceed to a final disposition of it.

Mr. PUGH. The Du Pont case has the right of way.

Mr. HILL. First comes the Du Pont case, and then the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has given notice as to the joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment. After that I give notice I will ask to take up the contempt bill. It is a bill about which there is some difference of opinion; it will lead to considerable debate, and I think it unwise to make a premature fight on an amendment to the pending bill. The Senator from Nebraska has at heart the same cause I have, and we shall undoubtedly cooperate in the passage of the bill I refer to, as I hope it may be amended.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In this connection I desire to change the notice I gave in regard to the joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment providing for the election of Senators by the people. The notice I gave was that immediately after the conclusion of all the appropriation bills I should move to take up the joint resolution. I desire to change it, and to give notice that immediately on the conclusion of all the appropriation bills except the general deficiency bill I shall move to proceed to the consideration of that measure.

Mr. ALLEN. With the assurance I have received from the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] that they will heartily——

Mr. PUGH. Yes; and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. ALLEN. And the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that they will heartily cooperate in the passage of a bill that will provide for a jury trial in case of contempt, I withdraw the amendment at this time.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say right here that if a favorable opportunity occurs between the consideration of the appropriation bills I shall then bring the bill forward.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that we may now proceed with the consideration of unobjected House bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PASCO. If the Senator from Missouri wishes to bring up any particular House bill I shall not object, but I do think we ought to take up the cases on the Calendar in regular order. There is no reason why House bills should have preference. In another place such preference is not given to Senate bills. Some of us have spent a great deal of time in making reports on Senate bills, and they ought not to be allowed to slumber on the Calendar for weeks and months without attention.

I do think we ought to take up the entire Calendar when we proceed, giving every bill a fair opportunity, and let it be sent, when passed here, to the other end of the Capitol. Then let the responsibility for its failure, if there is to be any, rest elsewhere than in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the responsibility for the failure of House bills for our own constituents which have been passed elsewhere will rest upon our shoulders. There is but one way to proceed, in my judgment. It has always been the way, when the Senate has proceeded with its business with anything like rapidity and dispatch, that is occasionally to take up House bills and act upon them, and the House in time will become ashamed of itself and will do likewise with Senate bills. I hope the proposition will be agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. I have said that if there are on the Calendar any particular House bills in which the Senator's State or his people are interested, let them be called up, and I shall not object to their being considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no purpose except to transact business, and it is the only way the business can be transacted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been requested to call up a House bill granting a pension, but I will refrain from doing so if consent can be given to the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If we are going on to call up bills, however, I will ask unanimous consent to call up the bill I refer to. I do not object to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PASCO. At the urgent suggestion of the Senator from Missouri I will not object at this time, against his wish. I dislike very much to oppose him, but I do not think it is just toward Senators who have been busy on Senate bills and have got them advanced upon the Calendar that they should be put off indefinitely. But I will not object at the present time. I do hope, however, that when he makes similar requests hereafter it will be to proceed regularly with the Calendar, taking up House and Senate bills as we come to them. I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered?

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the bill indicated, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. Report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There has been some mistake in regard to one or two items in the report, and I therefore ask the Senate to disagree to the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was nonconcurred in.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House, and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference, and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

FRANK D. ORME.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 6172) authorizing the sale of the title of the United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington.

Mr. CULLOM. This bill is an exact copy of one reported by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. We had it up a day or two ago and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] objected. He has since looked into the bill and says he has no further opposition. I ask that it may be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] explained it the other day.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the bill (S. 2083) authorizing sale of the title of the United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTED COPIES OF PATENTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first case on the Calendar under the order adopted will be announced.

The bill (H. R. 6195) amending the statutes relating to the sale of printed copies of patents was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 493 of the Revised Statutes so as to read:

The price to be paid for uncertified printed copies of specifications and drawings of patents shall be determined by the Commissioner of Patents: Provided, That the maximum cost of a copy shall be 10 cents.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNCLAIMED FREIGHT IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 6663) relating to the sale of unclaimed freight, baggage, and other property in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRACTS FOR NAVAL SUPPLIES.

The bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what it proposes to do.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill provides that where there is a proposal for supplies, instead of exacting a guaranty signed by individuals, a certified check may be deposited.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest whether there ought not to be inserted in the bill "certified check on a responsible bank."

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill is well guarded.

Mr. GEORGE. There is nothing of that sort in it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes relative to guaranties on proposals for naval supplies."

RAILWAY PROPERTY IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5379) making it unlawful to shoot at or into any railway locomotive or car, or at any person thereon, or to throw any rock or other missile at or into any locomotive or car, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, before the word "missile," to strike out "rock or other" and insert "dangerous"; so as to read:

That every person who, in the Indian Territory, shall willfully and maliciously shoot at or into any locomotive, caboose, postal car, passenger coach, express, or baggage car of any railway train, or at any person thereon, or shall throw any dangerous missile at or into any locomotive, caboose, postal car, passenger coach, express, or baggage car of any railway train, or at any person thereon, or shall derail or attempt to derail any locomotive or train, shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 4, after the word "throw," to strike out "a stone or," and in line 5, before the word "missile," to strike out "other" and insert "dangerous"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any person who, in the Indian Territory, shall willfully shoot at or into any freight, stock, postal, baggage, or other car of any railway train, whether such car is attached to a locomotive or not, or shall throw any dangerous missile at or into such car, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ninety days, or by fine not exceeding $300, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. Does the bill come from the Judiciary Committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BERRY. By whom was it reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was reported by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. BERRY. Does it in any way change the jurisdiction of the courts in the Territory at this time, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]?

Mr. PLATT. It does not, I understand. It does not speak of jurisdiction at all.

Mr. BERRY. It does not affect the present jurisdiction and the present status there?

Mr. PLATT. I understand that it does not.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill making it unlawful to shoot at or into any railway locomotive or car, or at any person thereon, or to throw any rock or other missile at or into any locomotive or car in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

STANDARD FOR DRY MEASURES.

The bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar, and was read.

Mr. KYLE. I should like an explanation as to why these articles can not be sold in any other way than by weight in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the way they are sold all the time on the market. We are conforming to what is the usual way.

Mr. KYLE. That is true; but I understand that farmers come in from the country round about and bring their bushel measure and endeavor to sell their products on the street.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is to avoid the frauds that are perpetrated upon the people of the District, in which parties have been caught frequently, by having measures that have double bottoms, etc., that the law is proposed to be enacted.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that. I have seen the measures myself. At the same time the bill provides that these measures shall be of certain depth, width, etc. By providing that they shall not be sold in any other way than by weight, it forbids people who come from the country from selling upon the streets. I object to that feature of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota objects to the consideration of the bill, and it will be passed over.

DISTRICT WATER-MAIN TAXES.

The bill (S. 3379) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in all cases not exempted by this act, where water-main taxes or assessments in the District of Columbia have been quashed, set aside, or declared void by the supreme court of said District, or have been otherwise canceled or set aside, by reason of such tax or assessment not having been authenticated by the proper officer, to reassess all lots or parcels of ground in respect of such taxes or assessments, with power to assess and collect the same according to existing law relating to the assessment and collection of water-main assessments or taxes: Provided, That in cases where such assessments have heretofore been quashed or declared void by said supreme court, or have been otherwise canceled or set aside for the reason hereinbefore provided, the reassessment herein provided for shall be made within one year from the passage of this act: And provided further, That hereafter all water-main taxes or assessments in the District of Columbia shall be levied and authenticated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are hereby authorized to designate the official whose duty it shall be to notify the owner or agent of any lot or land of any water-main tax or assessment levied against such lot or land.

SEC. 2. That no water-main tax or assessment shall hereafter be assessed or reassessed upon any land without the limits of the city of Washington, held and used exclusively for agricultural purposes, or upon any unsubdivided land not used for business purposes: Provided, That this exemption shall not apply to any land into which Potomac water has been or shall be introduced from a public water main in the avenue, street, alley, or road on which the land abuts; and that where Potomac water shall hereafter be introduced said water-main tax or assessment shall be levied or assessed within thirty days after such introduction, and where Potomac water has been heretofore introduced the assessment or reassessment shall be made within ninety days after the passage of this act: And provided further, That in case of any land not subdivided into building lots the water-main tax or assessment provided for in this section shall be levied or assessed on a frontage of not exceeding 100 feet for each lot or parcel of land or premises into which Potomac water has been or shall be introduced, and this water-main tax or assessment shall be considered in any subsequent subdivision of such property as having extended on said lot or parcel of land or premises to a depth of 100 feet from the front on which levied or assessed.

SEC. 3. That in any assessment or reassessment made under the provisions of this act, the owner of any lot or parcel of land shall be credited with any amount which may have been heretofore paid upon any water-main tax or assessment levied against such lot or parcel of land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes or assessments in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. MCMILLAN were appointed.

MICHAEL M'KENNA.

The bill (H. R. 3596) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Michael McKenna was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion now standing upon the records of the War Department against the name of Michael McKenna, alias David Dunton, late of Company F, First United States Dragoons, and to grant him an honorable discharge, to date July 31, 1848.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not ask that the report be read, but I will ask whether the evidence shows that the soldier did not desert as a matter of fact?

Mr. COCKRELL. He did not desert. He was simply a boy who had followed the Army all the way through Mexico, and when he got back to New Orleans his father went to him and took him home to stay all night by permission of the officers, and when he got back the next day the command was gone. It was after the close of the war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. HENRY S. PRATT.

The bill (H. R. 2451) to correct the records of the War Department in the case of Capt. Henry S. Pratt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to issue, in the name of Henry S. Pratt, late captain of Company A, Tenth New York Cavalry, an honorable discharge as of date the 18th day of May, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIVORCE CASES IN TERRITORIES.

The bill (H. R. 5217) making one year's residence in a Territory a prerequisite to obtaining a divorce there was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments, in line 3, after the word "for," to strike out "a" and insert "any"; in line 4, before the word "unless," to strike out "which occurred elsewhere"; and at the end of the bill to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not affect any action duly commenced and pending at the date of the passage thereof.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That no divorce shall be granted in any Territory for any cause unless the party applying for the divorce shall have resided continuously in the Territory for one year next preceding the application: Provided, That this act shall not affect any action duly commenced and pending at the date of the passage thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE DEATH PENALTY.

The bill (H. R. 878) to reduce the cases in which the penalty of death may be inflicted was announced as next in order.

Mr. TURPIE. I object to the further consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DRAINAGE OF LOTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 7264) to provide for the drainage of lots in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have a part of the first section read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That each original lot or subdivisional lot situated on any street in the District of Columbia where there is a public sewer shall be connected with said sewer in such manner that any and all of the drainage of such lot, whether water or liquid refuse of any kind, except human urine and fecal matter, shall flow into said sewer; and if such original lot or subdivisional lot is situated on any street in said District where there is a public sewer and water main, such original lot or subdivisional lot shall be connected with said sewer and also with said water main in such manner that any and all of the drainage of such lot, whether water or liquid refuse of any kind, shall flow into said sewer.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPOINTMENT BY BREVET.

The bill (H. R. 3719) to provide for the appointment by brevet of active or retired officers of the United States Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. SEWELL. The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] desires time to look into the bill, and I am willing that it shall go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RECORD OF INSTRUMENTS OF CONVEYANCE.

The bill (H. R. 227) requiring bills of sale, conditional sales, mortgages, or deeds of trust of chattels in the District of Columbia to be recorded was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEN FOR FREIGHT ON IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

The bill (H. R. 6836) to amend section 2981 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of June 10, 1880, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. That bill seems to have been reported from the Committee on Finance without recommendation and at some time when I was not present. The chairman of the committee is not here, and I think it might as well be passed over. I should like to examine it myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. PLATT subsequently said: With regard to the bill which I asked to have passed over, I think that it was reported and the Committee on Finance was discharged with the intention of referring it to the Committee on Commerce. I ask that it may be so referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks that House bill 6836, which was reported without recommendation from the Committee on Finance, be referred to the Committee on Commerce. If there be no objection, it will be so referred.

THE PINTSCH COMPRESSING COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 5790) to permit the Pintsch Compressing Company to lay pipes in certain streets in the city of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. I think that had better go over until there is some one here from the committee.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to it, as there is some one from the committee here.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is a bill that has no purpose except to connect pipes with certain railroads in order to supply to cars a peculiar kind of gas manufactured by this company. Everybody is, I think, in favor of it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not make any objection. I did not see any member of the committee present when I spoke.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF GAS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 6994) relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. We can not pass that bill this afternoon.

Mr. FAULKNER. The bill has been read and all the amendments of the committee have been adopted. The Citizens' Association, through their officers, called on me to-day and appealed to me to try to get it through, and it strikes me that we certainly ought to pass it. It is a very important measure to the people of this District, and the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the bill to which the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] objected?

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from Florida objected to it when I was absent. As I was stating, citizens of the District called upon me who have been fighting the gas company all along. Mr. Tucker, who is the attorney of the East Washington Association, and Mr. Frizzell, who I think has been president of it for years, urged me to-day to try to get the bill through.

Mr. GEORGE. What about Mr. Dodge?

Mr. FAULKNER. I have heard of Mr. Dodge on the gas subject for eight years.

Mr. GEORGE. He sent me some very important statistics, which I should like to spread before the Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course if Senators think they are representing the citizens and do not want the bill to pass, I will not insist.

Mr. KYLE. There will certainly be a great deal of discussion in regard to the bill. The people of the District of Columbia want $1 gas. This bill provides for gas the first year at $1.15 and then a fall to $1.10 and $1.05, covering a period of five years.

Mr. PLATT. I have objected to the bill because I knew it would cause discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

DONATION OF CANNON AND CANNON BALLS.

The bill (H. R. 7172) donating four condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Allegan, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 8012) donating condemned cannon and cannon balls was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 11, after the word "balls," to insert "also, to donate one condemned cannon to the Allen M. Harmon Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Northville, Mich."; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to Grand Army of the Republic post of Sparta, Ill., 1 condemned cannon and 5 cannon balls for the purpose of decorating the soldiers' monument in said place, and 2 condemned cannon and 5 cannon balls for the Grand Army of the Republic post at Morenci, Mich.; also, to donate to McDowell Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Enid, Okla., 1 condemned cannon and 15 cannon balls; also, to donate 1 condemned cannon to the Allen M. Harmon Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Northville, Mich.: Provided, That in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy such articles can be spared without detriment to the public interests: And provided further, That the United States shall not be subjected to any expense on account of such donation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 7140) granting to A. L. Robeson Post, No. 42, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bridgeton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 8013) donating one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Grand Army of the Republic, L. W. Cooper Post, Department of Missouri, No. 81, of Lathrop, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 7671) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to U. S. Grant Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, Ind., Department of Indiana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to offer as an amendment to that bill what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill:

Also two pieces of condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the St. Boniface Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association, of Chicago, Ill., for the soldiers' monument now erected in St. Boniface Cemetery, Chicago, Ill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to come in after the amendment just adopted on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted, it is proposed to insert:

Also two cannon and pyramids of cannon balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association at Londonderry, N. H.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to U. S. Grant Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, Ind., Department of Indiana, and for other purposes."

STANDARD FOR DRY MEASURES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. KYLE. When the bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was under consideration I raised an objection to it. The bill has been modified so that it is perfectly agreeable to me; and if the amendment be read and adopted I shall be perfectly satisfied with the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 2, after the word "pounds," to insert "when sold by wholesale and 56 pounds when sold by retail"; and in line 4, after the word "weight," to strike out "be subject to the same penalty as that provided for in section 1" and insert "under a penalty of $5 for each offense, to be recovered in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of the said District, in the same manner as other fines and penalties are recovered"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the lawful weight of a bushel of potatoes shall be 60 pounds when sold by wholesale and 56 pounds when sold by retail, and that hereafter all sales thereof shall be made by weight, under a penalty of $5 for each offense, to be recovered in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of the said District, in the same manner as other fines and penalties are recovered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. Now I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 1, after the word "That," it is proposed to insert "when potatoes are sold by weight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The bill (H. R. 8077) granting to Budlong Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Westerly, R. I., two condemned mounted brass cannon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 7100) to donate 8 condemned cannon and 100 cannon shot to the Grand Army of the Republic Cemetery Association of Colorado was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 122) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver condemned cannon to Chamberlain Post, Grand Army of the Republic, to be posted by the soldiers' monument at St. Johnsbury, Vt., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

The bill (H. R. 6739) for the relief of John N. Quackenbush, late a commander in the United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. I have heard so much about that case that I do not think we can act upon it this afternoon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

ESTATE OF GEORGE CASE.

The bill (H. R. 2740) to carry into effect a finding of the Court of Claims in favor of the estate of George Case, late of Independence County, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the report made in that case may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BURROWS May 5, 1896:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred House bill 2740, beg leave to report that the amount carried by the bill was found due the claimant by the Court of Claims, as appears by the following finding of facts:

[Court of Claims. Congressional, No. 575. Sarah Case, administratrix, vs. The United States.]

This case, being a claim for supplies or stores alleged to have been taken by or furnished to the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the court, on a preliminary inquiry, finds that George Case (since deceased), the person alleged to have furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same are alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

BY THE COURT.

Filed April 29, 1889.

[Court of Claims. No. 575. Sarah Case, administratrix of George Case, deceased, vs. United States.]

STATEMENT OF CASE.

The claim in the above-entitled case for supplies or stores alleged to have been taken by or furnished to the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion was transmitted to the court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 4th day of March, 1889.

Mr. R. A. Berton, esq., appeared for claimant, and the Attorney-General, by Felix Brannigan, esq., his assistant, and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

On a preliminary inquiry the court, on the 29th day of April, 1889, found that the person alleged to have furnished the supplies or stores, or from whom they were alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

The case was brought to a hearing on its merits on the 14th day of February, 1894. The claimant in her petition makes the following allegations:

That during the war there was taken from the intestate the following stores and supplies of the value stated and of which he was the owner, to wit:

1 mule	$150.00
2 mules	300.00
2 wagons	250.00
1 set double harness	40.00
1 platform scales	40.00
2 pairs counter scales	24.00
6 pairs harness hames	7.50

The court, upon the evidence and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, makes the following

FINDING OF FACT.

There were taken from the claimant's intestate, near Batesville, Ark., as alleged in the petition, during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, by military authority for the use of the Army, quartermaster stores the reasonable value of which at the time and place of taking was $475.

BY THE COURT.

Filed April 2, 1894.
A true copy.
Test this 4th day of April, 1894.
[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

The bill (H. R. 4785) to incorporate the National University was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULLOM. Let that go over.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator from Minnesota asked me to have this bill waived for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HENRY H. SCHRAWDER.

The bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of Henry H. Schrawder was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the military record of Henry H. Schrawder, late a member of Company E, Second Battalion Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge; and vacates and sets aside the proceedings of court-martial finding him guilty of absence without leave and desertion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT SULLY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives returning House bill 7324.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes, which had been returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now ask for the immediate consideration of the bill, and I desire to submit an amendment to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "date of," in line 24, it is proposed to strike out "filing of the plat of survey of any township in any local land office of said State" and insert "the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE NEAR GRAFTON, ILL.

The bill (H. R. 7973) to establish a railroad bridge across the Illinois River near Grafton, Ill., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire if there were any amendments reported to that bill by the Senate committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there are no amendments to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That seems to be the District appropriation bill, which I presume we do not wish to consider now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DISTRICT HARBOR REGULATIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to call attention to Order of Business 968, which is the bill (S. 2897) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia, which the Commissioners are very desirous to have passed. I reported a House bill this morning in identically the same language, which I will ask to have considered instead of the Senate bill, if there is no objection, and I presume there is none.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8532) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now move that Senate bill 2987, on the same subject, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. There are a half dozen or more bills in which Senators are interested—I am not interested, nor is my State—but they are simply bills appropriating condemned cannon and they are all in the same form. They are the next ones on the Calendar, and I hope they will be disposed of. They will only consume a few moments of time.

Mr. CARTER. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The bill (H. R. 7143) granting to the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association of the county of Middlesex, in the State of New Jersey, 4 condemned cannon and 30 cannon balls was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 7216) donating one condemned cannon and cannon balls to the Grand Army of the Republic Post, No. 573, of Evans City, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 8266) donating two condemned cannon to Custer Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, of Etna, Pa., and two condemned cannon to James G. Clark Post, No. 162, Grand Army of the Republic, of Allegheny, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 4324) authorizing the Secretary of Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the word "city," in line 6:

And also two condemned cannon and a pyramid of cannon balls to the State Soldiers' Home at Tilton, N. H.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., and for other purposes."

The bill (H. R. 4557) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate two pieces of condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the St. Boniface Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association, of Chicago, Ill., was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. This is the bill which was attached to another bill in the shape of an amendment. Let this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (H. R. 6666) granting to Maj. C. A. Angel Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lambertville, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move to amend the bill by inserting what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "city," in line 8, it is proposed to insert "and also four condemned cannon and suitable pyramids to the Soldiers' Home at Boise City, Idaho."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I move to amend the bill by inserting "eight condemned cannon and suitable pyramids to the State Soldiers' Home in New Jersey."

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] a question. Has the Senator from Kentucky any information that I do not possess—and I confess I have very little—as to the number of condemned cannon which are available by the Navy Department, and also more especially with respect to the number of available cannon compared with the propositions that are pending, either in this or the other House, for donations of such cannon to the various cemeteries and Grand Army posts?

I think that before asking the Senator to answer the question I ought to say that the bills far outnumber the cannon. The Committee on Naval Affairs has reported a general bill, which is upon the Calendar here, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to give away all the condemned cannon that are possessed by the Navy Department, and notwithstanding the fact that the bill is upon our Calendar we do not pass it. We go on passing special bills. I think there is going to be disappointment somewhere in this connection.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me? The general bill referred to has passed the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator from New York sure of that?

Mr. HILL. The general bill has passed the Senate and is in the other House. The House has not taken up the bill for divers reasons.

Mr. SEWELL. I will withdraw my amendment under the circumstances.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to do anything——

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to state, in reference to what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] have said, that I believe it is the desire of the Naval Affairs Committee that a general bill shall be passed leaving it discretionary somewhat with the Secretary of the Navy in regard to these matters. Such a bill would take the place, more or less, of these special bills.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think I ought to say that the Senator from New York is right. The bill that I had in mind is Senate bill 2017.

Mr. HILL. I made the inquiry of members of the House as to why the bill was not taken up. I think really we ought not to pass any more of these special bills, and make an additional pressure upon the other House to take up the general bill and pass it. I am advised that the passage of such special bills can do no harm, and it prevents any great amount of mischief being done by other legislation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to offer an amendment, but I wish first to answer the question submitted to me by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. I have no information that is authentic in this matter as to the number of condemned cannon now at the disposal of the Navy Department, but I have information that satisfies me of the fact that it is less than a hundred. I think it is somewhere between eighty and ninety. I do not know; I have not kept a tally sheet this afternoon, but I think we have passed private bills appropriating some seven or eight hundred instead of eighty-odd.

However, I want to offer the amendment in order to assert the loyalty in my State. If these private bills are going through I wish to have 10 cannon for Fort Thomas merely for ornamental purposes. The bill has passed the House, No. 7777, and I offer it as an amendment to the pending bill. I agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] that the general bill which the Senate has already passed should be dealt with by the other House, and we should leave it to the discretion of the Secretary to apportion the cannon as best he can.

Mr. SEWELL. I withdrew the amendment I offered to the bill after I noticed what the bill is, simply because I want the bill to take effect at as early a day as possible, giving cannon to this post. It is a recent organization, and it desires to have a celebration on the 30th of the month, and if the amendments are inserted it probably will not have them in time, as the bill will not get through the other House as amended in due season.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the amendment I offered in any way embarrasses the Senator from New Jersey I will ask to withdraw it.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator is very kind. It does embarrass me. I ask the Chair if any amendment has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from Idaho to withdraw it.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will oblige the Senator from New Jersey by withdrawing the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be considered as reconsidered and withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 6256) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to George F. Fuller Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Manistique, Mich., a condemned cannon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUBOIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "cannon," in line 7, it is proposed to insert "and also four condemned cannon and a suitable pyramid of cannon balls to the State Soldiers' Home at Boise City, Idaho."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Unless it embarrasses some Senator, I will ask to renew the amendment which I heretofore offered.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after the amendment just adopted:

And also 10 pieces of condemned cannon for ornamental purposes for Fort Thomas, Ky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the amendment just adopted:

And also two condemned cannon and four pyramids of cannon balls to the Grand Army post at McLauth, Kans.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that while we have a number of Grand Army of the Republic posts we have only one Soldiers' Home in our State, that at Cheyenne, and I wish to offer an amendment, a duplicate of that offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], except to make it applicable to the Soldiers' Home at Cheyenne, Wyo.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after the amendment just adopted:

And also 10 pieces of condemned cannon and 50 cannon balls to the Montana State Soldiers' Home.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to insert:

And all remaining condemned cannon possessed by the Navy Department to the National Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. HILL. That would exclude Soldiers' Homes throughout the country, would it not? There are a few which are not yet provided for especially by private bills.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think there will be any remnant to be disposed of after the bills which have been passed become laws, but I can think of no more appropriate disposition to make of any chance remnant than to give them to the Grand Army of the Republic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the amendment just adopted:

And also four condemned cannon and four pyramids of cannon balls to the Soldiers' Home at Cheyenne, Wyo.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after the amendment last adopted:

And also two condemned cannon, with suitable pyramids of cannon balls, to the Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, S. Dak.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAKER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to George F. Fuller Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Manistique, Mich., a condemned cannon, and for other purposes."

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER and Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT PORT HURON, MICH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The amendments were, in line 4, after the word "station," to strike out "on the light-house reservation belonging to the United States"; in line 5, before the word "port," to insert "or near"; and in line 6, after the word "Michigan," to insert "at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station at or near Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, in the State of Michigan, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. NELSON, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. MCMILLAN were appointed.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF FILLED CHEESE.

The bill (H. R. 8008) defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of filled cheese was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

F. ALBERTS & CO.

The bill (H. R. 5388) for the relief of F. Alberts & Co., Muskegon, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $435.67 to F. Alberts & Co., of Muskegon, Mich., for money wrongfully collected from them on a claim timber trespass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. JONES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7161) for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones, which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments, in line 7 to strike out "97" and insert "50," and in line 8 to strike out all after the word "dollars" and insert:

In full compensation for all services and expenses in carrying and distributing the mails between Wesson and Beauregard, in the State of Mississippi, in 1883.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to the said Benjamin F. Jones, late postmaster at Beauregard, Miss., or to his order, out of such money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50, in full compensation for all services and expenses in carrying and distributing the mails between Wesson and Beauregard, in the State of Mississippi, in 1883.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported an amendment to strike out the preamble, which was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF TRADE NAMES.

The bill (H. R. 4580) to amend section 3649 of the Revised Statutes was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CHANDLER. The member of the Committee on Finance who reported the bill is not present. I shall desire an explanation of it when it is taken up, and I therefore object to its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over. That disposes of the order of the Senate.

GROUND MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 135) providing for the appointment of a commission to report upon the practicability of establishing near Washington, D. C., a ground map of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not object, but I shall object to any further business.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. CANNON. In line 12, page 2, after the word "area," I move to insert "or on such scale as it may be possible to comprise within the reclaimed or Potomac Flats."

Mr. KYLE. Does that carry an appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. It carries no appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is very late. It is 6 o'clock; let us adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 14, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 13, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. PITNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] has been recognized on a question of privilege.

Mr. PITNEY. I will state the matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the House. On day before yesterday House bill No. 8495 was passed by this House. It is a bill in the usual form donating to John Hill Post, No. 86, of Boonton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls. The bill had been favorably reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and was passed by the House, as I have stated. Later in the same day the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed. He having made that motion, the rules gave him the sole right to call it up at any time during the day it was made or during the succeeding day, ended yesterday. He has not done so. I desire now to call it up for the purpose of asking the House to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], whom I now see in his place, has no objection, I will ask an immediate vote. I do not care to detain the House by any statement unless the gentleman wishes to say something.

Mr. EVANS. I have an objection; but I think the matter can be very easily arranged.

Mr. PITNEY. I am unable to hear the gentleman.

Mr. EVANS. I say that for the present I have an objection, though I think the matter can be very easily arranged between the gentleman and myself, if he will be a little patient and wait, say, until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] calls up the motion to reconsider. Has any gentleman any motion to make?

Mr. PITNEY. I am ready to make a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. I do not care for any discussion unless the gentleman from Kentucky thinks that some discussion is necessary.

Mr. EVANS. I do not know whether the gentleman from New Jersey understood what I just said or not.

Mr. PITNEY. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. EVANS. I said that I have an objection to the matter being taken up now, but I think that the gentleman from New Jersey and myself can very easily arrange this matter by to-morrow morning. I entered the motion for reconsideration with the view of calling the attention of the House to certain matters connected with this question; but I do not know that I shall insist even upon that. If the matter be left open until to-morrow morning, it can probably be very easily settled.

Mr. PITNEY. I regret that it will not be convenient for me to be here to-morrow morning.

Mr. EVANS. Well, whether the gentleman be here or not, I think the matter can be arranged by to-morrow morning so that I may withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman from New Jersey should not be here, I presume the matter could be postponed until he will be here.

Mr. EVANS. Even if he should not be here, I have no doubt the matter may be arranged so that I can withdraw the motion.

Mr. PITNEY. I prefer that the matter should be disposed of now, without consuming any more of the time of the House than I have already occupied.

Mr. EVANS. If the gentleman prefers to have the matter disposed of now, I shall ask that the action of the House be withheld until I can be heard. If the gentleman is not willing to allow the matter to go over until to-morrow morning, so that he and I may talk it over and so that the motion to reconsider may be withdrawn, as I have no doubt we can arrange it shall be, then I shall ask that the gentleman's motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider be voted down.

Mr. PITNEY. Several times since the gentleman entered his motion to reconsider I have approached him with the purpose of ascertaining his wishes in regard to the disposition of the motion. He has at no time expressed any preference with regard to it. I can not conceive of any matter involved here that requires any debate or should call for the consumption of ten minutes of the time of the House. The bill in question is a bill granting condemned cannon and cannon balls to a Grand Army post in my district for the purpose of decorating a soldiers' monument in the town of Boonton. It is a bill exactly similar in form to those of like purpose which have passed this House. I can conceive of no objection to it, reasonable or unreasonable. The bill has been passed without objection. The motion to reconsider prevents the bill from being acted on by the Senate. I desire to have the motion to reconsider tabled, in order that the bill may be released, so that it may go over into the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why not make that motion now?

Mr. PITNEY. I do not wish to cut the gentleman from Kentucky off, and will yield to him if he wants time, retaining the floor myself.

Mr. EVANS. If the gentleman desires it, I will——

Mr. PITNEY (continuing). Because I can not attend to it to-morrow morning.

Mr. EVANS. If the gentleman desires it, I will state to the House what I would have stated to him between now and to-morrow morning, before taking the action which I proposed to take with reference to the motion.

Mr. PITNEY. I do not wish to stifle debate on this question. It has been suggested to me to move now to lay on the table the motion to reconsider. I do not wish to make that motion at once, if the gentleman from Kentucky desires to be heard. If I can do so, I will still retain the floor and yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for an explanation, but not for a motion.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatever to the bill of the gentleman from New Jersey on its merits. When I asked unanimous consent a few days ago for the present consideration of a private bill—a bill concerning the interests of individuals in my district—without what seemed to me to be any adequate reason, the gentleman from New Jersey objected to its consideration, and I was prevented from getting it before the House. I thought, under the circumstance, that it was no more than due to myself and to my people, if he objected to the consideration of private measures concerning them, that I should take precisely the same position with reference to matters in which he and his people were interested; in other words, that the people of my district should have precisely the same degree of justice as his people had. So, when he made a motion or request for the present consideration of a bill I, as I had a right to do, objected to it, and of course without that unanimous consent asked by him the bill could not be considered.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since that objection was entered and the gentleman withdrew from the effort to secure its consideration at that time and I, having business elsewhere, had left the House, shortly afterwards he got a colleague of his to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of another bill, and when that consent was given for the present consideration of another bill and it was passed, the gentleman asked to substitute this bill for the one that he had already succeeded in getting passed, and in that way the gentleman's bill was given unanimous consent and was passed by the House.

Now, I shall not characterize that proceeding as anything wrong; I do not know whether it was or was not; I do not pretend to say; but I do think that it was due to the House that there should have been perfect frankness about it. When I looked at the RECORD the next day I found none of these things, but I have before me the original notes of the stenographer setting out exactly what occurred as I have stated it.

Now, because of that, and only because of that, I entered the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, in order that I might direct the attention of the House to the matter and the manner in which the unanimous consent was obtained. I do not and did not care to indulge in any child's play about this bill or any other bill, but my only object was to protect my district, and to insist that the people whom I represent should have the same privileges on the floor of the House as those represented by the gentleman from New Jersey. And I intended, and shall do it before I sit down—I intended when the matter came up to make this explanation of why I had made this objection, and to say to the people of the Grand Army that the gentleman from New Jersey represents that they would have no obstruction from me in the passage of a simple bill to give them a few condemned cannon. But, as I have said to the gentleman from New Jersey, it was my purpose to have said these things to the gentleman between now and to-morrow morning, and to withdraw the motion for reconsideration, instead of taking the time of the House with this explanation.

Having made that statement, I now do what I intended to and what I would have done if the gentleman had waited until to-morrow morning. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. PITNEY. I will ask the gentleman to let me see the stenographer's notes to which he has referred.

Mr. EVANS (handing them to him). Here they are.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion——

Mr. PITNEY. I should like to be heard for a few moments, Mr. Speaker. I yielded the floor to the gentleman from Kentucky for the purpose of an explanation and not for a motion, or the withdrawal of the motion to reconsider, that being now the pending motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is impossible for us back here to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order, and gentlemen will take their seats. The gentlemen in the aisles in front of the Chair will be seated.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will insist that gentlemen resume their seats.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to say, if the gentleman wants to make an explanation, I will withhold my motion to withdraw the motion to reconsider in order that he can make it. I do not desire to cut him off.

Mr. PITNEY. I should not have occupied the time of the House with a discussion about this very small matter, except that the gentleman from Kentucky has deemed it necessary to explain to the House the reason why he objected to my bill, which I had introduced, a bill granting four condemned cannon and a few cannon balls to a Grand Army post in my district. But since he has thought it necessary to explain the reason why he objected to the consideration of that bill, since he has put it upon the ground on which he has put it, and has called attention to other matters concerning the passage of the bill through this House, I deem it necessary to occupy a few moments in an explanation.

The commencement of this episode, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] has now explained, and explained in a manner that I should not have taken the liberty to state without his open admission upon the floor of this House, was on a week ago last Monday, when the gentleman from Kentucky asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill introduced by himself for the relief of Samuel McKee. The proceedings which then transpired are found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 4, 1896, upon page 4793, and in order that these proceedings may appear now in the RECORD, side by side with the present transaction, I ask unanimous consent, without reading it, to print in the RECORD this extract from the RECORD, relating to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Samuel McKee. If there is objection, Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Clerk to read it in my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the passage which he has described. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to by Mr. PITNEY is as follows:

SAMUEL M'KEE.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 467) for the relief of Samuel McKee.

The bill was read, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Samuel McKee the sum of $1,718, for expenses incurred by him in a contest for his seat in the Fortieth Congress."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PITNEY. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the report or some statement concerning the bill.

Mr. COX. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. COLSON) was read, as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 467) to pay to Hon. Samuel McKee the sum of $1,718 for expenses incurred by him in a contest for his seat in the Fortieth Congress, from the Ninth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

"Your committee find that said McKee's right to a seat in the Fortieth Congress was contested by Hon. J. D. Young; that issues were joined, evidence was taken, and a hearing was had before the Elections Committee of the House, and that the seat was awarded to said McKee.

"The committee further find from the proofs in the case that the said McKee in his said contest incurred, necessarily, expenses amounting to the sum of $1,718, as appears from the itemized account of the said McKee duly verified.

"It further appears that no part of said sum has ever been paid.

"The committee also find that Hon. John D. Young has been paid the sum of $2,500 for his expenses incurred in said contest.

"This claim was before the Committee on Elections of the House in the Forty-eighth Congress, and was favorably acted upon by said committee, but no action was had by the House.

"Your committee would therefore report back the bill and recommend that it do pass."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the right to object.

Mr. EVANS. I should like to explain the bill, because I want everybody to know what it is. I think there will be no objection when the bill is understood.

In the Fortieth Congress the Hon. John D. Young held a certificate of election as a member of this House from the Ninth district of Kentucky, but was never sworn in. McKee contested his right to the seat and was given the place. He presented at the time no account for expenses of contest. Mr. Young was, by resolution of the House, on the 11th of May, 1869, directed to be paid $2,500 for expenses of contest. The Committee on Accounts paid him $1,500. June 24, 1874, an act was passed giving him $1,000, the difference between $2,500 and the $1,500 paid by the Committee on Accounts. Again, on March 3, 1880, by action of that date, he was paid $6,865, his salary as a member of the House up to the date McKee was awarded the seat, although he (Young) had never served. He was never admitted to the Fortieth Congress at all, and on the contest it was held that McKee had a majority of the votes legally cast.

In 1881, Mr. McKee's attention being called to the fact that Mr. Young had been paid the salary and $2,500 for expenses of the election contest, he made out his account and presented it, and it was referred to the Committee on Elections. It was thought that it ought to go to a different committee, and at the next session it was presented to the Committee on Claims. From that date to this, in several Congresses, committees of one House or the other have reported this claim favorably, always recognizing the justice of it.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman inform the House how it was that Young was not awarded his seat, and yet afterwards received pay as a member? What was the ground of his rejection?

Mr. EVANS. Young was not awarded the seat originally because he did not take the test oath and could not take it. On the subsequent contest McKee was held to have received a majority of the votes.

Mr. MILES. Why could not Mr. Young take the oath?

Mr. EVANS. Because he had given aid and comfort to the rebellion. It was shortly after the war. He was therefore not admitted on the prima facie certificate, and when the contest was subsequently determined it was decided that he was not elected.

Mr. PITNEY. What was the date of this election?

Mr. EVANS. To the Fortieth Congress. It was shortly after the war.

Mr. PITNEY. That would be thirty years ago, now?

Mr. EVANS. But this bill has never been paid.

Mr. PITNEY. And he never presented any claim until 1881?

Mr. EVANS. He has been presenting this claim ever since the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. PITNEY. I think it is too stale, and I shall have to object.

Mr. EVANS. I hope the gentleman will not do that. It is a perfectly just claim. I know this man well. He lives in my town, and he needs the money.

Mr. PITNEY. He made no statement of the claim at the time?

Mr. EVANS. He presented his claim as soon as he knew the other man had been paid, who was not entitled to the seat at all.

Mr. PITNEY. Because a previous Congress has passed a wrong bill that is no reason why we should.

Mr. EVANS. This is the only case where the expenses of a contestant have not been paid. I sincerely hope that my friend will withdraw his objection, because this is clearly a perfectly just and proper claim against the Government. The fact that it has not been paid for a long time by no manner of means diminishes the force of the claim.

Mr. MILES. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. EVANS. About $1,700. I speak with assurance when I say this gentleman is entitled to this money and needs it, and I do sincerely hope no member of this House will object.

Mr. PITNEY. I shall have to object. I do not think the statement is satisfactory.

Mr. BAILEY. I assume from the fact that the committee recommend this bill that the claimant filed properly certified vouchers showing that he incurred this expense.

Mr. EVANS. Perfectly satisfactory to the committee, and the claim has been established satisfactorily to committees of one or the other of the two Houses ever since the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. PITNEY. But he never presented his claim until fifteen years after the election. How could he present properly certified vouchers?

Mr. EVANS. It was perfectly satisfactory to those who investigated it.

Mr. PITNEY. Does the gentleman know that he has filed certified vouchers?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I will answer that. Mr. Speaker, this claim comes from the Committee on Claims. Under the law as it exists now, no party contesting an election is entitled to more than $2,000. It requires that the itemized expenses shall be filed with the committee. The trouble in this claim grows out of the delay, and that is all. But that this man incurred these expenses there is no question about that.

Mr. MILES. He filed his vouchers?

Mr. COX. He has filed a statement of his expenses. Of course he can not file the vouchers—that is, vouchers in the proper shape—but he filed his claim with an itemized statement of the expenses that he incurred, and it passed the Committee on Claims upon that idea entirely.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman if this gentleman drew $6,000, and that the same amount was also paid to John Young Brown?

Mr. EVANS. He was paid the salary like any other member.

Mr. TERRY. There was a time during which he did not occupy his seat here, and neither one of them occupied the seat. Now, when this man came in did he draw the money for all that time?

Mr. COX. While in the seat he drew the money.

Mr. TERRY. He drew it for a period when neither one was in the seat.

Mr. EVANS. Like every other contestant, he got his pay back to the time when Congress began.

Mr. TERRY. Now, I have had a case of that kind before Congress for several years, and they never paid the man a dollar.

Mr. PITNEY. That is the trouble with such claims as this. We ought not to pay one of them, because it would establish a precedent for the payment of others.

Mr. COX. Now, hold on one minute and let us get it straight. When a man has a contest for his seat and it is decided in his favor that he is entitled to his seat, would it not be right to pay him the salary?

Mr. TERRY. I say it would. I have no objection to that, but the point I am making is this: That here is a man who did not have a seat more than a few months and drew pay for the whole time; and I have one here who occupied the seat half of the time, and is not allowed any pay and has been knocking at the doors of Congress for years.

Mr. EVANS. I am not objecting to his being paid.

Mr. PITNEY. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] may have an opportunity to move to suspend the rules and pass this bill, but I am not willing to give consent to its consideration. It is too stale.

Mr. EVANS. If I am in order I will move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must follow the order of business that has been proceeding.

Mr. EVANS. Do I understand the gentleman to insist on his objection?

Mr. PITNEY. Yes, sir; I am constrained to object.

Mr. PITNEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, that was a bill providing for the appropriation of the sum of $1,718 out of the Treasury of the United States, to pay to Mr. Samuel McKee his expenses of an election contest over an election to the Fortieth Congress. The Fortieth Congress took office thirty years ago, or at least over twenty-eight years ago. The election in question occurred twenty-nine years ago. It appeared from the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] at the time (and I have since verified it by referring to the files of this House, where the statement appears over the signature of Samuel McKee) that he had allowed fourteen years and over to elapse before he made any statement or submitted to any authority any statement of claim for the expenses incurred by him in that election contest; and it also appears in like manner that he made no such claim until he (McKee) accidentally discovered that his contestee, the party whom he had succeeded in unseating, had procured appropriations to defray not only his salary, but also the expenses which he, the contestee, had incurred in that election contest, and that then, in 1881, finding that one or two Congresses, exercising (I think in a very questionable manner) their discretion, had voted to the contestee his share of the expenses of the contest, Mr. McKee presented a claim for $1,718.

I objected to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Samuel McKee, and I beg the gentleman from Kentucky and I beg the House to understand that I had no personal reason for objecting to its consideration. It was not by reason of any personal matter between the gentleman from Kentucky and myself that I objected to it. I objected to the consideration of the claim because it was barred five times over by the statute of limitations; because it was barred by the negligence and laches of Samuel McKee for fifteen years failing to present a claim; because it was barred by thirty years' delay in enforcing the claim; because the statement made upon the floor of this House when the consideration of the bill was asked for showed that he had not presented and could not present to the Committee on Claims any vouchers certified in the manner contemplated by the law and the practice of this House. It seemed to me that the claim was an extraordinarily stale claim, that it was stale by reason of the laches of the claimant, that it was very questionable whether we ought to pass the bill; and inasmuch as no obligation was imposed upon us by any law to pay these election expenses, and as the contestant himself had not urged them until so late a time, I thought that this time, when we are striving by every effort to keep down the expenses of the Government, was a very inopportune moment to pass a bill like that under unanimous consent.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a question of order. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. This general discussion is not a matter of privilege——

The SPEAKER. It is not a matter of privilege, but the subject before the House is the motion to reconsider a certain vote previously taken. That is now before the House.

Mr. STEELE. I understand the motion to reconsider has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands not, but that he has withdrawn the withdrawal.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

Mr. McMILLIN. An hour.

Mr. PITNEY. I think I can get through in a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied about nine minutes.

Mr. PITNEY. I will try to get through in a short time. I want the gentleman from Kentucky to be assured that when I objected, when I refused to give my consent to the consideration of the bill he presented, it was because I thought it was my duty as a member of this House, not by reason of any personal feeling against him. On the contrary, it was in spite of a feeling of warm personal friendship between me and the gentleman from Kentucky that I made that objection. The gentleman from Kentucky and I have been personal friends ever since the beginning of this session, sleep nightly under the same roof, and daily meet in our personal relations; and I need not assure him that I had no personal feeling against him.

Now, then, what was the next occurrence? I asked consent two days ago, and one week subsequent to the incident to which I have referred, for the present consideration of this bill of mine, to which the gentleman stated no objection, or at least gave no reason for his objection; and the gentleman now admits he had no objection to it. He now stands upon this floor and states that he raised objection to its consideration only because I had objected to the consideration of a bill in which he says the people of his district were interested. I do not see how the people of his district are interested, beyond one citizen. If it had been a bill which affected the interests of the people of his district, and of which he was a better judge than any other member of this House, I should have hesitated to enforce an objection, although one might reasonably lie against his bill; but, inasmuch as it was a claim against the Government, which we could judge of just as well as the gentleman who introduced the bill, I thought it was my duty to object when I considered that a valid objection lay against it.

And because I objected to the consideration of a bill for his district, and, the gentleman says, without any other reason than that, he objected to a perfectly unobjectionable bill which I introduced for a patriotic object, in order to get a few relics of the war of the rebellion for decorative and ornamental purposes for a post of the Grand Army of the Republic in the district which I have the honor to represent.

Now, I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will reflect for a moment, and he will see that if objections such as he interposed are to be practiced there would result dickers and deals between members for mutual and reciprocal favors in such matters, and——

Mr. MEREDITH. Will my friend permit a question? I only wanted to say how sweet and lovely a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in harmony.

Mr. PITNEY. I think a little clearing of the atmosphere is very good in that direction.

Such a practice, I repeat, would result in "deals" between members which would be better befitting a board of aldermen made up of ward politicians than suitable to the American Congress.

Now, then, the next thing that occurred, as the gentleman has said, was this: After he left the Hall my colleague [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER], at my request, asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of this same bill. That is what he intended to ask for. But, by mistake, a different bill was placed in the hands of the Clerk to be read, and was read. The gentleman from Kentucky says that he has consulted the stenographer's original notes and they show a certain state of facts to exist. I make no contradiction of that. I consulted what were laid before me as the original notes of the stenographer, referring to the proceedings when my bill was passed, and they do not develop the state of facts which the gentleman has said actually occurred. I made no alteration of the stenographer's notes. But be that as it may, the bill which I desired to have passed, House bill 8495, was not substituted surreptitiously, was not substituted unfairly, was not substituted at all until after the Speaker, at the request of my colleague [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER], had called attention to the fact that the wrong bill had been read. Moreover, the second bill was not substituted, as the minutes of the stenographer show, until it had been read at length, and unanimous consent had been asked for its substitution, and unanimous consent had been given. Therefore, if the gentleman, or any other gentleman, had desired to interpose an objection, he had his full and fair opportunity to interpose it pending or after the reading of the second bill—that is, House bill 8495—the same as if that bill had been first read. There was absolutely nothing surreptitious about it.

Now, my colleague [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER], in asking consent for the consideration of that bill, was acting within his rights as a member of this House; but I am free to say, Mr. Speaker, that if I had supposed the gentleman from Kentucky or any other gentleman on the floor had any valid or reasonable objection to the consideration of my bill, I should not have asked my colleague, or any member, to bring it up again before the House at the same session unless assured of the presence of the gentleman who had formerly objected. But I surmised—I should not have stated it, but I surmised—what the gentleman from Kentucky has now deliberately told us, that he had really no objection to the consideration of my bill except that I would not consent to the consideration of a bill which sought to make what I believed an improper charge upon the public Treasury; and therefore I took the course which I did take. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky now, in all kindness, that I think the old soldiers in whose interest my bill was introduced would rather I should go back to them without having secured its passage than that I should have bargained for its passage by consenting to the consideration of any bill which I thought was not proper to be brought before the American Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have taken so much time, and if the gentleman from Kentucky does not desire a further hearing, I will now move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and will ask the members of the House to support me in that motion. I will, however, yield to the gentleman, if he desires it, for the purpose of an explanation only.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the House will agree with me that this is very much ado about nothing. I have not had the slightest desire to charge anybody with wrongdoing in this matter. I have not felt the slightest inclination to put myself in a position to bargain with anybody. The gentleman from New Jersey objected to the interruption of the proceedings of the House for the purpose of giving unanimous consent to a bill for which I asked consideration. I should not have complained if the gentleman had voted against my bill; all I asked was that it should be considered, and if the House did not care to pass the bill it could have rejected it. But, Mr. Speaker, if my bills ought not to be considered out of order, it seems to me that the bills of the gentleman from New Jersey ought not to be so considered.

This is not a question of bargain; it is a question of comity and good feeling, which, as the gentleman has expressed it toward me, I certainly feel and have felt it toward him. My surprise was that the gentleman should have entertained the idea that he was bound to guard the Treasury of the United States to such an extent as to object to giving the House an opportunity to consider a bill which had been knocking at the doors of Congress for fourteen years; that he should not have been willing to let the House consider it and pass its judgment upon it, instead of by his single voice debarring the House from the privilege and, I believe, the pleasure of doing justice to the good old soldier for whose relief that bill was introduced.

The gentleman from New Jersey tells us that his bill was intended to serve certain old soldiers in his district; but the beneficiary of my bill also was a good old soldier. He was a man who saw and felt the torments of Libby Prison, and who for fourteen years has felt the torments of seeking consideration by Congress of his just claim, and I was surprised that the gentleman from New Jersey should feel unwilling to permit this House to have the pleasure of considering such a bill. Now, I have been perfectly frank in this matter. I have said that I objected to the consideration of the gentleman's bill because he had objected to the consideration of my bill. I say now that I think that is perfectly proper. I feel that I should have as many rights for my district upon this floor as the gentleman has for his, and if I do not get them it will not be for want of trying.

So far as the other aspects of the matter are concerned, I have no objection to the gentleman's bill, and I told the gentleman that I should have preferred to have had this matter settled outside of the House; but as it has given him the opportunity of making a good speech, I do not regret that he has brought it up here.

Mr. PITNEY. May I ask the gentleman what arrangement could have been made outside of the House?

Mr. EVANS. I should have said to the gentleman outside of the House what I have said now to the House. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws the motion to reconsider. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE RECORD.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. WHEELER. I offer a privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama moves to strike out of the permanent RECORD the matter inserted by Mr. PAYNE on Tuesday (yesterday), aside from the matter, according to the Reporter's notes, delivered by him in his three minutes' time, said matter being on page 5008.

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the resolution will say "aye."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to explain that resolution. I have an hour's time under the rule. I shall not occupy all of it, but I do desire a few moments to explain the resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, is this determined to be a question of privilege?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is not presented for the purpose of antagonizing the gentleman from New York——

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a question of order. Has it been decided that this is a question of privilege?

Mr. WHEELER. I offered that resolution not for the purpose of criticising the gentleman from New York——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Maine rises to a question of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. My question of order is whether this is a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point of order that it is not?

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the point of order that it is not.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to speak on the point of order. I submit, Mr. Speaker, it is too late to make the point of order. I had been recognized, and commenced the debate on the resolution.

The SPEAKER (after examining the resolution). The Chair thinks that the resolution is in order; and the gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. WHEELER. I offered the resolution, Mr. Speaker, not for the purpose of criticising the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], for whom I have the greatest respect and the kindest feeling, but to give myself an opportunity to correct a statement——

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, has the resolution been read?

Mr. WHEELER and others. It has been.

The SPEAKER. The resolution was read.

Mr. WHEELER. To give myself an opportunity to reply to the unwarranted assertions which the gentleman made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama must confine himself to the resolution under discussion.

Mr. WHEELER. I will do so, Mr. Speaker; but I trust you will allow me to approach it——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must keep within the rules.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] made a speech yesterday insisting that a member had no right to insert anything——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must confine himself to the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. I am trying to state what it is that the resolution sought to reach.

The SPEAKER. It is a proposition to strike out from the RECORD what has been inserted.

Mr. WHEELER. I am trying to state in the plainest language and in the briefest manner what the offense was, and I shall contend that what was done by the gentleman was not a violation of any rule as has always been interpreted by this House prior to 12 o'clock yesterday. Yet almost before the gentleman's eloquent voice had ceased to resound through this Hall, which eloquence more than all else caused the adoption of a resolution putting a new and different interpretation upon the rules, he proceeds with all haste to the stenographers and violates the very rule which his eloquence had caused to be adopted by this House. He was the first man to violate a rule which he largely had caused to be adopted.

It seemed to me that the animus of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Iowa was different from what appeared in their remarks. It seemed to me that their purpose was to use the overwhelmingly Republican majority which now controls this body, so far as lay in their power, to put a member of the minority to a disadvantage.

It showed the truth of the old adage:

Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do.

Since the controlling majority of this body has determined not to enact legislation and to abandon the purpose for which it was elected it has been getting into mischief. The gentleman from New York in a thoughtless moment of excitement committed a very serious error which I am confident he did not intend. He said that the gentleman from Alabama had inserted—

Not only a page or two, but often dozens of pages of matter never delivered in the House, and has inserted without the consent of the House these lengthy articles in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama must confine himself to the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. I am doing so, Mr. Speaker; you will find that I am if I am allowed to proceed with——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must speak in order.

Mr. WHEELER. The Chair knows that I have great respect for him personally, and I am endeavoring to confine myself strictly within the rules of order.

The SPEAKER. The resolution before the House proposes to strike out what has been inserted by the gentleman from New York in the RECORD.

Mr. WHEELER. And how can I discuss that resolution unless I state what the gentleman said? I want the same privilege which the Speaker allowed to those who made the attack upon me yesterday. No objection was made to their going on in their own way; and now when I am trying to repeat what they said and explain in what particular the rules were violated, I am called to order.

The SPEAKER. That is not the question before the House. It is whether certain things shall be stricken out of the RECORD; not what was said.

Mr. WHEELER. I am trying to state what they are.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to discuss the merits of what was said at that time, but whether certain things shall be stricken out.

Mr. WHEELER. But how can the House know how to vote upon a question of this sort unless the particular violation of the rule is explained as the matter was explained yesterday? The Speaker very properly allowed a full statement yesterday. He did not limit members at all. They were allowed to go on without limitation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Alabama that the time of the House ought not to be occupied except on the resolution itself.

Mr. WHEELER. I think so, too.

The SPEAKER. Nothing else.

Mr. WHEELER. I am trying to confine myself to that.

Mr. DOCKERY (to Mr. WHEELER). State what the gentleman from New York said.

Mr. WHEELER. I was trying to read what the gentleman said, but I was called down—called to order.

The SPEAKER. It is not what the gentleman said that is the question, but what he did not say.

Mr. WHEELER. I am trying to state what he said, and then state what appears in the RECORD. It is impossible for a member to proceed if he is to be called down or to order every time he opens his mouth in trying to explain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make that complaint against the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Can the gentleman from Alabama point out a single word, in what is printed in the RECORD, that I did not utter on the floor of the House yesterday?

Mr. WHEELER. I can point out words which were not put down by stenographers——

Mr. PAYNE. I ask the gentleman——

Mr. WHEELER (continuing). When I went down to see my remarks yesterday afternoon I found that certain words had been interpolated in the remarks of the gentleman from New York which were in his handwriting.

Mr. PAYNE. Can you point out a single word that appears in the RECORD that I did not utter on the floor of the House in debate on yesterday?

Mr. WHEELER. The rule adopted on yesterday was that we must be confined to what the stenographers put down. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] That is the rule adopted on yesterday; and I ask in my time that the resolution adopted on yesterday be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be stricken out of the permanent RECORD the matter inserted by Mr. WHEELER on Friday last, aside from the matter, according to the reporter's notes, delivered by him in his five minutes' time; said matter being on pages 5472, 5473, 5474, and 5475.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Speaker, a word that I see was changed is this: On page 140 of the RECORD copy he puts in the words "to be stopped," which were not written by the stenographers. [Laughter.] He puts in the words "that he has a right," and adds "matter of," according to the RECORD, and none of these words were written by the stenographers. They appeared to have been written by Mr. PAYNE. But the serious feature was the assertion by the gentleman from New York that—

The gentleman from Alabama has seen fit to violate this rule of the House by inserting not only a page or two, but often dozens of pages of matter never delivered in the House.

Now, the stenographer's notes showed that the word "dozen" was used by Mr. PAYNE; but the gentleman from New York appears to have added an "s" to the word dozen; so that this morning it reads in the RECORD "dozens." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the gentleman from Alabama to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I am trying to explain to the House by reading the words as they appear in the RECORD and then stating in that connection what the gentleman actually did say, as shown by the stenographer's notes. I can not get along without that latitude.

Now, I submit that that sentence to which I have referred was changed in the RECORD. As first stated by the gentleman it was "dozen pages." He inserted an "s" and made it "dozens of pages." [Laughter.] Not satisfied with the grossly unfounded charge that I had put a dozen pages in, he goes and puts an "s" to it, so that it reads "dozens of pages." [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, is it not a matter of privilege for a member who is charged falsely by anyone to make a correction——

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to call the gentleman from Alabama to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will resume his seat.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to say that the gentleman is discussing what took place at some other time, and has no reference to the resolution now before the House. The resolution before the House is to strike from the RECORD what is alleged to have been printed that was not uttered by the gentleman from New York on yesterday. If the gentleman desires to point out the specific thing or language uttered or inserted in the RECORD, the House may be detained for the purpose of considering it, but I insist that the House can not be and should not be detained by totally irrelevant matters.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the gentleman from Alabama be permitted to proceed in order.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I was endeavoring to express my criticism of that part of the RECORD which appears this morning as to the insertion of the letter "s" after "dozen." [Laughter and applause.] That word was not used and does not appear in the stenographer's notes, and then, again, it is a very serious violation of the rules of the House for one member to make an unfounded statement which is derogatory to another——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Alabama should confine himself to the question and proceed in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not in order, if a member has been——

The SPEAKER (continuing). The Chair hopes the gentleman will proceed in order. He knows what is in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I have written it out in such a way that I thought was in order. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Better abandon your manuscript. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not in order when one member of this House interpolates into the RECORD certain statements regarding another which are not true that he can have the right to rise on the floor and politely and courteously state the facts and refute the untrue statements?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in reply to the interrogatory, will state that under the present proceedings it is not.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, then, I will amend the resolution so as to make it in order and bring it within the rules as prescribed by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that he has risen to a question which suspends the business of the House, that the public business stops until this matter is disposed of, and therefore he should confine himself to points strictly in order with reference to the resolution, which is that certain things shall be stricken out of the RECORD. It is not to fight the battle over again which occurred yesterday or at any other time, but it is to dispose of the question whether certain words should be stricken out, and the Chair hopes that the gentleman from Alabama will remember what the situation is.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate what the Speaker has said about the importance of time, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, and then I will occupy no further time.

Mr. HENDERSON. You mean on yesterday's performance?

Mr. WHEELER. I want to proceed for five minutes without these constant interruptions.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will not be any objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] asks permission to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BREWSTER. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman is compelled to proceed in order he will not have anything to say, because he can not criticise——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is not in order.

Mr. BREWSTER. If the gentleman's request is limited to five minutes, I will withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is withdrawn. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman will proceed for five minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think the gentleman from New York, on cool reflection, would be willing to allow the statement that he made regarding myself to remain in the RECORD. It is utterly unwarranted and without foundation.

The other occasion to which the gentleman must refer was when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] criticised a slight change that I made, which only involved a change of twelve words, and that change was made in order to make my statement accurate, and the gentleman from Maine immediately made changes in his own remarks and violated the very rule that he had invoked. Again, in the last Congress a question was brought up, complaining of my extending my remarks, which involved an extension of about two pages. The other occasion where a motion was made to strike out, which did not carry, was where I made a speech in the Forty-seventh or Forty-ninth Congress, and Mr. Kelley of Pennsylvania moved to strike my speech out of the RECORD because it did not suit him [laughter], and it will be remembered that the House would not do it. It is there yet. Those were the only complaints that I can recall that were ever made against myself, and it shows that the gentleman's statement is utterly groundless and without foundation; his first statement, "dozen pages," was utterly unwarranted, and when changed to "dozens of pages" it was astoundingly so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the rarest exceptions I am indebted to my Republican brethren on that side of the House for most gratifying courtesy to me, a courtesy which has always been most highly appreciated and valued by myself, and the reason why I confine my remarks and criticism to the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is that I felt that I had reasons to expect more consideration from a fellow committee member with whom I had enjoyed a long and always pleasant service.

Now, the figures which the Republican majority struck out of my speech yesterday were illustrative of a criticism on my part of what I regarded as improper appropriations, a character of appropriations which I would criticise with equal readiness whether made by party friends or party foes.

Every man in this House knows that while I have been a member of this body I have been one of the foremost advocates of liberal appropriations for proper subjects—carrying on the Government, improving our harbors, improving our rivers. What I oppose and criticise is what are called jobs. It cost no more during the Republican Fifty-first Congress for the legitimate expenses of the Government than it did during the preceding Democratic Congresses, but the jobs thrown in were what caused the extra appropriation. That is what I sought to criticise. That is what seemed to hurt the gentleman who moved to strike out those tables.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to confining the RECORD to what the stenographers write down in their notes: They are most remarkably accurate; so universally and remarkably correct as to elicit our wonder and admiration; but how often have we heard members rise and say, "There is so much tumult in the Hall I can not hear what a man says 2 feet from me." That being the case, how can the stenographers at that desk hear what is said in that noise and tumult? And when I made that speech the other day gentlemen will remember the noise and excitement that there was in this Hall, and that gentlemen filled up the aisle and the space in front of the Clerk's desk so that the stenographers could not possibly have heard all that was said, and yet the resolution adopted yesterday, if insisted upon, would confine the RECORD to what the stenographers succeeded in hearing and omitting all that was said that they did not happen to hear. Now, I wish to say, in closing——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (S. 2642) to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers;

A bill (S. 730) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Helen Morrell Carroll; and Joint resolution (S. R. 15) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., certain cannon, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committees on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the Senate (S. 2488) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes,'" by striking out the word "nine," in line two of said enrolled bill, and inserting "eight."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5105) to abolish days of grace on promissory notes, drafts, etc., in the District of Columbia.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a resolution with reference to the business of the House.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House its resolution notifying the Senate that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Washington for a moment.

TWYMAN O. ABBOTT.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask at this time unanimous consent for the consideration in Committee of the Whole of the bill H. R. 7226 on next Friday morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to consider a bill immediately after the reading of the Journal on Friday.

The bill was read, as follows.

A bill (H. R. 7226) for the relief of Twyman O. Abbott.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Twyman O. Abbott, of Tacoma, State of Washington, his heirs or legal representatives, the sum of $27,748.75, in full and final settlement of his claim for damages sustained by reason of the breach of a certain contract for lease of a building and grounds for post-office purposes.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $27,748.75 is hereby appropriated for the purpose of paying the above claim.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A parliamentary inquiry. Is this a recognition by the Chair or by the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. It is a recognition by the Chair.

Mr. DOCKERY. Incidentally.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state——

Mr. COX. One inquiry.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before there is any discussion——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request is that the bill may be brought up for consideration—substantially made a special order for Friday morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the practice ought not to be adopted of assigning a special bill for a special time. Let the assent be asked at the proper time, and not be made a special order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. NEILL. I object.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—RINAKER VS. DOWNING.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the session of yesterday I had finished the remarks which I deemed it necessary to make with reference to that branch of this election contest that related to the so-called "assisted voters," and had finished all I had to say with reference to all the other questions in the case except only the questions which arise upon the record growing out of the wrongful issuing of the injunction in the Sixteenth district of the State of Illinois, which prevented the complete opening and recounting of all the ballots which were cast for the parties to this contest at the election of November 6, 1894.

There remains, however, to be considered the injunction, the main question in the case, as I regard it, as the committee regarded it upon both sides, as I believe, and as various members of this House appear to regard it, so far as I am able to judge from private conversations with them. What, then, is the question with reference to the injunction? Briefly stated, that question is this: It was found immediately after the announcement of the result of that election, first, that the plurality in favor of the sitting member was a very small one, only 40 out of a total vote cast in the district of 38,323 votes.

It was found that there had been errors committed here and there throughout the district. It was rumored that to a considerable extent such errors had been discovered here and there, sufficient to overturn the result. Two contests had arisen in two of the counties of the district over local offices, such as treasurer and sheriff. In the course of the contest in those cases it was discovered that the errors which were surmised to exist were actual errors. The contestant in this case gave the usual notice under the statute of the United States that he would contest the certificate of election which had been given in favor of the sitting member [Mr. Downing]. There is no denial that the proper notice was given and that it was given in proper time. There can be no denial but that the statute of the United States gave the right to make the contest. In fact, the United States statute upon the subject is clear and explicit. It is contained in Title II, chapter 8, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, sections 110, 111, and 123 of which provides as follows:

SEC. 110. When any contestant or returned member is desirous of obtaining testimony respecting a contested election he may apply for a subpœna to either of the following officers who may reside within the Congressional district in which the election to be contested was held:

First. Any judge of any court of the United States.

Second. Any chancellor, judge, or justice of a court of record of any State.

Third. Any mayor, recorder, or intendent of any town or city.

Fourth. Any register in bankruptcy or notary public.

SEC. 111. The officer to whom the application authorized by the preceding section is made shall thereupon issue his writ of subpœna, directed to all such witnesses as shall be named to him, requiring their attendance before him, at some time and place named in the subpœna, in order to be examined respecting the contested election.

SEC. 123. The officer shall have the power to require the production of papers; and on the refusal or neglect of any person to produce and deliver up any paper or papers in his possession pertaining to the election, or to produce and deliver up certified or sworn copies of the same in case they may be official papers, such person shall be liable to all the penalties prescribed in section 110. All papers thus produced and all certified or sworn copies of official papers shall be transmitted by the officer, with the testimony of the witnesses, to the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

There, Mr. Speaker, was a clear, explicit, and full authority given under and by virtue of the act of Congress providing for and allowing the ballots and other papers pertaining to the election in the district to be produced before the officer, the notary public, or other person selected under the act of Congress to take the testimony. Immediately upon the notice being given by the contestant that he would proceed under those sections of the statute, the contestee in this case, instead of obeying the authority of the Federal statute, proceeded in the State court, the circuit court of Morgan County, by a bill in chancery, alleging and setting forth in direct terms that the contestant claimed the rights which are guaranteed to him under the sections of the Federal statute which I have read, and setting forth, claiming, and pretending that a section of the law of the State of Illinois prohibited that from being done. The section of the Illinois law set up in the bill is this:

In all cases of contested election the parties contesting the same shall have the right to have the package of ballots cast at such election opened, and to have all errors of the judges in counting or refusing to count any ballot corrected by the court or body trying such contest; but such ballots shall be opened only in open court, or in open session of such body, and in the presence of the officer having the custody thereof.

Now, such a construction of that section of the Illinois statute was claimed and contended for in the bill for an injunction as would set it in direct opposition to the Federal statute which I have read. I have only to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is the opinion of the majority of the committee that no such construction should be given to the Illinois law, that that statute should be construed to be in harmony with the Federal statute, and that where, under the Federal statute, an officer is given power to proceed with a subpœna duces tecum and to bring in these records and papers, he is a tribunal created by the lawful authority of the United States and clothed with the power to try the contested election to the extent of receiving, recording, and forwarding the evidence to the Congress when it shall convene.

That is the view of the majority of the committee. It commends itself to my mind because it places the statute of my State in harmony with the law of the United States, and does not give to that statute such a construction as would leave upon the statute book of the State of Illinois a law attempting to nullify the Federal law. I believe that is the true construction to make of that statute.

Now, Mr. Speaker, proceeding immediately after this injunction decree had been entered, each one of the different county clerks throughout the district was served with the injunction order; each one of them was made a party to the suit; each one of them was enjoined from producing the ballots, papers, and records pertaining to that election by a strange and peculiar form of order.

Mr. BARHAM. Did the court have jurisdiction to make that order?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. My opinion is that upon the bill, if it had been demurred to, the demurrer should have been sustained.

Mr. BARHAM. But jurisdiction is never waived for want of a demurrer. That is an elementary proposition. You can not confer jurisdiction by consent. Now, did the court in that case have jurisdiction?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Oh, I think the court had jurisdiction, strictly speaking.

Mr. BARHAM. Well, then, is not that judgment or decree an absolute verity?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. It is to be so taken by the parties to it until reversed by a court of competent appellate jurisdiction; and it is just at that very point that the wrong was done, because no appeal could be taken until the time had expired for taking evidence in this case.

Mr. BARHAM. One question more. Assume that Mr. Downing, the contestee, the seated member, committed any kind of wrong—that he suppressed evidence, for example—will you unseat a member of Congress for any error which he may have committed, and thus deprive the people of their duly elected representative? Whatever error he may have committed, assuming that he committed a most egregious error in getting this injunction, why should the people of that district lose their representative who was in fact elected?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I will answer the gentleman in the words of the learned author of Paine on Elections:

SEC. 1000. Under that provision of the Constitution which makes the House of Representatives the judge of the elections, returns, and qualification of its members, the House may adjudicate the question of a right to a seat in either of the four following cases:

(1). In the case of a contest between a contestant and a returned member of the House, instituted in accordance with the provisions of title 2, chapter 8, of the Revised Statutes;

That is the very statute which I have been discussing.

(2). In the case of a protest by an elector of the district concerned.
(3). In the case of a protest by any other person, and
(4). On the motion by a member of the House.

The proceeding in the first of these actions is by the Revised Statutes made a proceeding inter partes, a suit or action in which the contestant is plaintiff and the returned Representative defendant. The management of this suit or action is by law placed in the hands of these parties. They are not only permitted, but required to frame and serve the pleadings which give form to the controversy. They are permitted and required to serve upon each other the notices under which the depositions are taken. They may stipulate to take depositions without notice. In taking the depositions they may appear in person or by agent or attorney. In a word, notwithstanding the controversy involves interests of a public nature, its form and fate are subjected by the law to the control of these parties. Their acts, omissions, diligence, laches, waivers, admissions, and stipulations may under the law always prove decisive of the contest. As between these parties, therefore, the contest provided for in the Revised Statutes is in the strictest sense a suit, an action, a litigated case.

Mr. BARHAM. Right there, will the gentleman permit me? Suppose that Mr. Downing had gone before the notary public and admitted that the contestant was duly elected, would that be conclusive upon Congress?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Most decidedly not, under the very authority which I have just read, because the power still resides in Congress to hear the petition of any elector of the district.

Mr. BARHAM. Well, then, does it not follow that any action which Mr. Downing took, by the restraining order or otherwise, does not bind Congress at all and is not a suppression of evidence?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. If any elector of the district should come here and file a petition it would be the duty of this House and of our committee, if it were referred to us, to act upon the case, as I take it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will it interrupt my colleague on the committee if I should make a suggestion? I do not wish to interrupt his argument if it is at all objectionable to him.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. As the gentleman knows, I am not in a fit physical condition to speak very long; but I will gladly hear his question.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Following up the question of the gentleman from California [Mr. BARHAM], I was about to call my colleague's attention to a case decided by this House, the case of Follett vs. Delano, which is somewhat in contradiction of the authority just read. I refer to 1 Bartlett on Elections, page 113, where, citing the case of Follett vs. Delano, it is stated:

All the electors in the district have a vital interest in the question at issue; and no one of them can be precluded by any laches not his own from insisting that the will of the majority shall be regarded. No confession of the sitting member can place the contestant in the seat, unless he is the choice of the majority, nor deprive that majority of its rightful representation.

I thank my friend for allowing me to read this statement.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I prefer the very careful and studied statement given in Paine on Elections to any decision that can be quoted, because that work goes over the entire subject and deals with the different classes of cases in which these controversies may arise and states the law on each class by itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I was about to say, the injunction decree was entered; the injunction order was served on each one of the county clerks in the eight counties of the district. And there the contestant was met by an insuperable objection or difficulty, one which he could not get over, to the opening and counting of the ballots and the production and inspection of these records of the election. It was no fault of the contestant; it was no crime on the part of the contestee. It was, as I claim, a wrongful act, an unlawful act—something prohibited by law which was done by the contestee and which prevented the Federal statute from running and taking effect. It does not involve any moral turpitude; it involves no misdemeanor, no crime, or anything of that nature. It simply involves, as produced against the contestant, a great wrong. It prevented the contestant from having the benefit of a law of Congress, which he was as well entitled to invoke in his favor as the contestee would have been entitled to invoke it in his favor, had he desired to have the ballots opened and inspected in any contest which he might have made, or which might have been made against him.

The subpœnaes were issued by the notary public under the Federal statute to each and every one of the county clerks, requiring them to bring in the books, the papers, the ballots, and all the records pertaining to that election. Each one of the county clerks came forward and replied that he had been enjoined from producing or allowing the ballots to be produced or opened or counted.

Mr. Speaker, speaking with all the sincerity and with all the solemn sense of duty which attended the utterances yesterday of the gentleman from Massachusetts when he spoke of the position in which he found himself in this case, stating substantially that he wished to do no man any wrong, I feel in this case as high a sense of moral responsibility, I trust, as does my friend from Massachusetts. And I say, standing here in my place, that upon a careful examination of these judicial proceedings, this bill, this injunction, these various subpœnas, these various injunction orders, and the returns made by the county clerks in the various counties, and all the proceedings pertaining thereto, I assert upon my responsibility as a lawyer and as a man of fairness and with a just disposition that a very great wrong was done right there. As I have privately said to my friend, Mr. Downing, if it were not for that injunction I would see no way in which to disturb the result in this case.

In friendly conversation I have told him—he knows what I believe on this question—that that injunction produced a very great and serious wrong, and that I am as conscientious, as deliberate, as fair in the expression of my views on this subject as admittedly my friend from Massachusetts is. It is simply a question now, not of fraud, not of crime, not of any intentional wrongdoing. I do not charge it, but it is a simple question as to whether we can in this case give our sanction and approval to a proceeding in a State court which shall attempt to nullify and set at naught the Federal statutes, which are plenary, which are complete, which cover the subject, which give a certain important right, and which right has been denied.

Not to take up too much time of the House, I will proceed rapidly, Mr. Speaker.

The consequences of evidence being wrongfully suppressed are stated by approved text writers on the law of evidence. There is no mystery about it. We are not without a guide, both of law and precedent, in determining what to do in such a case as this where there has been a wrongful suppression of lawful and legal evidence. We are not without the proper guide as to what the consequences of it should be. Starkie on Evidence, marginal page 846, says:

If, on the supposition that a charge or claim is unfounded, the party against whom it is made has evidence within his reach by which he may repel that which is offered to his prejudice, his omission to do so supplies a strong presumption that the charge or claim is well founded; it would be contrary to every principle of reason * * * to all experience of human conduct to form any other conclusion. * * *

(Page 847): Again the maxim of the law is omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem.

Greenleaf says, volume 1, section 37:

The presumption of innocence may be overthrown and a presumption of guilt be raised by the misconduct of the party in suppressing or destroying evidence which he ought to produce, or to which the other party is entitled. Thus the spoliation of papers material to show the neutral character of a vessel furnishes a strong presumption, in odium spoliatoris, against the ship's neutrality. A similar presumption is raised against a party who has obtained possession of papers from a witness after the service of subpœna duces tecum upon the latter for their production, which is withheld.

The general rule is omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. His conduct is attributed to his supposed knowledge that the truth would have operated against him. Thus, if some of a series of documents of title are suppressed by the party admitting them to be in his possession, this is evidence that the documents withheld afford inferences unfavorable to the title of the party. Thus, also, where the finder of a lost jewel would not produce it, it was presumed against him that it was of the highest value of its kind. But if the defendant has been guilty of no fraud or improper conduct, and the only evidence against him is of the delivery to him of the plaintiff's goods, of unknown quality, the presumption is that they were goods of the cheapest quality.

Citing 2 Pothier's Obligations (by Evans), Sir Samuel Romilly's argument in Lord Melville's case, 29 Howell's State Trials, 1194, and numerous other cases.

I intended to refer to the point made in the minority report as follows:

Is it just for that reason to deny to Mr. Downing the benefit of the testimony of the ballots which were actually cast for him? Mr. Downing acted upon the advice of counsel, which was confirmed by the decision of the court. If we look beyond Downing to the people who voted for him, how can we justify to them our refusal to ascertain the truth from their ballots simply for the reason that their candidate, in acting upon the advice of counsel, proceeded upon a wrong view of the law?

On this question the law of elections is well settled, as I endeavored to show in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARHAM] a moment ago. Mr. Downing, the contestee, stands in the position of a party litigant. Paine on Elections, section 1009, just read, covers the question entirely, and I need not go into it again.

The elementary rules of evidence amply cover the cases of voluminous documents and records, such as those involved in the evidence furnished by a multitude of ballots or records of returns in an election case. There is no insurmountable difficulty whatever in arriving legally and logically at the result of a mass of ballots brought forward in evidence. There is no mystery about the matter of ascertaining the results from and contents of such legal documents any more than in counting other papers, records, or accounts over which there may be a controversy. The law is well settled as to that class of evidence. I quote from Greenleaf on Evidence, Volume I, sections 82, 91, and 93:

A fourth rule which governs in the production of evidence is that which requires the best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible. * * * Its design is to prevent the introduction of any, which, from the nature of the case, supposes that better evidence is in the possession of the party. It is adopted for the prevention of fraud; for when it is apparent that better evidence is withheld it is fair to presume that the party had some sinister motive for not producing it, and that if offered his design would be frustrated. The rule thus becomes essential to the pure administration of justice. * * *

SEC. 91. The rule rejecting secondary evidence is subject to some exceptions; grounded either on public convenience or on the nature of the facts to be proved. * * *

SEC. 93. A further relaxation of the rule has been admitted, where the evidence is the result of voluminous facts, or the inspection of many books and papers, the examination of which could not conveniently take place in court. Thus, if there be one invariable mode in which bills of exchange have been drawn between particular parties, this may be proved by the testimony of a witness conversant with their habit of buisness, and, speaking generally of the fact, without producing the bills. But if the mode of dealing has not been uniform, the case does not fall within this exception, but is governed by the rule requiring the production of the writings. So, also, a witness who has inspected the accounts of the parties, though he may not give evidence of their particular contents, may be allowed to speak to the general balance, without producing the accounts. And where the question is upon the solvency of a party at a particular time, the general result of an examination of his books and securities may be stated in like manner. (Note 2, Meyer vs. Sefton, 2 Stark. R., 274.)

NOTE 2. When books and documents introduced in evidence at the trial are multifarious and voluminous, and of such a character as to render it difficult for the jury to comprehend material facts without schedules containing abstracts thereof, it is within the discretion of the presiding judge to admit such schedules, verified by the testimony of the person by whom they were prepared, allowing the adverse party an opportunity to examine them before the case is submitted to the jury. (Boston and W. R. R. Corp. vs. Dana, 1 Gray 83, 104. See also Holbrook vs. Jackson, 7 Cushing, 136.)

Starkie on Evidence, marginal page 645, is to the same effect:

Neither is the rule strictly adhered to where a mere negative is to be proved, especially where it results from inspecting documents of a voluminous nature. And although a witness can not give evidence of accounts not produced, he may, it seems, be examined as to the general state of such accounts, or he may give evidence of the general course of trade, as that the practice has been to accept bills in a particular form, according to one invariable course of dealing.

I have read these authorities, Mr. Speaker, for the reason that there seems to be some doubt and obscurity in the minds of some of our friends, not members of the legal profession, as to the mere matter or question of the recount, as though there was something mysterious about the fact of giving evidence of the results of a recount. There is no mystery about it. It is merely the testimony of a witness who swears that he inspected the papers, and who states the numbers of them, with schedules, and the condition in which he found them, the other side having the equal right to put a witness or witnesses on the stand to show the contrary if it can do so.

I might say right here that the best evidence in this case was, of course, the ballots themselves and the original election returns, which were suppressed by the operation of the wrongful injunction, and hence and for that reason only the secondary evidence was admissible. And yet our friends, the minority of the committee, object to the introduction of secondary evidence, because forsooth, it is not the best evidence. Of course it is not. The contestant desired and applied for the best evidence; he proceeded under the Federal statute, which granted him the right to have the best evidence, but it was denied him by the wrongful operation of this injunction, although subpœnas were issued to secure that evidence. Each county clerk when he came in was compelled to make answer that he was under an injunction of the court, preventing him from producing the papers.

I must hasten to a conclusion. The position of the minority of the committee as to a recount of the ballots, shown by the evidence in Macoupin and Cass counties, is substantially that it is quite excusable and to be overlooked that the best evidence, the ballots, was suppressed by the injunction; and when the secondary evidence of the contents of the ballots is offered, that secondary evidence, though the best attainable, is objected to because it is not the best evidence, the evidence which was suppressed by the injunction.

Now, I need not take the time of the House to go into details as to the testimony of Mr. Murphy, Mr. Waggoner, and Mr. Bell as to the details of that recount. It lasted only two or three days. It was a matter of close inspection by Mr. Murphy, sitting at the shoulder of Mr. Waggoner, before whom each of the ballots was opened. Mr. Murphy was selected because of his tried, well-known, and reliable character. Not a breath of suspicion has gone out against him. He sat at the shoulder of Mr. Waggoner with a book in his hand and made the tally as the ballots were opened, and had plenty of time to do so. Mr. Waggoner corroborates his testimony as to the nearness of his position to the ballots and the clear opportunity that he had to make that count. The testimony of Bell has been referred to as indicating that Mr. Murphy was not sitting in such a position as to enable him to make this recount. I have to say that while the minority has quoted somewhat from the testimony of Mr. Bell, it has omitted to quote from Mr. Bell's testimony one statement which he makes, which, in my opinion, shows that he was badly prejudiced and biased in his view of the matter, and that he wished to give his testimony such a turn as to make most strongly against the credibility of Mr. Murphy's count.

I quote from page 507 of the record in this case:

Q. Please state what position Mr. Murphy occupied in keeping that count?
A. I think all the time Mr. Murphy kept the count he sat in the rear of Mr. Waggoner, and I think he sat upon one of those high office stools.
Q. About how far would the ballot be from Mr. Murphy at the time it was read off by Mr. Waggoner—what distance?
A. Well, allowing for the space which must have been occupied by Mr. Waggoner at the end of the table and the location of Mr. Murphy's stool, which must have been about two feet and a half away from the end of the table, and Mr. Murphy was sitting on the edge of that stool.

You see he there placed it at only 2½ feet away. Mr. Waggoner had said that Murphy sat within 1 foot of him, not more than 1 foot away, and this witness is rebutting the testimony of Waggoner. He says, continuing his answer:

No, I will change that. Without unnecessarily crowding, I would say Mr. Murphy's stool would stand about 3 feet or such a matter from the end of the table, and he would be on that high stool above Mr. Waggoner's head, and that would bring Mr. Murphy's eyes 4 or 5 feet from the ballot, and may be 5 or 6, but it could not have been less than 5 feet, I should think.

Well, how absurd that is, to suppose that an intelligent man, like Mr. Murphy is shown to have been, who was there for the purpose of doing his duty, sat five or six feet away from the ballots when he could easily sit within one foot of Mr. Waggoner, who opened the ballots. I think there has been nothing adduced to throw the slightest discredit upon the statement made by Mr. Murphy, that he had a full, complete, and ample opportunity to inspect each ballot as it passed before them there, and to make a correct and exact record of it in his book, and he swears to it positively from his book. Mr. Murphy, of course, only had the mere matter of the Congressional vote to inspect. He had no more to inspect than the counters and inspectors there had with reference to the other office which was being contested for.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I should like to say that I have postponed until this part of my argument the brief discussion which I desire to make upon the proposition that any State statute or the decision of any State judge construing a State statute can be held to nullify or set at naught or render ineffective a law of the United States, because it is upon that point that the controversy turns, because if the injunction was rightfully entered, no complaint can be made against it, and the secondary evidence which was introduced in this case was illegal, improper, inadmissible, subject to the objections which were made against the same, should not have been considered by the committee, and should not now be considered by the House; and in that case the contestant has no standing here whatever. But, strange to say, this carefully prepared report by the able gentlemen on the opposite side of the question says:

We do not deem it material to the decision of this case to pass upon the merits of this injunction.

Think of that! Not material to pass upon the merits of this injunction. What a strange idea that there is a contestant here seeking a seat upon the floor of this House, relying admittedly upon secondary evidence only, alleging that he had a right to introduce secondary evidence because the best evidence was suppressed by the operation of an illegal injunction, and yet the minority of the committee say they do not regard it as material to pass upon the merits of that injunction. I do not think the injunction has any merits. It is suggested to me that the complainant, who procured the injunction, had the right and the power at any moment from the time he filed the bill down to the time of the meeting of Congress last December to have had the injunction set aside and to have gotten at the ballots and had them counted and to have opened them up and to have allowed them to be inspected, but he never for a moment chose to do so.

This seems to us a late day in the history of the United States for a court in any State, upon any application, to proceed upon a bill or upon a petition or on any form of complaint whatever to erect a State statute into such dignity, power, and conclusive force as that it shall annul a law of the Federal Government. That law is the law of Congress. I have read it in this hearing. It is upon the statute books. It was passed and intended to cover such cases as this; and yet the bill asking for an injunction, and the injunction decree itself, proceeds upon the theory that a State statute of Illinois may be subject to such a construction that a Federal statute as against it shall have no force, operation, or effect. I need not refer to the long history of the struggle for what has been called "State sovereignty"—the right of a State to pass a law in disregard of the provisions of a Federal law. I need not refer to the long controversy over that question, which led, as we all remember, to most unfortunate results when pursued on the field of battle.

I will refer now only to two great authorities upon that subject for the purpose of refreshing the minds of gentlemen who may have forgotten the exact subject. The exact point to which I refer is decided in Tarble's Case, 13 Wallace, United States Supreme Court Reports, page 400. There the following language is used:

The Constitution—

Said Mr. Chief Justice Taney—

was not framed merely to guard the State against danger from abroad, but chiefly to secure union and harmony at home; and to accomplish this end it was deemed necessary when the Constitution was framed that many of the rights of sovereignty which the States possess should be ceded to the General Government and that in the sphere of action assigned to it it should be supreme and strong enough to execute its own laws by its own tribunals without interruption from a State or from State authorities. The two governments in each State stand in their respective spheres of action in the same independent relation to each other, except in one particular, that they would if their authority embraced distinct territory. That particular consists in the supremacy of the authority of the United States when any conflict arises between the two governments. The Constitution and the laws passed in pursuance of it are declared by the Constitution itself to be the supreme law of the land, and that the judges of every State are bound thereby, anything in the constitution or the laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

I have the full opinion here. I have read from the extract in order to make it briefer. I may, I think, with propriety refer to the celebrated debates by Mr. Webster on this great question. He spoke on State nullification of Federal laws on numerous occasions, some of which are as follows: Speech on the subtreasury, January 31, 1838; speech on "The Constitution not a compact between sovereign States"—a reply to John C. Calhoun, February 16, 1833; speech at Pittsburg, Pa., July 8, 1833; speech at Worcester, Mass., October 12, 1832; speech at New York City, March 10, 1831; speech in reply to Hayne, January 26, 1830.

I will read briefly from the latter speech. Mr. Webster said:

I understand the gentleman to maintain that, without revolution, without civil commotion, without rebellion, a remedy for supposed abuse and transgression of the powers of the General Government lies in a direct appeal to the interference of the State governments.

Mr. Hayne here rose and said: "He did not contend for the mere right of revolution, but for the right of constitutional resistance. What he maintained was, that in case of a plain, palpable violation of the Constitution by the General Government, a State may interpose; and that this interposition is constitutional."

Mr. Webster resumed:

So, sir, I understood the gentleman, and am happy to find that I did not misunderstand him. What he contends for is, that it is constitutional to interrupt the administration of the Constitution itself, in the hands of those who are chosen and sworn to administer it, by the direct interference, in form of law, of the States, in virtue of their sovereign capacity. The inherent right in the people to reform their government I do not deny; and they have another right, and that is to resist unconstitutional laws, without overturning the Government. It is no doctrine of mine that unconstitutional laws bind the people. The question is, Whose prerogative is it to decide on the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of the laws? On that the main debate hinges. The proposition that, in case of a supposed violation of the Constitution by Congress, the States have a constitutional right to interfere and annul the law of Congress, is the proposition of the gentleman. I do not admit it. If the gentleman had intended no more than to assert the right of revolution for justifiable cause, he would have said only what all agree to. But I can not conceive that there can be a middle course between submission to the laws, when regularly pronounced constitutional, on the one hand, and open resistance, which is revolution or rebellion, on the other. I say the right of a State to annul a law of Congress can not be maintained but on the ground of the inalienable right of man to resist oppression; that is to say, upon the ground of revolution. I admit that there is an ultimate violent remedy, above the Constitution and in defiance of the Constitution, which may be resorted to when a revolution is justified. But I do not admit that under the Constitution and in conformity with it there is any mode in which a State government, as a member of the Union, can interfere and stop the progress of the General Government by force of her own laws under any circumstances whatever.

Those are the celebrated words of perhaps the greatest exponent of the Constitution of the United States, next, possibly, to John Marshall, that this country has ever produced. His honored remains rest in the State from which my friend hails, and I commend his doctrine to the study of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] who preceded me in this discussion.

Mr. MOODY. I agree to every word of it.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I have no doubt of that, but the gentleman does not practice that doctrine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen on the other side, I suppose, are ready to proceed.

Mr. MOODY. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to disagree with my colleagues upon the floor of this House upon questions involving party policy, but I do not understand that the question in issue is one of party policy. It is true that we have here a contested-election case in which a Republican is making a contest for a seat now occupied by a Democrat, and the Elections Committee on both sides have cleared the way so that there is a single proposition which is conclusive in this case; not conclusive as to the ultimate rights of the parties, but conclusive as to this particular stage of the contest. If the minority is right, the ballots should be recounted before the House acts. If the minority is wrong, the House should take Mr. Murphy's count and let that end the case.

Now, I am not prepared to accept the views of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] who has just taken his seat, that the Illinois statute is in derogation of the Constitution of the United States or of the act of Congress. On the contrary, that statute is a lawful statute, enacted for a proper and laudable purpose, and if it had not been for that statute the very ballots that we desire to count in this case could not have been preserved. We must recollect, Mr. Speaker, first, that there are, I believe, 52 men elected to different offices on that same blanket ballot.

Mr. MOODY. Fifty.

Mr. LACEY. About 50. Now, any one of those candidates might have a contest. One of them did have a contest in Macoupin County. Under the statute of Illinois the candidate for treasurer, or any other candidate, anybody who is named upon the ticket, having a contest, may have the ballots opened and they may be recounted in the presence of the court. After the count is made the court should see that they are sealed up and preserved; preserved in order that any subsequent contest may proceed, notwithstanding the fact that the ballots have been brought into court and examined by the court in one contest. Now, when my friend from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] says that that statute is in derogation of the rights of Congress he certainly does not look at its real purpose. The purpose of that statute is to preserve the rights of General Rinaker, to preserve the rights of Mr. Downing, so that when the treasurer got through with his count the ballots could be reopened and recounted again in the presence of the court. And if Mr. Rinaker on such recount is found to have a majority of those votes, if Mr. Murphy's count is correct and that of the 50 election judges, selected by opposite parties, who were watching each other is wrong, Mr. Rinaker will have the seat.

Now, experience has taught me that in the matter of counting ballots any man ought to be watched, even in Illinois or any other State of the Union. It makes no difference where such a count is going on, the only safe way is to have some persons on the opposite side, men of intelligence, selected by the respective parties, to see that honesty is observed in the counting of the ballots. Illinois is noted for its honesty. It has a delegation here almost unitedly Republican. I have great confidence in the State of Illinois. I should have been glad if this district had elected General Rinaker; and if he has been elected I shall vote to seat him. But we can not tell whether he has been elected or not until those ballots shall have been recounted, and the statute of Illinois provides a method. In the Fifty-first Congress I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Elections, and this very question came up before that committee in the case of McGinnis vs. Alderson, and I propose to read an extract from the report in that case, showing the view which the committee took of this question.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will ask my colleague to give his attention, if he has not already done so, to the question whether the contestant had the power, notwithstanding the injunction, to have those ballots counted.

Mr. LACEY. He has the power now.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has that question been discussed by you?

Mr. LACEY. I am going to talk about it presently. He has never lost that power. The ballots are still in existence. They were sealed up in the presence of the lawyers on both sides after the treasurer's contest, and in the presence of the election officers, sealed up and put in a trunk, the trunk sealed, and the key put in a sealed envelope, which is in the county clerk's safe, in the custody of a good, honest Republican official.

Mr. HENDERSON. Conceding all that, how could the contestant have reached that count?

Mr. LACEY. I am going to tell you; but in the first place, when I was interrupted by my colleague I was about to make a quotation from the case of McGinnis vs. Alderson. In that case there was a recount, under the laws of West Virginia, for the office of governor, as there was in this case in Illinois for the office of treasurer, and there was a recount for the office of Congressman, just as a recount is sought here. I was directed by the majority of the Committee on Elections, a Republican committee, on which were some strong lawyers, Mr. Rowell, of Illinois, was the chairman—I was directed by that committee to prepare a report, from which I will read an extract to show the position that the committee took then as to the effect of State laws upon recounts:

> In the West Virginia election cases in the present Congress, and in the famous case in the gubernatorial contest between Fleming and Goff, we have had striking illustrations of the dangers of a recount of the ballots, where a change of a few tickets may affect the result. The law of West Virginia, while it provides for such recount, attempts to throw around the recount such elements of safety as will prevent a fraudulent change of the ballots. Such recount is always viewed with suspicion and is full of danger.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] says that the statute of Illinois is in derogation of the law of Congress——

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me, I did not say that the statute was in derogation of the law of Congress. I do not think it is. I think it has been falsely construed to be so, that is all.

Mr. LACEY. Well, I think you have falsely construed it to be in derogation of the United States law, because there is nothing in that statute which interferes at all with an honest count of the ballots cast in the Congressional election. In this report we say further:

> The law of West Virginia is as follows:
> "They shall, upon the demand of any candidate voted for at such election, open and examine any one or more of the sealed packages of ballots and recount the same; but in such case they shall seal up the same again, along with the original envelope, in another envelope, and the clerk of the county court shall write his name across the place or places where it is sealed, and indorse on the outside: 'Ballots of the election held at ——, the district of ——, and county of ——,'" etc.
> The law also provides that the original packages shall be sealed up at the place of voting, as follows:
> "When the said certificates are signed, the ballots shall be inclosed by the commissioners in an envelope, which they shall seal up, and write their names across the place or places where it is sealed, and indorse on the outside of the said envelope as follows: 'Ballots of the election held at ——, in the district of ——, and county of ——, the —— day of ——,'" etc.
> In order to justify a recount it ought to appear that these requirements have been complied with, or clearly shown that the failure to comply therewith has resulted in no injury.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. LACEY. I would like to answer my friend from Illinois, but I will yield to the gentleman for a moment. My time is very short.

Mr. HALL. A question has been asked in regard to the recounting of those ballots. I wish to ask this question, which seems to me directly in point: Is it not the fact that if the majority report be adopted, those ballots never can be and never will be recounted? If the minority report is adopted, it simply allows those ballots to be recounted.

Mr. LACEY. By adopting the report of the minority, the case is not ended at all. We are called upon by the majority of the committee to accept the count of Mr. Murphy and seat General Rinaker. I hope the recount, if had, may seat him, because he is of my political party and I am in sympathy with him; he is an honorable gentleman, once, I believe, a distinguished member of this House, and I should be glad to see him occupy the seat. But I do not want to seat him upon the statement of Mr. Murphy as to these ballots when the ballots are where we can see them for ourselves; where the Committee on Elections can see them for themselves.

When I was interrupted I was reading from the report in the McGinnis case, in which the committee goes on further to say that "in order to justify a recount it ought to appear that these requirements," that is, the requirements of the West Virginia statute, "have been complied with or clearly shown that the failure to comply therewith resulted in no injury."

We found in that case that the ballots had not been properly cared for; that the requirements of the West Virginia statutes had not been complied with. In behalf of the Republican in that contest, I said there should be no recount; and I based my position on the statute of West Virginia. Now, under the statute of Illinois, I say there should be a recount. The statute provides for it. The ballots have been preserved. We have a Committee on Elections appointed expressly to investigate matters of this kind and with ample power under the Constitution to recount these ballots.

Let me call the attention of my friend from Illinois to a further fact. He mistakes when he assumes that the notary had power to make a recount. No such power is given under the Federal statute. No such power has ever been given under Federal statute to recount the ballots. That being conceded, we must get our power from the Constitution; and the Constitution gives the House power to determine the elections and qualifications of its own members; and the ballots being in existence, we have the power to make the law in this case and to recount those ballots.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the gentleman know that in the last Congress it was decided that the ballots were a part of the papers in the case, and that the notary had the power to recount?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; but you and I voted against that report.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not against that part of it. That part was approved by the honest men of the House.

Mr. LACEY. In the last Congress we saw Charles F. Joy turned out of his seat in disregard of the rights of the parties.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not speaking of the Joy case.

Mr. LACEY. I am not asking that this House shall now decide the Rinaker case. I am simply asking that we should not shut our eyes to the evidence; that we should not refuse to look at the evidence as it now exists and shelter ourselves behind an injunction, and say that because this contestee unlawfully sued out an injunction (if he did do so) that he shall be deprived of his seat. It will not do to say that because he did a foolish thing that you are going to unseat him. If we undertake to unseat every man in Congress who does some foolish thing, think how hard it will be to maintain a quorum in this House.

Mr. COLSON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the custody of those ballots since the original count has been such as to preclude the possibility of change?

Mr. LACEY. It is so stipulated in the record.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no; I take issue squarely with the gentleman. There is no such stipulation.

Mr. LACEY. I am following the report of the committee, and the report so states.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will allow me, I can answer that question so that there will be no mistake about it. When this contest was proceeding a stipulation was made by the sitting member, at the request of Mr. Rinaker, that the ballots were then in the condition that they reached the various county clerks, in the condition in which they left the hands of the election officers. The testimony then affirmatively showed that they remained in the hands of the county clerks down to the time of the recount. The testimony further showed affirmatively that after the ballots were recounted in the presence of the county court they were restrung under the direction of the judge of the county court——

Mr. LACEY. In accordance with the statute of Illinois.

Mr. MOODY. In accordance with the statute of Illinois, and were sealed up in a trunk; the trunk was locked; the key was sealed up, and put into a safe; and yesterday there was read on the floor of this House certificates of the clerks that when the record closed those ballots were in that condition.

Mr. LACEY. Those ballots are now in the hands of those county clerks——

Mr. HOPKINS rose.

Mr. LACEY. I decline to yield until I have had an opportunity to finish my statement.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to answer the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. LACEY. I decline to yield for that purpose. The gentleman can make the answer in his own time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if it is true that the ballots have not been properly preserved, if it be true that the Republican official who has them locked up in his sworn custody there has not taken proper care of them, that is a matter which the Committee on Elections can ascertain, and if it be so determined they can decline to count them. But it is sought now to accept the count of these ballots by the statement of Mr. Murphy. The count was going on between two candidates for treasurer, and the record shows that when they got through with the recount it made only a difference of either two or three votes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to have a few minutes' additional time.

Mr. MOODY. I yield ten minutes longer to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. The evidence shows, I was proceeding to say, Mr. Speaker, that these ballots have been properly kept. If they have not been, of course they would not be counted.

Now, it is contended that the suing out of the injunction compels us to take the count made by Murphy. Suppose he did make a count. Are we to take his count against the count of 50 honest election officers of the State of Illinois? Why, I am surprises that my friend from Illinois has so little confidence in the officials of his own State as to be willing to impeach the count made by 50 officials of the State and take in preference to their count that of one man——

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman refers to me, I want to say that he entirely misapprehends my position.

Mr. LACEY. I must decline to yield to the gentleman. You will have your own opportunity to explain.

I will only say that this reminds me of an occasion where a client of mine found some thirty or forty witnesses testifying against him, and he told me he knew how to get around them. I asked him how. And he said, "Why, I will go on the stand myself and impeach them all." [Laughter.] That is what Mr. Murphy does. He goes on the stand; he impeaches the testimony of 50 officers of the State of Illinois selected under the statute, one as a Republican, one as a Democrat, sitting on opposite sides of the table keeping count, keeping tally on each other, watching each other as closely as men would watch each other in a game of cards to prevent cheating; and the evidence shows that when they got through with that recount it only made a difference of either two or three votes in the total vote for treasurer.

With such a count as that, Mr. Speaker, I ask if it is likely that Murphy is correct in his count and the officials are entirely wrong? Is it not more probable that election officers counted more accurately, counting the ballots in sequence as they did, and with every facility to secure accuracy, rather than that the count of Mr. Murphy was a correct one?

Now, when we concede that Mr. Murphy may possibly be wrong, and it must be remembered that he only counted 25 precincts out of a hundred and sixty-odd, that he only counted 25 precincts out of this county and omitted 11 more, and when we find that the recount made this difference of 39 votes only in the total of nearly 6,000 votes, it seems to me that if the ballots are where we can get at them, that the Committee on Elections can secure them, they have the power to secure them, and that is the proper way to determine the matter by an examination of the ballots themselves. Mr. Rinaker had power to appear in the injunction case and ask to intervene and by intervening motion move to dissolve the injunction or to be allowed to complete the count in the presence of the court issuing the injunction, as he had a right to do under the law of the State of Illinois.

But, now, suppose the statute of Illinois had not been in force. The count made by the two treasurers in their contest would have left their ballots in inextricable confusion, so that they would have been unreliable for a recount; and, further, the controversy between Mr. Rinaker and Mr. Downing could not have been fairly tried; the ballots would have been counted by some Democratic notary public, for it was a Democratic contest, and he would have to be trusted with the care of them for that purpose. I can not help recalling a remark Mr. Mason, of Illinois, made about the Democrats, that he would be perfectly willing to have a Democrat administer his estate, to have a Democrat act as guardian for his children, but he would not trust a Democrat up a dark alley with a ballot box. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Or with issuing an injunction, either, to suppress evidence.

Mr. LACEY. Well, this injunction was sued out under the law of the State and in conformity with the statutes of Illinois. It provided that the ballots when opened should be counted and preserved and again sealed up. That was the substance of it, and the evidence is still in existence. This contestee is charged with suppression of testimony in the case. What is the testimony? It is the ballots themselves, not the examination of witnesses before a notary public. That notary was not an officer like a master in chancery to state an account between a Democrat and Republican, with power to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and cross-examine witnesses. All he could do was to issue subpœna papers, and there was no Federal statute authorizing the recount. Hence, if the recount was made it must be under the requirements of the law of Illinois, and it does not strike me that the injunction was illegal and unfair. But the main fact is that the ballots are there now and are still accessible. This committee can send for them. This Congress will probably be in session until the 1st of June. They can have these ballots here inside of a week. They can count them, and then if General Rinaker is elected—as I hope he will be, as I should be glad to have him—he will be elected, not by me, not by my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], who does not live in that district, but elected by the people of his district, and they are the ones who are concerned in this matter. But they say that the same principle applies in this case as though he had suppressed testimony, as though he had made way with a bond or an obligation and concealed it.

Now, the principle does not apply here at all, for this reason: Mr. Downing has no more knowledge of the contents of these ballots than has General Rinaker. All he knows is that under the laws of Illinois he has the certificate, and he does not want to give it up, and he sued out an injunction. That injunction delayed the furnishing of the ballots to the House. It did not prevent it. It simply delayed it, and they can be furnished, and this House, with its 140 Republican majority, can not afford to be unfair about this. Let us send for the ballots, bring them before the Committee on Elections, let them be counted, and then we will determine whether the Republicans, Democrats, and Populists constituting the election board made a mistake or whether Mr. Murphy made a mistake. One or the other made a mistake. I am not prepared to overturn 50 men with one, and that one with a hop-skip-and-jump count like this. Mr. Murphy did not understand that he was making an official count. At that time no injunction had been sued out. He did not know his testimony would be taken. He was simply checking off to see whether it was worth while to have a recount. That is all.

I am not here to advocate the good faith of Mr. Downing in suing out the injunction. I care nothing about it. I think, perhaps, the proper thing for him to have done would have been to have stipulated with General Rinaker, and made some provision for a recount. But that is not the question. The question is whether the ballots are still there; whether the evidence has been suppressed; and this committee says it has not been suppressed; that the ballots are there. The action which Mr. Downing took prevented a Republican notary public from counting the ballots, or certifying the result of a count in his presence, and that, too, when there is no statute authorizing such a recount in the presence of any Federal official under the act of Congress.

But, Mr. Speaker, this whole debate has proceeded upon the theory that the act of Congress authorized a recount before a notary public. I ask my friends upon the other side—and I do not like to speak about Republicans as being on the other side, because I am on their side—I ask those gentlemen who disagree with me upon the question of the law to point out any Federal statute which authorizes a notary public chosen by the contestant to make a recount. There is a law authorizing him to summon persons and papers, but sealed ballots are not papers within the meaning of that law. Ordinarily, under the laws of most of the States, the ballots are destroyed immediately after the count. They are only preserved in some few of the States. They are preserved under the Australian ballot law of the State of Illinois, and no doubt have been carefully and properly preserved. No man here has raised his voice to impeach the honesty and integrity of the officers and the manner of keeping those ballots.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. If I understood the gentleman from Iowa correctly, he says that a notary public could not require the counting of those ballots. A notary public under the Federal law would have the same power and the same authority that a Federal judge would have. Now, I ask the gentleman if it is not in accordance with the spirit and the letter of that law that a Federal judge or a notary public, as the case may be, would have the power to issue a subpœna duces tecum——

Mr. LACEY. I think not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Wait until I get through. I ask the gentleman whether a Federal judge or a notary public would not have the power to issue a subpœna duces tecum to the county clerk and compel him to produce the ballot and then make him swear how many ballots were cast for General Rinaker, and how many for the sitting member, as shown by the ballots themselves?

Mr. LACEY. There is no such provision in the law.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. LACEY. When you come to speak to the House, I ask you to read the provision of the law. There is a provision for summoning persons. There is authority for the issuing of a subpœna duces tecum to bring in papers, and that is all. When the papers are produced the notary public has no authority to count them. He should not have. It would not be safe to intrust a partisan notary, with nobody on the other side to watch him, to make this count.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to participate in this debate except for the reason that reference was made by a gentleman in the discussion yesterday, as I understood him, to the necessary action of certain members of this House because of their action upon the case of English against Peelle. As I understood, it was stated yesterday that that case furnished a precedent for this case, and that those gentlemen who voted against the unseating of Peelle would necessarily have to vote against the seating of the contestant in this case.

The reference of the minority of this committee to that case was an unfortunate one. There is nothing similar in the cases. In that case it was sought by a secret arrangement to secure one of a board of three gentlemen who were by the court ordered to recount the votes in the case of the contest in the canvass for sheriff, one gentleman being authorized by the father of the contestant secretly to count the votes cast for Congressman. During the first day 9 precincts were counted. He says that during that count he found that errors amounting to 99 were made in the canvass for Representative. On the morning of the second day it was found that this gentleman was engaged in that recount. Then another of the commissioners associated himself with this gentleman, Brown, and together they counted the other twenty-five or twenty-six precincts. They found that in the recount, when both were counting together, that the vote of Peelle was increased 127 instead of being decreased, as this gentleman had said was the case with reference to the other 9 precincts. This man Brown then said that there was nothing in the recount for English; that he would so advise Mr. English; that he was satisfied that the vote of that county was favorable to the contention of Peelle. But later he went upon the stand and testified that he had discovered errors to the number of 99 in the first 9 precincts. The question determined by the minority of the committee in that case then was of the credibility of this witness Brown, not one of competency. There is not a word in that report, sir, that you can find as to the competency of the proof; but it all turned on the credibility of the witness, and the minority of the committee believed that he had lied.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit me? Mr. Speaker, the gentleman seems to misapprehend what I said and I desire now to correct him. I said yesterday that no question of competency of testimony of Brown was involved in the case of English against Peelle, but I said the minority of the committee, the Republican members of the committee, refused to accept the testimony of Brown against the official count.

Mr. HEPBURN. They refused to accept the testimony of Brown because they believed him to be utterly unworthy of belief, because he had made statements out of court contradicting those he had made in court, because he was an impeached witness. That was it, sir; and it is not a precedent for this case.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman again permit me?

Mr. HEPBURN. Again, Mr. Speaker, it is unlike this case in another respect. It differs from that case as to what would be secondary evidence, because there the ballots existed; the ballots were accessible; the ballots could have been resorted to. No injunction existed there. There had been no suppression of proof in that case.

Why, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen are disturbed in this case because they say the proofs here relied upon are incompetent and are secondary. Is that true? What is the rule? The rule requires the production of the best testimony of which the case is susceptible; and that is all. The best attainable; that is all. The deed would be the best evidence of its recitals. Destroy the deed, and a properly certified copy is the best evidence attainable of which the case is susceptible then. Destroy the copy, and then the oral declarations of witnesses as to what the recitals were is the best evidence of which the case is susceptible. Here in this case there was better evidence at one time, that of the ballots. That is put entirely beyond the reach of the contestant in the case by the act of the contestee. He did it. He makes it impossible to get that evidence, and all the environments of the case show that it was done with evil purpose.

What is the experience of lawyers on this floor? I expect some of them at least have at times been willing that competent evidence might not be introduced against their side of a contention, but why were they solicitous? Because they knew harmful results would follow its production. No man seeks to exclude testimony that he knows to be competent, no honest man, except when he knows that it is going to be hurtful to the issue that he is trying to support. This man, after he became satisfied that those proofs were perilous, invoked the aid of an injunction. Look at the reasons given by him—flimsy—not one worthy a moment's consideration. He fears that there will be "a pretended count." Why, Mr. Speaker, the man who conducts that count is for that purpose a court, charged with all the responsibilities that the oath he has taken and the duties prescribed to him by statute can impose—a court to which this contestee had access by himself, by his counsel, by his friends. He states that he feared a "pretended count." Why, Mr. Speaker, it could not be a "pretended count." It is a count to which he is a party; it is a count in his (the contestee's) litigation; it is a count in his presence; it is a count conducted and aided by his attorney and under the sanction of statutes. I think we have a right to look at all these environments, to look at all these reasons assigned.

But, again, he says that his object isto preserve the sanctity of these ballots so that later on they can be used, perhaps. Why, Mr. Speaker, in the case of two of the counties, prior to this oath of his, attached to the petition for the injunction, that sanctity had been destroyed (if it can be) by the handling of the ballots by profane hands. Yet these are the very ballots in issue. These are the ballots to which suspicion attaches. These are the ballots now in controversy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I yield the gentleman such additional time as he may desire.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want only a few minutes more.

Mr. Speaker, this testimony that we have now before this committee is the very best of which the case was susceptible when the record closed. Mark the date provided as the time to which this injunction should extend—March 4, 1895. Why was that? Simply because it overlapped the day when proofs might in proper manner be introduced by the contestant.

Mr. MOODY. Those ballots were not to be reopened and recounted except by order of some court of record of the United States or the State of Illinois or by the House of Representatives before the 4th of March, 1895.

Mr. HEPBURN. What court, I would ask the gentleman, could have made such an order? What House of Representatives could have made such an order? There was no tribunal in existence to make that order; and therefore the restraining order might just as well have been without limitation of any kind.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman asks what tribunal could have made such an order, I answer, this House of Representatives.

Mr. HEPBURN. But it did not convene until December last.

Mr. MOODY. It might legally have met as early as March 4, 1895.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] allow me to ask him a question? I should like to know how many votes he claims would have been changed.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am discussing a particular branch of this case——

Mr. BRUMM. I should like to know how many votes would have been changed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Thirty-nine votes, so far as this matter is concerned.

Mr. BRUMM. And would that have been enough to change the result?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am only discussing this phase of the case.

Mr. BRUMM. Would that many votes have been enough to change the result?

Several MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Gentlemen around me say "yes."

Mr. MOODY. Not enough to change the result, without deciding some other questions in favor of the contestant.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the resolution of the minority prevails, we then allow the contestee in this case to take advantage of his own wrong. We allow him to draw his salary up to the convening of the next session of Congress. We are paying him a reward of three or four thousand dollars for a wrong which, in my judgment, he has committed, in the suppression of proof in this case, a suppression which was without warrant, without reason, without justice, without excuse. No gentleman on the other side can give a valid reason why the contestee should have resorted to that injunction. I have wondered why some of these gentlemen who get so warm in defense of the minority have not said something to justify this man in attempting to impede the orderly and proper investigation of the case under the laws of Congress. What was the reason, gentlemen? Will not some of you state it? Will not somebody tell us why it was that the ordinary course of proceeding under the law was not allowed to be pursued? Why was the injunction necessary? Will not some apologist for the contestee tell us?

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me a single remark? As a juror in this case, I should like to have that question answered. There is a stumbling block in my mind. If that question can be answered satisfactorily, it will have a very great bearing on my mind, and possibly the minds of others.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have been trying to persuade some gentleman to tell me the reason.

Mr. HULICK. Will not the gentleman suspend his remarks for a moment and let some one satisfactorily answer that question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you want me to "pause for a reply"? I will do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Let the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] answer.

Mr. MOODY. I did not hear the question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want some gentleman to give a reason why the contestee in this case interrupted the orderly procedure of the contest, as prescribed by the Federal law, by a resort to the process of injunction. Why did he do it?

Mr. MOODY. In the first place, I say he did not do it; and in the second place, if he did, the reasons are given in the petition which appears in the record accompanying the case.

Mr. GROUT. What are the reasons?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will read them.

Mr. MOODY. I hope the gentleman will read them all.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will.

And your orator says he has reason to believe and does believe, and so charges, that if such demand is made by said Rinaker said officers will comply therewith and issue his subpœna as aforesaid, and that said county clerks of the county courts of said counties will comply with and obey said subpœna and produce before such officer the said ballots so voted in said county, and that the same will be opened and a pretended recount thereof had.

Your orator says that in case said ballots are taken and opened and a pretended recount of the same be made the same will be in violation of the provision of the statutes of the State of Illinois, and will result in great and irreparable injury to him, in this, that said ballots are the evidence of his election, and if the same be so taken and opened as demanded they will lose their efficacy and virtue as legal evidence of his election, because the said ballots can not legally be opened and recounted except in open court or in open session of the body authorized by law to try said contest.

That is the reason he gives. Now, remember that all of the pleadings had been filed to constitute an issue; remember that the notary public or judge of the Federal court or officer selected was the officer of this body to take these proofs. That officer was acting under the solemnity of an oath, under the obligation of an oath, and for all the purposes of this count he was a court in open session, and he was proceeding to take the testimony in the case, all the parties present. The proofs that were adduced there favorable to the contestee would be favorable to him here; the report made by that officer; the testimony reported here by him would have its effect beneficial to the contestee, if such it necessarily was, no matter who took it. Remember that but forty days were allowed the contestant in the production of his proof. Remember that if the ballots did constitute the contestee's title to the seat it would be brought out in the investigation; it would be preserved in proper form and brought before the court of last resort—the House of Representatives. Who believes in that excuse? Who believes but that this man was trying to prevent the production of testimony until after the forty days expired. An evil purpose—the suppression of proofs—and the criminality comes in when you remember they had to take oath in order to secure his injunction to suppress the testimony, that he had to invoke the aid of the court, that he had to prostitute the means and methods of justice in accomplishing this unholy suppression. And yet it is in the interest of a man that so depicts himself, that assumes that character, that gentlemen are here shedding crocodile tears, and are so fearful that some injustice may come to him when at this time he changes front because the time has expired when it is no longer possible for him to suppress the testimony in the case.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the report of the majority of the committee ought to be sustained. I believe that this contestant ought to have his seat. I do not believe that the contestee ought longer to be permitted to play with the law and play with the courts and play with this House in order that he may draw his salary at the end of this Congress. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] twenty minutes, or so much time as he may desire.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, I wish that this contested-election case was not pending before this House. Both these gentlemen, the contestant and the contestee, are my personal friends. Each one of them lives in a county adjoining the one in which I live. I practice law in the courts of their county; I know their people; I know these men, their character; they are my neighbors at home, and I would most gladly avoid taking any part in the controversy between these two gentlemen.

When I found that this contest was bound to come up here I made up my mind that I would cast no vote and take no part in it until I had carefully read every word of the evidence given by every witness, both for the contestant and contestee. I have done so; every word of it. And I am now ready to cast my vote, whichever way it must be cast, against a personal friend. It is not a pleasant duty. I do not voluntarily seek this opportunity on the floor to show the reason why I am sure my vote will be right. I have been invited and urged to do it.

Mr. Speaker, it is beyond question that the House of Representatives is the judge of the election and qualifications of its own members. It is without question that the House of Representatives has the right to make rules for the determination of questions as to the election and the eligibility of its members. It may make those rules to-day. It may reverse those rules to-morrow. We are a law unto ourselves within this Chamber, as to our mode of proceeding, to determine whether a man is entitled to a seat in this House or not. But we all recognize that however often we may change these rules we still must always do it in a spirit of fairness to all persons who may be interested in the rule or in its change.

The act passed by Congress is not a rule of the House of Representatives. It is not binding upon this House, I concede; but it is binding upon every man who seeks a seat in this House. General Rinaker was bound by that law that Congress passed. Finis E. Downing was bound by the law that Congress passed. They were bound. This House is not bound. Now, what obligation did that law impose upon General Rinaker and upon Mr. Downing? What obligations were imposed upon General Rinaker by the law, and not only upon him, but upon every citizen who shall contest the right of anyone else to a seat in this House? The law imposed upon him the right that he should, within thirty days after the result of the election was declared, serve a written notice upon the one who had the seat that he claimed, and in that notice advise him of the ground upon which he contested his election. Then, that law which bound Rinaker also bound Downing, within thirty days after that date, to file his answer and to deliver a copy to General Rinaker, making his reply to the charges that Rinaker had made against him. Then that law said to General Rinaker: "Within forty days after Downing serves that answer on you and the issue is made up you must take all your evidence." What would be the result if General Rinaker allowed the forty days to elapse without taking any evidence? His contest would be at an end. He would have failed to do that which the law plainly imposed upon him as a duty. Hence, under the law, he could no further be heard as a contestant in this House.

What further did that law impose upon Downing? After the lapse of Rinaker's forty days, when all his evidence in chief must be in and scrutinized by Downing, Downing must then, within the next forty days, take, on notice to Rinaker, all the evidence he proposes to offer to this House in support of the seat that he holds, and in answer to Rinaker's attack upon his right to that seat. Then what does the law impose upon Rinaker? "In ten days after the expiration of Downing's forty days, you are required to file your evidence in reply to the evidence taken by Downing"; and then not only is the issue made up, but the evidence is all in and the case is prepared for the court of last resort. The record is as complete as is a record from a nisi prius court to the court of appeals, when it is all made up and signed by the judge, and sealed by the clerk and filed in the office of the appellate court. There is the end of making further record in that case. That is the law. We are not bound by it in the House as a House. We can do as we please. We have the power.

> Oh, it is excellent
> To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
> To use it like a giant.

This law, that is put there not only to notify contestants for seats, but to notify the individual voter as well, passed by the Senate and House and approved by the President, should not be ignored by us. We who are here to uphold the majesty of the law should not ignore that law. Remember, then, that Rinaker was bound by the law as written, and so was Downing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been somewhat entertained by the language of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] on yesterday, and also by the language of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], when they portrayed to this House that here finally was a case in which all men connected with it had acted honestly and fairly—a case in which all the parties had sought to follow the law—and that fraud had never obtruded its hydra head into the record of this case.

Mr. Speaker, I beg leave, from an intimate knowledge of all the surroundings of this case and of the district, to dissent most positively and decidedly from the statement that no fraud has interposed. It may not be a legal fraud, but it is a fraud that honest men regard quite as much as they do legal fraud. It is a moral fraud. It is, by political chicanery and trickery, an attempt, by a new device, to hold a man in his seat in this House for the entire term for which that seat might be held——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman a question? I stated on yesterday, and if I was to be corrected I called on my colleague on the committee [Mr. COOKE of Illinois] to correct me, that there was not a charge in this record, nor was there a sentence of evidence in it, which in any way attacked or impugned the honesty and integrity of the election officials who held this election; and now that that has been contradicted and dissented from, I call upon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] who now has the floor, I call upon any man who is familiar with this record, to name the allegation, to name the witness, or to cite the evidence.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Well, now, if the gentleman had possessed his soul in patience for a few minutes I was coming right to that very thing. I trust he will possess it now, until I get through with it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Oh, I am very patient.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is right; I am glad you are.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But I will wait a long time before the gentleman makes his assertion good.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that there is in this record evidence showing fraudulent chicanery and trickery upon the part of this contestee, upon the part of his advisers, and I say now that this evidence shows that the new scheme hatched and devised, one such as was never exposed in this House before, was hatched and devised in a political party caucus. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will come to that. Let us look at these two contestants. These gentlemen are so much afraid that the people of that magnificent agricultural district shall be deprived of the representative of their choice. Let me call attention to where their hearts were fixed in their choice.

In the first place, the convention that nominated Mr. Finis E. Downing met in the county adjoining my own. It was in session day and night for I do not know how many days, until more than a thousand ballots were taken before the nominee was chosen.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman permit me an inquiry?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Why, yes; if it is not for the mere sake of interrupting me.

Mr. MILES. It is not. Is that fact in the record?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; it is not; but it is before the House now. It is in the circumambient air. [Laughter and applause.] I tell you there are many things that are not in this record; but they are in my mind and knowledge, and I will tell you. I do not propose to let the other side of this House use me as a monkey to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. [Applause.] I am here in this court of last resort.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; I will not submit to any more of this flea-biting. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, I said there were many things here where we are bound by no law except the law of right, the law of conscience, the law that commands every honest man to bring to his aid in the determination of any question where he is not bound by statute law all the knowledge that he has and all the information he has obtained from every source. I have it; I will use it; I will act upon it. I am justified as an honest man in doing it.

I said here, with reference to the choice of the people of that district, Mr. Downing was nominated after the convention had labored for days and nights, he all the time sitting there with the single vote of his own little county of Cass, while the Congressional timber of the district was being voted for by the great body of the convention, until finally the mountain labored and Mr. Downing was nominated. [Laughter.] They are not without Congressional timber in that district, either Republican or Democratic. The other convention nominated General Rinaker. There were no sessions of days and nights. He stood like Saul among the children of Israel, head and shoulders above all of them; and it was the work of but a moment to select the man upon whom all eyes were turned. There you see the very initiation of this thing. Again, that district has normally between 5,000 and 6,000 Democratic majority. It had never been known to elect a Republican. No Republican was ever able to be heard of in an election in that Congressional district until after that long convention, in which they finally eased themselves off by nominating Mr. Downing.

Now, you talk about the choice of the people of that district. You find first that his own party did not want to nominate Mr. Downing; secondly, after he was nominated, instead of 5,000 or 6,000 majority, that had been common in the district, all they could do, by hook and crook and pencil pointing and ingenious figuring was to count him in by a majority of 40. Do you suppose, then, that the people of that district, the Democrats of that district, are lying awake at nights praying for the success of Mr. Downing in this contest? This history that I have given you, and which is true, indicates that there was no such desire; not by any means.

Now, then, sir, I come to this fraudulent effort, to this political trickery, that has manipulated this case from beginning to end.

The election took place on the 6th day of November, 1894. Under the law, which Rinaker could not escape from, he must give his notice within thirty days after the vote has been declared. He gave notice on the 19th day of December. Mr. Downing filed his answer on the 17th day of January. The same day the answer was filed General Rinaker gave notice to Mr. Downing that he would begin to take the testimony in his case in Calhoun and Jersey counties, fixing the dates. Mark, that was on the 17th day of January.

Now, let me call attention to what the record shows as to the condition of the ballots in that county of Calhoun, which was the first county that Mr. Rinaker's notice stated he proposed to take evidence in. When he subsequently took depositions there in accordance with the notice, the county clerk came on the witness stand and, in reply to questions propounded as to the condition of the ballots, said that there were then in his office two packages, I think, of ballots from two precincts in that county the envelopes of which were not sealed; that the envelopes were open and he did not know who had unsealed them, or whether the ballots in those envelopes were the same ballots that had been returned by the election judges or not. Let me tell you further that on the very night of the election the reporters who were watching the returns sent out a report of the result. They have there, I believe, a telegraph line, but they have no railroad and no ready means of communicating with the outside world. A report was sent out on the night of the election to the Chicago and St. Louis daily newspapers by a gentleman, a Democrat familiar with the politics of the county, that General Rinaker had carried the county by a majority of 26 votes. That is the county where Rinaker, on the very day that Downing served his answer, gave notice that he would begin taking testimony—the county which the first reports stated that he had carried by 26 votes.

Mr. MARSH. What was the official return from that county?

Mr. CONNOLLY. It was forty-eight hours after that before any different report was sent out to the world. Hidden away as they were there in Calhoun County, they were free to do as they pleased; and that county, which was first announced as having been carried by Rinaker, was the county in which two packages of envelopes subsequently turned up open, so that the county clerk could not tell whether they were the ballots that had been cast and had been returned by the judges or other ballots that had been stuffed in there in the interval between the first and the second reports, so as to make the ballots that would be found in the envelope conform to the second report. That was done by somebody in Calhoun County. This gentleman—Mr. Downing—may not have known of it, but he did not devise this plan himself alone, because, while he is a lawyer by admission to the bar, yet by practice he is county clerk and editor of a Democratic newspaper at the county seat, and I do not believe that he devised the trick of the injunction. But does it not appear obviously that the men who did devise it knew something about the condition of things in Calhoun County; knew something about these ballots and how unsafe it would be to have Rinaker go down there and expose those ballots open and show, perhaps, that some of those ballots had not been cast, but had been subsequently stuck into those envelopes, and did not bear the marks of the judges of the precinct in whose envelopes they were found?

At all events, on that 17th day of January, Mr. Rinaker served on Mr. Downing the notice of contest, and within two days after that Downing and his lawyers have devised a plan whereby they will prevent an official examination of those Calhoun County ballots, and they will do it by a new scheme, and will do it before Rinaker can know anything about it. They prepare a bill for an injunction. They do not make Rinaker a party to that bill. Mark you, Rinaker is not in that suit at all. They ignore him, but they include every county clerk in the Congressional district. They apply to the judge at Jacksonville, Judge Epler, who is holding court, but he declines to take part in the scheme. Then they send to a distant county for Judge Lacey. I do not know whether he is any kin to my friend from Iowa who is so voluble in supporting his opinion here or not, but the name is the same. Judge Lacey I know very well. He is a very excellent judge. I have to practice law before him, so I am not going to say anything mean about him here [laughter]; gentlemen will understand that. But in fact there is no occasion to say anything mean about him. He is a good judge and a splendid man, and he is as intense a Democrat as any State ever turned out—clean-cut to the marrowbone. [Laughter.]

Now, I say Judge Epler, who lives in Jacksonville, and who was holding court there at that very time, having declined to have anything to do with the scheme, they sent to the distant county of Mason for Judge Lacey to come to Jacksonville, where the court was in session. Jacksonville is in his circuit. He came, and when Judge Epler had an adjournment of the court, at noon or in the evening, Judge Lacey took the bench and Mr. Downing or his attorney presented the bill setting out the equitable reasons why he claimed that those ballots should not be disturbed. Thereupon Judge Lacey without any difficulty immediately granted an injunction preventing an examination of the ballots. Calhoun County and its open envelopes of ballots from that instant were protected, and the door of inquiry was shut. They succeeded in protecting the men who opened those envelopes in Calhoun County by this infamous injunction—I can not characterize it as anything less.

Now, tell me, is there no evidence in all this of that moral fraud of which I have spoken in the conduct of this gentleman and of his secret advisers? But the gentlemen say, "If he has been guilty of a mistake"—they call it innocently a mistake—"if he has been guilty of a mistake do not punish him or punish the people of the district in consequence of it." Mr. Speaker, it is folly to characterize this as a mistake. The resort to the injunction for the purpose of protecting those ballots from an honest inspection, examination, and recount was for a fraudulent purpose. It was to suppress, to destroy, to make away with the ballots, or to keep them there until their confederates might do what they chose in preparing those ballots for examination, if the day should ever come for such examination. Now, why did he say he wanted those ballots not examined? Here is the act of Congress that says to General Rinaker, "If you want those ballots examined, you must give notice to the men who have them in possession to bring them before your notary and have them there counted, and the result declared by the mouths of witnesses in the presence of Mr. Downing." That is what the law says that Rinaker must do.

Mr. GRAFF. If he had not done that could he ever have had those ballots examined?

Mr. CONNOLLY. As I said before, of course not. The law limited Rinaker to forty days within which to take everything. The oral testimony of witnesses, the examination of the ballots and the tally sheets, and the illegal votes—everything must be done within the forty days. Rinaker was pursuing the law as laid down and as binding upon him. In steps Mr. Downing with this injunction. What was the pretense and excuse for it? Was it honest? I say not. Every candid man who will look at it will say that it is simply a trick and nothing else. Let me read his language. Mark you, he does not make Rinaker a party, but he sets out that he and Rinaker were candidates for Congress; he sets out that he was declared elected; he sets out that Rinaker has given him notice of a contest of his seat. Then he says:

And your orator says he has reason to believe, and does believe, and so charges, that if such demand is made by said Rinaker, said officers will comply therewith.

Of course they would. The law plainly and clearly requires them to do it. He knew they would comply; hence he was safe in swearing to it.

Said officers will comply therewith, and issue the subpœna as aforesaid, and that said county clerks of the courts of said counties will comply with and obey said subpœna and produce before such officer the said ballots so voted in said county, and that the same will be opened and a pretended recount thereof be had.

Do not gentlemen know that for years and years past, in almost every county in the State of Illinois, that very thing has been done? In every contested election case, from a township election up to a legislative election, evidence has been taken before notaries public under the law of Illinois similar to this law of the United States. Ballots have been brought there; their contents examined and stated before witnesses. That is the only way of taking the testimony in the case of legislative contests, just like the contest provided for in this Federal statute.

He goes on further to say:

Your orator says that in case said ballots are taken and opened and a pretended recount of the same be made, the same will be in violation of the provisions of the statutes of the State of Illinois—

It will, eh? What provision, and what provision only, could it be in violation of? That I will show the House in a moment after I get through with what is contained in this bill. He resumes—and will result in great and irreparable injury to him in this case; that said ballots are the evidence of his election—

He did not rely, then, on the certificate of election. That he already had. That is the evidence required by this House to seat him; but he says here that the ballots are the evidence of his election—and if the same be so taken and opened as demanded they will lose their efficacy and virtue—

And flavor, he might have added—

as legal evidence of his election, because the said ballots can not be legally opened and recounted—

Now mark this—except in open court or in open session of the body authorized by law to try said contest.

There is his ground. There, for the first time in the history of election contests, an attempt was made by a cabal of Democratic politicians to put in opposition to the Federal law that provision of the law of Illinois which declares that the ballots can only be opened and counted in the presence of a court or in open session of the body authorized to try the contested election case. There is such a law. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] yesterday, when I interpolated into his remarks the suggestion that the injunction did not follow the statute of the State of Illinois, said very promptly to me that it did—that it was in the very terms of the statute of Illinois.

Mr. MOODY. I did not intend to say so.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I think the gentleman said many things which on reflection he will not stand by. But that is one of the things that he distinctly said—that the injunction was in the very language of the statute of the State of Illinois.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman is in error about my present view as he is about very many things in this case.

Mr. CONNOLLY. About your "present view" I do not know. You may have reformed somewhat since yesterday. But there is the ground taken by Mr. Downing. He says, in order to keep Rinaker from inspecting these ballots and the condition of the envelope in which they are contained, that if the court permitted the ballots to be recounted, it would destroy the evidence of his election.

Well, what had already become at that very time of the evidence of his election in Macoupin County? The evidence shows that every one of these ballots had been opened and counted. What had become of the evidence of his election in Cass County? The record shows that in eight townships of that county the ballots had been opened and counted, right in the very county and under the nose of Mr. Downing himself; and, I have no doubt, from the time the count began and went on he himself wrote editorial articles in his paper to inform the people of his county that the recount of the ballots was going on. And yet he did not think that that affected the evidence of his election. Why did not he seek an injunction then? He did not. General Rinaker suggests to me that the recount in Cass County was after the service of the notice and the taking of testimony. Very good; it was after the granting of the injunction. That was granted on the 19th day of January.

After that date, right in the city in which Mr. Downing lived, in the court-house where for eight years he was the county clerk, and in which I know he entered his appearance every day, right there, and no doubt with him standing by half of the time, a count of these very ballots was going on—the ballots of that county—that were to appear as evidence of his election; a count that was lessening their virtue, where they were vaporing their essence away, disappearing by that recount, and yet he had already obtained the injunction restraining all of the county clerks, the clerk of his own county with the others, from permitting the ballots to be taken and counted at all. Why does he permit them to be taken and counted after the injunction right in his own county and town? Did he want to let the recount run on and see whether he would make or lose by it? I do not know. But it went far enough, at all events, to demonstrate to him that he was losing, and then he either drew the injunction on the clerk and made him shut up the ballots or his party friends advised him that if he let this proceeding go further in that manner that the evidence would unseat him. Therefore he had better keep the door locked and get the Democratic contesting treasurer to close the contest just as quickly as possible. Now, see the juggling which has been going on with reference to the matter. See how this man and his party friends have been juggling with this case and the ballots. After getting out an injunction he permits the clerk to open the ballots in his own county, and no doubt stood by and looked at them as their count progressed.

Now, as to this injunction, what does it say—because undoubtedly it was granted in the very words this gentleman himself and his counsel in their secret cabals drew up and in the words of the affidavit that they deemed to be necessary? What does it say? The language is:

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the said defendants as county clerks of their respective counties, and each of them and their successors in office, and their deputies, assistants, agents, and attorneys, and each of them has, and they are hereby, enjoined and restrained from opening the ballots cast at the election held in their respective counties on the 6th day of November, A. D. 1894, and now in the custody or possession of said defendants, as county clerks of their respective counties, or from permitting the same to be opened or recounted, or from removing or permitting said ballots to be removed from the place where they are now kept, until the same are ordered to be opened or recounted by a court of competent jurisdiction of the State of Illinois or of the United States or by the House of Representatives in Congress of the United States, after the 3d day of March, A. D. 1895.

There is the extent now of the injunction, fraudulently obtained for the purpose, smirched with moral fraud, to say the least of it, all the evidence showing that in Calhoun County the ballots—and in some other county, I forget which now—had been opened, and their validity as evidence in the case practically destroyed. And it does not take many open packages of ballots to overturn a majority of only some 30, 40, or 50, and there are many men who can make the necessary changes with nimble fingers and do the trick very quickly, and Brother LACEY would never discover it.

But the injunction restrained these county clerks. Now, mark you, Mr. Rinaker had nothing whatever to do with that. By law he knows nothing whatever about it. Now, some of these gentlemen learned in the law say, Why did not Mr. Rinaker appeal that case? Why? Have you, my legal friends, ever discovered a way by which you can appeal a case which you are not a party to? I never have. Neither in the State nor in the Federal law have I ever discovered it, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, who labored long to find a way to permit General Rinaker to appeal that case, found none, first, for the reason that the suit was filed to the May term of Morgan County court, and our statute requires that a bill in chancery shall be filed ten days before the term of court at which the case may stand for trial; and the subpœna shall be issued and served ten days before the term of the court at which the case is to be heard.

Now, this bill was filed and the summons in chancery issued in January, for what term of court? Returnable to the May term of the court. What would be the condition of things when the May term of court arrived? Why, Rinaker's forty days for taking testimony under the law of Congress would have expired long before that. The whole ninety days, indeed, the time given for Rinaker, the time given for Downing, the time given for evidence in reply, would all have expired before the term of court at which these gentlemen so ingeniously made their summons returnable. Was there no trick in that? There was, right in that circuit, a court to begin on the second Monday in February. Why did they not go and file their bill in that court, where there might have been a hearing on the second Monday in February? No; that did not suit their purpose. The purpose was to chop the dog's tail off right behind his ears. It was to completely and effectually shut Rinaker out from having opportunity to comply with the law of Congress.

"And then," said the little cabal of Democratic politicians, with Downing in their midst, "pay no more attention to him, but when Congress meets Rinaker will be there without any evidence. He will beg the House to permit him to take evidence, because you have got in his way. But there will be no trouble. With the united Democratic vote and a few superserviceable mugwumps there will be no trouble to turn Rinaker outdoors and send him back to plod along his weary way in the State of Illinois." That was the scheme, morally tainted with fraud, for the purpose of circumventing the law passed by Congress. Some gentleman, I believe it was a Pennsylvania gentleman, whom I understand to be a lawyer, said to me, "Why did not General Rinaker appeal that case then?" Why, my dear Pennsylvania friend, have you any way by which a stranger to a case could go into a court and appeal that case? When Smith and Brown have a lawsuit, can John Jones come in and appeal the case? Not by any means. "Oh, well," my friend suggests, "Rinaker could have filed a bill of interpleader." These learned lawyers, you know, the worse they are confounded the longer the names of the different things that they are willing to suggest. He might file a bill of interpleader. Yes, he might, when the May term of that court came.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will my colleague allow me?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Suppose that Democratic judge, who was aiding this Democratic member of Congress to suppress the evidence there, had said that he was not a proper party, that he was simply acting against the clerks, and the clerks only.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I was about to say that. He might file a bill of interpleader when the May term of the court came; but he could not do it without leave of the court. He could not file his bill of interpleader before the May term, and under the law of Illinois you can not file your bill of interpleader in chancery without leave of the court, not leave of the judge. Many of these gentlemen, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] among others, have confounded the terms "court" and "judge." They are quite different. When the May term of the court came, he might file his bill of interpleader for the first time.

Mark you, he could not appeal, for he is not a party to the case. He can not become a party until the May term of the court. He can not then become a party without leave of the judge who granted the injunction, sitting in open court. Then, suppose the judge who has so far cut General Rinaker out from his rights under the act of Congress, suppose that judge, in furtherance of the position he has taken, should say to General Rinaker, "You can not have any interest in this proceeding. If injustice has been done you, your remedy is in the House of Representatives at Washington; therefore I will not allow the filing of your bill of interpleader." I am speaking of the facts to show that by this injunction they had effectually bottled Rinaker up, had effectually nullified this act of Congress, and had done it by this injunction, which did not follow the language of the law of Illinois. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] a while ago said that I misunderstood him when he declared that the injunction followed the statute of Illinois; but he and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] said the same thing. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. LACEY. Is it not the fact that the injunction simply copies the language of the statute of Illinois?

Mr. MOODY. That is true.

Mr. LACEY. The injunction uses the identical language of the statute; and if there was any violation of the proprieties of the occasion, it arose from simply copying the statute.

Now, I stated, Mr. Speaker, that this injunction effectually bottled Rinaker up. It effectually nullified this act of Congress that required him to get his evidence within forty days. He could not do it with the injunction standing, not against him of course, but against the county clerks. Now, these ingenious gentlemen are driven from the position of saying that he might appeal the case, and they find that that is not true, and that he could not appeal it. They find that he could not file a bill of interpleader, and if for no other reason, the judge would say to him, "Why, you can not count these ballots now. You must count them within forty days after the beginning of the contest. The forty days have expired. Your right is gone, and hence you can not come in by bill of interpleader."

The injunction is granted, not in the language of the statute of the State of Illinois, but quite as effectually nullifying the law of the United States as if it had been in the exact language of the statute of Illinois. Instead of this injunction following precisely the language of the statute of Illinois, it follows precisely the language of the bill filed and sworn to by Mr. Downing.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. But did not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] state yesterday in answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] that it did follow the exact language of the statute?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have read that from the RECORD. Mr. MOODY and Mr. LACEY both agreed that it did follow the precise language of that statute, and I have shown they were both wrong in that matter.

Now, sir, for the purpose of showing what the statute of Illinois does say about this matter of opening the ballots, and where they shall be opened, I read from the statute itself, first, the provision that the officer shall carefully preserve the ballots for six months, and at the expiration of that time shall destroy them by burning without previously opening the ballots; the ballots shall be destroyed in the presence of witnesses, etc.

Provided, That if any contest of an election of any officer voted for at such election shall be pending at the expiration of said time the said ballots shall not be destroyed until such contest is finally determined. In all cases of contested election the parties contesting the same shall have the right to have said ballots opened.

They have, therefore, the right to have the ballots opened. Mr. Downing said they have not. The law of Congress says they have; the law of Illinois says they have; but the judge to whom he went said they had not.

In case of contested elections the parties contesting the same shall have the right to have said ballots opened and to have all errors of the judges in counting, revising the count, and the ballots corrected by the court or body trying such contest.

Then comes this further provision:

But such ballots shall be opened only in open court or in session of such body, and in the presence of the officer having the custody thereof.

Now, the court granted an injunction under the plan that was agreed upon by those gentlemen, by a literal construction of the law of Illinois; that is, if the House wanted to have these ballots counted, it must conform to the law of Illinois, namely, have them counted in open session. Gentlemen say the injunction did not so say. The injunction does not; the statute does. The statute says they shall not be opened except "in open session of the body trying the case." The Committee on Elections do not try the case. It is the House of Representatives that tries the case. There, then, we come up against a question of conflict between the State and Federal law. There is no doubt that Congress has the right to prescribe laws to regulate the election of members of Congress; and when Congress passes such a law it must be supreme on that subject. In the absence of any law, the State has the right to regulate and make provisions for the election of members of Congress, for the counting of the ballots, for the destruction of the ballots, if you please; but if Congress has passed a law upon any one of those branches, then that law must be supreme.

The Illinois law says the ballot shall only be opened in open session of the house of "the body trying the case." The law of Congress passed in 1851 says that the evidence shall be taken not in open session of the House, but that all ballots, papers, and evidence of every kind shall be taken before a notary or any of those other officers within the first forty days. There the two laws are in conflict. The law of Congress says you must take your evidence in forty days, and then says you must bring your papers. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] says "ballots are not papers." I presume he is the only lawyer in the House who would say that as a matter of law. Ballots are papers. Well, sir, the law of Congress says the ballots must be brought before a notary, and if they are they must be counted within the forty days. Then, Congress having now legislated upon the manner of taking the evidence of the ballots, the law of the State of Illinois is inoperative on that question. But the judge who granted this injunction says clearly the law of the State of Illinois shall prevail and the law of Congress shall be ignored.

Now, my friends on this side of the House, with a large Republican majority, let me say that you are confronted for the first time here in your history with an attempt by a State judge to absolutely nullify this Federal election contest law. If you by your votes indorse or permit that nullification, in how many contested-election cases in the future coming from the States of the South will you ever be able to get the ballots counted? Not one. The Republican party had its very life and existence by maintaining the doctrine that the laws of the Federal Government are supreme as the law of this land and that no State law should be allowed to interfere with them. We were cradled in that doctrine.

Now, after forty years of successful and splendid service for the nation, we find Republicans on this side of the House forgetting the early teachings of the fathers of the Republican party, forgetting the doctrines that we were cradled in, coming in here and giving effect to an injunction granted by a Democratic judge to impede and obstruct the operation of a Federal law and hold a Democratic member in his seat, which the evidence shows he is not entitled to. The idea of Republicans doing this! Ah, but some one says, somebody may be afraid that we are using our great majority to unseat a man improperly. Are we too cowardly to do right lest we may be criticised by some one for doing it? If so, abdicate your power, pull down the standard of the Republican majority and in its place lift up the palmetto flag of Democracy—and surrender. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

But gentlemen say that we have successfully seated two Republicans and two Democrats; and it seems that gentlemen are afraid that if we should seat the third Republican that that would be destroying the balance of power. They are as afraid of this House doing this as it is said the nations of Europe are of partitioning Turkey, for fear it would destroy the balance of power. Gentlemen, we can not afford to be cowards. We can not afford here to lower our flag and abandon a doctrine which is one of the great doctrines of the Republican party, namely, that where Congress has passed a law within its constitutional power to pass that law shall be supreme.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, this injunction was a trick. It was obtained for a purpose morally fraudulent and was carried out by the judge. I charge nothing upon him. He simply carried it out by making an order in accordance with the literal reading of the statute of Illinois, but that injunction tied General Rinaker's hands. Now, the law that is on the Federal statute book bound Rinaker and it bound Downing, but it does not bind us. We can say, "Let the law go." Congress made a law by which General Rinaker was compelled to take the course he did take or else abandon his contest. He could not do otherwise. He would have been foolish to have been taking evidence in the middle of next summer; you would not have received it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose that Mr. Murphy had not taken these memoranda during the count in the contest for treasurer and that General Rinaker was without any evidence at all, but still believed that he had been elected, what would then be his remedy? And let me follow that thought up with the suggestion that those of us who perhaps do not feel satisfied to let this Murphy count take the place of a formal count, where both parties are represented, might feel like pursuing now the same course of safety to get at the ballots (if the status has not been disturbed) that we would pursue if no memoranda had been taken by Mr. Murphy, and General Rinaker stood knocking at the door of public justice to have a recount made.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I was about to turn to that feature of the case. Passing now, Mr. Speaker, as I do, from all the fraudulent nimbus that surrounds this injunction proceeding, I come to the question of what General Rinaker's attitude would be if he had given notice of a contest, had simply stated that the ballots cast in the several counties when properly counted and enumerated would show a majority of a thousand in his favor rather than 40 in favor of Mr. Downing, and had set up no other cause of contest, except barely that the enumeration of the ballots had been incorrect. In that case, if Downing had gone and done just as he has done—locked up the ballots—how could General Rinaker have obtained a scintilla of evidence to sustain his contest? But if he did not within forty days obtain some evidence to maintain the contest, what would be the result?

Now, suppose that this House meets, and Rinaker's notice of contest is on file, and Downing's answer is on file denying the alleged miscount of ballots, and there is no other question involved and no evidence on file. The case is referred to the Elections Committee. They open the papers; there is the notice of contest and there is the answer. The committee say: "Where is your evidence, General Rinaker?" "Oh, I have no evidence. Mr. Downing prevented the clerk from letting me count the ballots, but I want to count them now." What would have been Mr. Downing's answer in that case? He would have pointed the committee to the act of Congress, and would have said: "That law is binding on you, Mr. Rinaker; that law says that you must furnish your evidence in forty days, and you failing to do that, I am required to do nothing. You are simply in court with a declaration filed, a plea denying it, and no proof to maintain it."

That is what Mr. Downing would say. Does anybody suppose that Mr. Downing and the gentlemen on that side of the House would in such a case have come up generously and said: "Oh, well, let us have Mr. Rinaker's evidence taken now; let us piece it out for him; let us try to make a case for him?" Indeed, they would not. Mr. Rinaker would merely have failed to do his duty under the law and would have to take the consequences. But in fact General Rinaker obeyed the law of Congress, which was made to control his movements in such a case, and Mr. Downing and his cabal stepped in the way. They removed from his reach the evidence that he wanted to take and which was necessary to make out his case, removed it just as effectually as if they had taken those ballots and dumped them into the Illinois River. Suppose that instead of the county clerk being ordered at Mr. Downing's instance to take these ballots and lock them up in his vault Mr. Downing had got the ballots in his own possession and had locked them up in his vault, and had said to General Rinaker when called upon to produce them, "I will not produce them until the House of Representatives in open session orders me to do so," would it be said then that Rinaker was bound to wait until the House did come into session and order those ballots to be counted? The House would undoubtedly order them to be recounted, unless some reliable evidence was supplied to take the place of those ballots. Gentlemen have said that those ballots are in the same condition they were in when they left the hands of the inspecting officers.

Gentlemen, when they reflect upon the evidence in this book, will see that they must revise that statement. No man can read this evidence and fail to see that in certain townships in Calhoun County and one of the others—I forget which—somebody had been tampering with those ballots. My friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] said it was stipulated in the record by these parties that the ballots were in the same condition. Can the parties stipulate away the rights of this House? Can the parties by a stipulation impose upon us conditions that are improper, when the evidence shows marks that require explanation, when the evidence shows that the envelopes are not in the condition in which they were when they left the election judges?

Mr. LACEY. In regard to the county in which Mr. Murphy made the recount, do you claim there is any evidence of any kind indicating that the ballots have not been properly preserved and are not in precisely the same condition in which they were when Mr. Murphy made that recount?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not think there is such evidence as to that county. That is only one of the eight counties involved.

Mr. LACEY. Then we can safely see whether Mr. Murphy is right as to that county by counting the ballots, can we not?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not know whether you can or not.

Mr. LACEY. Let us try it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. There are eight counties in this district. In one of the counties, Calhoun, as I said at the beginning—the one in which Rinaker gave notice to first take testimony—the evidence shows that in two of the townships the ballots had apparently been tampered with after they left the hands of the election judges. That county, on the night of the election, Rinaker was publicly declared to have carried by 26 majority. Forty-eight hours afterwards, when it was found how many votes were necessary to elect Downing over Rinaker, the result as before announced was changed so as to give Downing enough votes to give him the district by 40 majority.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. If you have in your possession all this evidence of fraud, why did you not testify before the committee instead of testifying before the House?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Are you through? Is that all of it? One attorney in this case, Rinaker, the son of General Rinaker, has testified; and he has been in a most discourteous manner criticised by the gentleman from Massachusetts for presuming to tell the truth in this case. Now, if a man who was simply a lawyer in the case, volunteering to testify, is subject to animadversion on this floor, how much more would a juror who is to try the case be subject to animadversion for volunteering to testify and seeking to influence the report of the committee of this House? My testimony was not lost by keeping my mouth shut before the committee, because I knew I should have a chance to give it before the full jury having the final right to try this case. Does the gentleman understand my position now?

Mr. HALL. I understand your position, of course.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Well, I am glad of it.

Now, sir, this claim of a desire to count these votes is not honest. It is for the purpose of carrying on the scheme that was commenced by an injunction to keep this man in his seat and make the people of this country pay double salaries for that district during the whole length of this Fifty-fourth Congress; because, suppose the scheme that this committee now proposes in order to carry out the injunction project should carry—suppose that this case is recommitted and the committee ordered to take further testimony and to examine the ballots—when can they report? After the holidays next winter. Then, with all the delays that may be proposed, when will it be possible to get a vote of the House, even though the recount should show Rinaker elected by a thousand majority? Would it be possible to get a vote and unseat this man—to unhorse these schemers—much before the 3d day of March, 1897? And is not this allowing them to carry out their scheme? Is it not giving it the indorsement of this House to permit that sort of thing?

Gentlemen concede the law is well settled that where one suppresses the primary evidence the party who desires to make use of the proof shall have the right to introduce secondary evidence. We all agree about that rule of law. But gentlemen say, in the first place, Downing did not suppress the primary evidence. I have said as much as I think is necessary to be said to show that he has most effectually suppressed the primary evidence—namely, the ballots.

Secondly, gentlemen say conceding that he did suppress the primary evidence, and that the contestant has the right therefore to introduce secondary evidence, yet they do not seem willing to depend on the secondary evidence that he has introduced; they claim that it was a private recount; and the gentleman from Massachusetts cited the case of English vs. Peelle to show that this House had held that a private count of that kind could not be depended upon—would not be accepted as evidence. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has shown wherein that case differed from this. It differed because the witness produced to give the secondary evidence was an unreliable and unsafe source to which to look for truth; the House could not believe him. Secondly, in addition to that, there had been no suppression of the primary evidence by the party against whom it was sought to use the secondary evidence; so that under no principle of law could he have been entitled to the use of that secondary evidence.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, sir; if I can hear it.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman has referred to the case of Steward vs. Childs.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; I have not.

Mr. TERRY. I thought you referred a while ago to that case.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir.

Mr. TERRY. Well, while I am on my feet let me ask you in regard to that——

Mr. CONNOLLY. That case is not now in the line of discussion I am pursuing, and I do not care to be drawn away from that line.

Mr. TERRY. I would ask the gentleman if he is going to take up the question of the assisted voters?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Indeed, I do not know exactly what I shall take up; but I do not suppose that I will discuss every possible question that anybody may raise in connection with the case. I am confining myself to what I regard as the essential features.

Mr. TERRY. Inasmuch as that is your State, I would like to have your views upon the question.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Well, I will give you my views privately, if you want them; but I do not want to burden the House with my opinions.

Mr. TERRY. Your private views are not what I want. I want the House to have the benefit of your views upon the question, as this is a matter arising in your own State.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not think that on that proposition my views or the views of anybody else are of very much account. There is one pivotal point connected with the case, and I wish to keep as near to that as possible and not go off into the clouds.

Mr. TERRY. I would like the gentleman to explain whether it is true that unless Mr. Rinaker has the benefit of all of the assisted voters he could not be considered as elected.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have not reached that point, although I will say to the gentleman that I propose to refer to it later on.

It has been contended here, Mr. Speaker, in this discussion by gentlemen that a man who gives substantial testimony as to the count of the ballots in Macoupin County, that he did not have an opportunity to make a count that was worthy of consideration; that it was not an accurate count, and that they did not think it was good for any purpose. Who knows best? Is it not more reasonable to believe the man who testifies and says that he did have an opportunity, the man who for three days sat there intentionally observing every vote, and as he says, with a full opportunity to make the count? And yet gentlemen of the House come to us and say, "We do not believe him." Why do you not believe him? He is an honorable man; the record shows that. He was a man who was honored by the people who knew him with numerous public offices; he was sheriff of the county, mayor of the city in which he lived, a reputable and an honorable man; and I may say that General Rinaker, from what I know of him, would employ no other instrument for any purpose; that he would employ no man who was not as clean as a hound's tooth to do work of that kind for him. He is that kind of a man.

Mr. Murphy is shown by the records to be worthy of consideration; and nobody attacks the evidence; and the minority of the committee concede in the report the fact that Murphy for accuracy, reliability, and intelligence, is beyond all question or cavil. Now, there he is, as truthful a man as any man in this House; he sat there three days, and kept a careful tally on this count. It was not expected at that time that this evidence would ever be required. True, Mr. Rinaker was contemplating the contest. He had given notice, but had received no answer, but for the purpose of satisfying himself, without the slightest thought of ever being able to use Mr. Murphy's investigation, he had Murphy do this thing and see how it was running. He found, as the testimony shows, these various mistakes. Was there crime in that? Why, Mr. Waggoner, the county clerk, near whom Mr. Murphy sat while the count was going on, said that it was a well-known fact that he was keeping the count. He said, "We all talked about it in the room"; and here is the reply that this county clerk (Mr. Waggoner), who was opening the ballots, spreading them out, calling off the votes, passing them on to the next member of the counting committee, and so on. He was examined under oath and corroborated what Mr. Murphy had said. This was the question that was propounded to him, and I ask your attention to his answer:

Q. How did you come to pay such close attention to the vote of General Rinaker for Congress?

A. I suppose for the same reason everyone in the room paid attention to it. There was a good deal of talk about this matter then, and there were parties standing near me watching the vote, and, as I called the vote, I naturally looked for that vote part of the time.

There is the testimony of the county clerk (in addition to the testimony of Murphy) that he himself and all the others in the room knew that the count was being kept. Nobody questions it, and nobody comes to say that Murphy's count could not be depended upon; at least that he was not honest in making it.

Now, I want to say here, Mr. Speaker, that the very best corroboration of the truth of Mr. Murphy's count is furnished by the contestee [Mr. Downing]. How? After the forty days in which Mr. Rinaker had to take his testimony had expired, Mr. Downing knew what Mr. Murphy had testified to. Downing was present and heard Murphy's testimony about what the recount in his presence showed. Now, if that count is unreliable, if it could not be depended upon, there were the ballots in the county clerk's office, and all that Mr. Downing had to do to contradict Murphy was to dismiss his injunction, notify the county clerk to produce the ballots with his subpœna duces tecum, and count the ballots there in the presence of himself and Mr. Rinaker. He could do it, but Mr. Rinaker could not. He could dismiss the injunction suit and call for the ballots and contradict Mr. Murphy if he desired to do so.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption just there?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. I would ask the gentleman if he is not aware of the fact that in the only other contested-election case under that statute, even without an injunction, the clerks of some of the counties in the State of Illinois declined to produce the ballots?

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to say to the gentleman right there that in the case the gentleman referred to, in every county except the county of Will, the clerks produced the ballots and they were counted; and in that case no special point was made upon it, but the contestee in that case took the precise position that my colleague takes to-day.

Mr. MOODY. I do not know what position he took, but I know the ballot boxes were not all produced, and some of the clerks at least proceeded on the ground that the law did not authorize it.

Mr. HOPKINS. No point was made on it because it was not decisive in the case.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Now, I hope my friends will let me go ahead and get through. What has that to do here? Why is the gentleman from Massachusetts sitting on nettles so much and so badly when I am suggesting this mode of contradicting Murphy's testimony?

Mr. MOODY. I am not. I submitted to interruptions from the gentleman yesterday, and I have not interrupted him unduly to-day.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman sought yesterday to insist that the testimony of Mr. Murphy was unreliable, and that this House could not depend on it. If that is true, did not Mr. Downing know that after Mr. Rinaker's forty days had expired, and after Murphy's testimony had been seen and read by Downing? If that was true, you know, gentlemen, every one of you, and it is conceded in this debate, that Downing had the right then, having commenced the injunction suit, to dismiss the injunction suit, serve on Mr. Oeltgen, the county clerk, a subpœna duces tecum to bring forward those ballots, and he himself could have counted the ballots and proved the unreliability and unworthiness of Murphy's count. He did not do it. He never proposed to do it before this committee.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman will permit me to correct him, I hold in my hand a brief submitted to the committee at the meeting of Congress. In that brief the contestee says this:

Believing that if a recount is ordered the ballots and his rights under the law will be fully protected, he is willing that a recount be had, and in any assistance he can render in person or by and through his attorney and counsel he is at the call and service of the committee.

Mr. CONNOLLY. And his attorney stated before the committee, in arguing the case, that the ballots now were not worth the paper that they were written on as evidence.

Mr. MOODY. He did not so state.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have been informed by members of the committee that he did.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why did he not come in with a resolution in the House on the first day of the session, as he had a right to do, and ask for a recount? Mr. Rinaker was an outsider and he could not do it, but your friend was a member of the House and could do so.

Mr. CONNOLLY. As to the matter of a recount, this House this winter has had an example of it. A sitting member, Mr. Tarsney, from Missouri, with a contest pending, desired a recount of the ballots, and in the first or second week of this session he manfully came into the House and on the floor of the House offered a resolution authorizing the Committee on Elections to go to Kansas City and recount the ballots, but this House refused to do it. At the very same time Mr. Tarsney was thus manfully proposing to do that Mr. Downing sat behind him quietly in his seat, never proposing to do the manly thing that Tarsney was proposing to do. No; he sat behind the bulwark of an injunction that had thus far protected him, and he proposed to stay under cover of that injunction just as long as he could; and when smoked out then to have his friends come here, begging of the House to let him go back and do what he might have allowed to be done if he had been open and fair about it or his advisers honest, to get at the truth, more than a year ago—what he might himself have done after Mr. Murphy and Mr. Waggoner had testified as to what the ballots showed.

Tell me, then, you gentlemen who come here and say that Mr. Murphy can not be believed, why did not Mr. Downing say that? Why did not Mr. Downing contradict him? Why did he not produce the ballots, as he might do, that would have contradicted him?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have gone thus far on that feature of the case concerning this miserable injunction, this scheme to set up the law of the State of Illinois against the law of Congress. Thank God, no Republican of the State of Illinois so far forgets her position here on this question as for one moment to say that the law was intended to nullify a Federal statute, or to impede its operation. It was done by a Democratic judge in the interest of a Democratic contestee, to keep him in Congress in his seat as long as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I turn to another feature of this case briefly. The House has so kindly listened to me for so long that I will be as brief as possible, and will not seek to do full justice to this branch of the subject.

The minority of this committee say in their report:

While we do not agree in all respects with the conclusions arrived at by the majority upon this branch of the case—

That is, about illegal marks of ballots, illegal votes, and so forth—

yet, for the purpose of simplifying the issue between the majority and minority, we accept their conclusion.

So that as to all questions of illegal votes and matters of that kind the majority and minority have agreed.

In determining that the contestant should be seated by a plurality of 30 votes, the majority of the committee have adopted two conclusions from which we dissent:

First. They have allowed a gain of 39 votes to the contestant on account of a private and unofficial recount of the ballots in parts of the two counties of Macoupin and Cass.

Second. They have permitted the parties to retain certain votes which were counted for them by the returning officers. These votes were those of illiterate voters whose ballots were prepared by the officers of election without the voters first having made the oath required by law that they were unable to mark their ballots by reason of their physical disability or inability to read the English language. This ruling benefits the contestant to the extent of 32 votes net.

If either of these disputed conclusions be incorrect, then the report of the majority of 30 shall fail.

Now, there were 39 votes that he received on a miscount in Macoupin and Cass counties, which the majority of the committee think Rinaker is entitled to credit for. So that 39 votes, all but one, wipes out the declared majority for Downing.

Now, then, we come to the other question. The minority say there were 32 votes allowed to Rinaker that there is no question were honestly cast by honest voters, by men entitled to vote, just as the ballots were counted, and by men who were legal voters. Now, these gentlemen who are so anxious to have the legal voters of that district not disfranchised, remember the minority of this committee say to you, we believe that these 32 voters shall not be counted, some of whom were blind, some of whom were in invalid chairs and could not walk into the polling place, all of whom were legal voters—one of them old Professor Turner, of Jacksonville, known to all college presidents and educators from the Atlantic to the Pacific, one of the leading educators of the country for the past fifty years, a man notable among the best minds in the United States, blind and old, who has been living in Jacksonville for fifty years, led by a daughter up to the polling place; but blind as he is, and heavy as the burden of years rests upon him, did not fail in the performance of the last great duty of the citizen to go and do his duty by voting his sentiment at the polls.

Professor Turner, led there by a daughter and confronted by these judges, who have known him since their childhood, who knew of the blindness that is on him—the minority of this committee say that the two judges, one a Democrat and one a Republican, who went into the booth with him and prepared his ticket as they both knew he wanted it, and then marked it and deposited in the box—that those judges did an unlawful thing, and that Professor Turner, rounding out his century of existence, shall, for the first time in his life, be disfranchised by the House of Representatives of this Republic for which he has done so much. Shame upon any committee who would insist upon any construction of the law that would disfranchise a man of that kind!

Another was a crippled old soldier, disabled in his country's service. They would disfranchise him and not count his ballot because, forsooth, he is forced to spend his life in an invalid chair, and, wheeled by loving hands up to the ballot box, he cast his vote as he pointed his gun. [Loud applause.] Disfranchise him! Disfranchise him for what? For the sake of seating the editor of a Democratic newspaper as a Representative in this House. [Applause on the Republican side.] My God! where is the old-time Republican pride? Gone! Crawling on your bellies to men who will criticise you no difference how you vote! You had better stand up like men and vote for the principle that you believe in, and give the voter, the lawful voter, the right to cast his vote once and have that one vote honestly counted.

Now, sir, these gentlemen say to me—two or three members on this side have said to me—in private conversation, "Why, you can not count these ballots for the blind and the illiterate, because your law says that they shall not be counted unless they make an oath that they are blind and illiterate." I said to each of those gentlemen, "Oh, no; our law does no such thing." Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM]—I have him in mind—asked a question of my colleague [Mr. COOKE of Illinois] yesterday: "Does not your Illinois law say that a man whose vote is received after it is prepared by the judges, a man who is blind or illiterate, and his ballot is prepared by them, has to make oath to illiteracy and blindness or that vote shall not be counted?" I interposed and said, "No; our statute does not."

Now, I want to show all gentlemen who will give attention to it that our statute does not, and that our statute differs materially from the Kentucky statute, respecting which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] read the decision. Now, mark you, the evidence in this case, unlike the Michigan case, unlike the Kentucky case, unlike any case these gentlemen have cited—the evidence in this case shows that all of these assisted voters were lawfully entitled to vote, either that they were blind, that they could not read or write, or that they were otherwise disabled.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I would rather not, for I am taking too much time.

Mr. TERRY. There is no evidence that 21 out of 44 assisted voters were entitled to assistance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not. The gentleman is running a side show of his own over there. [Laughter.]

Mr. TERRY. It is not a side show at all; but the gentleman from Illinois was misstating the evidence.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Well, at all events it is not under the main canvas. [Laughter.]

Mr. TERRY. Of course the main canvas is where the gentleman from Illinois pitches his tent. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield long enough to see if we can not fix a time for taking the vote?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I shall get through in a few minutes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is the law of Illinois which this minority say compels the voter who is unable to prepare his ballot to make the oath before he has the right to vote. Let me say before I read it that the legislature of Illinois could not prevent a man from voting by any law it might make if he was, under the constitution of the State, a voter. The State constitution secures to him the right to vote. The legislature may prescribe the machinery by which the vote shall be taken, but the right to vote is inherent in the voter himself by the constitution. In the election machinery provided by the State the legislature makes provision for the blind and the illiterate or otherwise disabled voters. It provides a mode
